Mr. TOWNSHEND moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SPRIGGS, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. COX, of New York, for one week.

To Mr. HARDEMAN, on account of indisposition, from night sessions of the House.

ALLEGED FRAUDS IN OFFICIAL ENVELOPES.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask consent to submit a resolution of inquiry for reference.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas sundry newspapers in the country published notices during the summer of 1884 concerning alleged great frauds in the supply of official envelopes to the Post-Office Department, whereby many thousands of dollars were lost to the Government:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be, and is hereby, requested to communicate to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads all the facts, with papers or copies thereof, connected with the annulment in August, 1884, of the contract with P. P. Kellogg & Co., of Springfield, Mass., for the supply of official envelopes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885; also how the cost of envelopes under the said contract compared with the cost of the same in the contract subsequently made; also whether envelopes inferior to contract requirements were furnished under any other contract than the said one of P. P. Kellogg & Co.; also whether any officer or employé of the Government was at fault in connection with the supply of any such inferior envelopes; and also what action has been taken by the Postmaster-General to protect the interests of the Government in connection with the supply of such inferior envelopes.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. SNYDER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same, namely:

A bill (S. 150) granting a pension to Sarah Denny Ripley;

A bill (S. 1546) granting a pension to Orin R. McDaniel;

A bill (S. 2034) to remove the political disabilities of Albert Iverson;

A bill (S. 2139) to remove the political disabilities of E. P. Alexander, of Georgia;

A bill (S. 2158) granting an increase of pension to Jesse S. Harrold;

A bill (S. 2398) granting a pension to Cyrus Reeser;

A bill (S. 2231) granting a pension to Mrs. Kate A. Drummond; and

A bill (S. 1416) granting a pension to Mrs. Charlotte Hackett.

CHAUNCEY G. DARRAH.

Mr. MORRILL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8187) granting a pension to Chauncey G. Darrah; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

MARTIN COUGHLIN.

Mr. STEELE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8188) for the relief of Martin Coughlin, Company A, Thirty-fifth Indiana Regiment; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH MAIL STREET, NEW YORK.

Mr. HISCOCK (by request), by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 328) granting the right of way through Mail street, in the city of New York, to the Bleecker Street and Fulton Ferry Railroad Company; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Some time subsequently,

The SPEAKER pro tempore said: The Chair asks the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] with regard to the reference which was made of a bill introduced by him a few moments ago. It seems the bill should be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. HISCOCK. I stated that I introduced the bill by request. As it involves land near a post-office, I thought it had better go to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has no preference.

Mr. HISCOCK. I would prefer to have the bill go the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the reference already made will stand.

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLIS. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

In this connection I wish to state that I have consulted with members of the Appropriations Committee on both sides of the House, and acting upon their suggestion I make this motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House, my object being to call up the river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Is it understood that the Committee on Appropriations are not ready with any general appropriation bill?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Pending the motion of my colleague from Kentucky, I move that when the House resolves itself into Committee of the Whole and resumes consideration of the river and harbor bill, it shall be in order to have all the amendments read which may be offered; and that each person offering an amendment shall be allowed five minutes—or three minutes I will say—to explain each one of his amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hardly thinks the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky is in order.

Mr. WILLIS. I would not object to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House has made an order as to the debate that shall be allowed in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the chairman of that committee would have the discretion as to the matter of recognition.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I ask unanimous consent. I believe it will facilitate business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIS. It is understood that it will be legitimate debate and discussion.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Does the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] assure the House that the Committee on Appropriations have no regular appropriation bills to take up? I understood the gentleman from Kentucky to intimate that such was the case. I wish to know if that is the statement he makes in presence of members of the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. WILLIS. I made my statement and stand by it. I stated that I had consulted with members of the Committee on Appropriations on both sides of the House, and acting on their suggestion I made this motion.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I think we had better go on with the regular appropriation bills reported by the Committee on Appropriations. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8130) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, Mr. HAMMOND in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill. Since the last sitting of the committee the House has directed that when amendments shall hereafter be offered each gentleman offering the same shall be entitled to three minutes to explain it. That the Chair understands to be in addition to the hour and a half already allotted for debate.

Mr. BLANCHARD. That was not my understanding. I should have objected if I had understood that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] is entitled to the floor for five minutes.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the House to one or two propositions with reference to the Mississippi River Commission that have been advanced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], who I see is in his place. That gentleman states that the commission has not departed from the original plans accepted by Congress and the country for the improvement of the river; and in addition he states that Captain Eads, foreseeing the failure of his own plan, got off of the commission. That in substance, as I understand, is what is laid down by the gentleman from New York.

Now, as stating the original plan of the Mississippi River Commission, I will ask the Clerk to read a few lines which I have marked, underlined in ink, from the first report of the Mississippi River Commission setting forth exactly what their plan was. It is on pages 16 and 17 of their first report.

The Clerk read as follows:

It has been observed in the Mississippi River, and is indeed true of all silt-bearing streams flowing through alluvial deposits, that the more nearly the high-river width, or width between the banks, approaches to uniformity the more nearly uniform will be the channel-depth, the less will be the variations of velocity, and the less the rate of caving to be expected in concave bends. * * * Uniformity of width secured by contraction will produce increased velocity, and therefore increased erosion of bed at the shoal places, accompanied by a corresponding deposit of silt at the deep places, and consequently greater uniformity of depth.

Uniform depth joined to uniform width, that is to say, uniformity of effective cross-section, implies uniform velocity, and this means that there will be no violent eddies and cross-currents, and no great and sudden fluctuations in the silt-transporting power of the current. There will therefore be less erosion from oblique currents and eddies, and no formations of shoals and bars produced by silt taken up from one part of the channel and dropped in another.

* * * * * * *

The work to be done, therefore, is to scour out and maintain a channel through the shoals and bars, * * * and to build up new banks and develop new shore lines, so as to establish as far as practicable the requisite conditions of uniform velocity for all stages of the river.

* * * * * * *

This improvement can be accomplished below Cairo by contracting the low-water channel way to an approximately uniform width of about 3,000 feet * * * by causing, through the action of appropriate works constructed at suitable localities, the deposition of sand and other earthy materials transported by the water upon the dry bars and other portions of the present bed not embraced within the limits of the proposed low-water channel. The ultimate effect sought to be produced by such deposits is a comparative uniformity in the width of the high-water channel of the river.

Experience, as well in this country as in Europe, justifies the belief that the requisite correction and equalization of the transverse profile of the stream, by developing new shore lines and building up new banks, may be made chiefly through the instrumentalities of light, flexible, and comparatively inexpensive constructions of poles and brush and materials of like character. These constructions will commonly be open or permeable to such a degree that they will sufficiently check the current to induce a deposit of silt in selected localities.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I now ask the Clerk to read what I have marked on page 2775 of the second report of the Mississippi River Commission, the parts inclosed in brackets. This is a restatement of the same propositions in the report that Mr. Eads submitted at that time.

The Clerk read as follows:

The plan of improvement recommended by the commission differs from any other previously proposed for the correction of the channel, in the fact that it looks to a rectification of the high-water channel by the ultimate narrowing of these wide places as the only method by which a deep and uniform low-water channel can be permanently secured.

The wide places in the high-water channel create alternations of current velocity and steeper slopes to overcome the excessive frictional resistance. These cause the water to be highly charged with sediment at one part of its journey to the sea and much less highly charged at others. This creates scouring and depositing in the bed and radical changes in the channel by the caving away of its banks. By reducing these wide places to a width approximately the same as that of the narrow parts of the river the friction is reduced, a lower slope and more uniform depth will be obtained, and the velocity of current will not be subject to its present changes. A uniform charge of sediment will result from uniformity of current velocity, and the caving of the banks will then be practically arrested, for the reason that when the water has the full charge of sediment due to its velocity it can carry no more, and can not, therefore, scour the channel more deeply, by which the undermining of the banks is effected.

Permanence of channel will not therefore be secured until these excessive widths are reduced. A less depth at low water than twenty feet will not insure stability of channel, for the reason that a less depth will result from only a partial reduction of the wide places. Permanence of channel will be attained only in proportion as uniformity of width of the high-water channel is attained, and when this is secured the depth at low water may be considerably more than twenty feet, but it will certainly not be less. The sooner these wide places are corrected the less will the improvement of the river cost.

There can be no doubt of the entire feasibility of so correcting the Mississippi River from Cairo to the Gulf that a channel-depth of twenty feet during the low-water seasons can be permanently secured throughout its entire course.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Now, nothing is plainer than that. The doctrine and practice is laid down that the initial step is to contract, by silt-arresting works, the excessive widths where the bars exist, and a bar and a cross-over bar exists above every caving bend, and it is also stated that when you do that then the caving of banks in the bends will be "practically arrested." That is distinctly stated, and has so been read. The bank-caving in the bends will be practically arrested, because you have removed the cause.

Mr. HORR. You mean the erosion of the banks.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I mean the caving of the banks, which you call erosion of the banks. Now, that doctrine is perfectly plain. They always held that there would be of course some revetting to do, but the revetting that would have to be done would only be an incident to the work to follow after contraction, which contraction having "practically arrested" it by removing the cause, would make the incidental revetting limited in extent, limited in difficulty, and hence entirely practicable. I wish now to call the attention of the House——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] has the floor.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Give me two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not give the gentleman more than five minutes.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will yield two minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will charge the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] with the time.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Very well.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I thank my friend. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have not had read those passages which relate to the closure of outlets, and especially to the Atchafalaya, which was recommended in the first report. In the second report the commission shrank from the full application of the doctrines laid down in the first, and Captain Eads made that part of the report of which I have had a portion read. Thereupon he told them that they would never accomplish anything in the manner in which they were proceeding, and that if they would not stick up to the doctrine laid down in the first report he would resign, and he did resign; and in the very next report the commission laid down this doctrine and departure in regard to revetment, &c. Speaking of revetting the bends, it says "it antedates logically the retrenchment, which is to deepen the water at the bars." That is a complete reversion of the original doctrine laid down in the reports from which I have had extracts read. The commission state also in that report that the principal item of expenditure will be revetment, which before was to be only an incident in the expenditures.

Now I have not time to have read here what is stated in the last report or to recite the practices that have obtained, but gentlemen can read that report for themselves, and in it they will see that a systematic course of revetment in the bends is advised to be undertaken from Cairo down, which is a complete reversion of the original plan. And much of just this work, with failure, has been done. Hence our proviso—which was not an idle thing, which was not without cause, which was not simply to elevate one man or to degrade another, which was not adopted without ample and mature conference—that Captain Eads should be put in charge of the work. That proviso has been now amended so as to simply instruct the commission that it shall return to the original plan. If, as some say, there has been no departure, then no harm is done. If they have departed, then we need to act, and I assure you there is grave need, and the greatest work in the world is being sadly imperiled. As to Captain Eads, we did not wish to pay a tribute to a particular man, but we sought to obtain the ascendency of the original policy that Congress has indorsed and that the country has confidence in, and which he represents. When the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] charges that Captain Eads left the commission like a rat leaving a sinking ship, he seems to forget that that gentleman, if he is in his reason, would not be willing to come back and assume the entire responsibility of the work if he were without confidence in the plan.

That is a plain statement, and gentlemen can revert to the text and inform themselves more fully. Nothing can drive us from a candid treatment of this question. We have no small or mean purposes to serve. No false constructions on the part of gentlemen who are the known and pronounced enemies of the river and of Western interests can keep the American people from adhering to their approved plan and purpose of improving this grand river, which carries our commerce from the British line to the Mexican Gulf, which binds together with its tributaries, that stretch on either side as far as from here to Liverpool, the heart and body of our country, which is our richest gift, and which constitutes God's best guarantee of liberty and union to the American people. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] is entitled to the floor. The Chair would suggest that ten minutes be now used on that side of the House.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, in the five minutes that I have for the discussion of this question I certainly can not go very much into detail of the facts upon which I rely to establish the proposition that Captain Eads indorsed the work of the commission up to the winter of 1883–'84. I have before me the report of the Mississippi River Commission for the year 1881, to which I find appended this language:

The report is concurred in by me, with the exception of that part of it which relates to the improvement by means of reservoirs. I have not sufficiently investigated this subject to justify an opinion upon it.

That is signed by Captain Eads.

I then take the report of the subsequent year, which, I think, is perhaps the last one in which Captain Eads united. He says:

The commission in its report, speaking of the improvement now being carried on by the War Department between the mouths of the Missouri and Ohio Rivers, a distance of about two hundred miles, says: "The success of Captain Ernst thus far justifies, in our opinion, the methods that he has employed, and we are of the opinion that it should be pushed toward completion under liberal appropriations."

As to that language used by the commission Captain Eads says:

I can not join with the commission in this indorsement and recommend action, for the reason that the plans now being executed by Captain Ernst have never been submitted to me for examination.

Now, Mr. Chairman, passing by those two reports, which are the last ones upon which I can lay my hands at this time, I come to the evidence given by Captain Eads before the special committee of the House appointed to investigate this subject in the Forty-seventh Congress. He was examined before that committee in January, 1883. The question was put to him:

Q. Passing from the consideration of the jetties to the general work of the improvement of the Mississippi River from Cairo to the head of the passes, does the committee understand that you approve of the plans and works of the Mississippi River Commission?

A. I approve of the general plan adopted by it.

That was his sworn testimony in January, 1883. Going a little further he says:

When my minority report was written, nearly a year ago, there were differences of opinion as to the importance of closing the gaps in them—

Speaking of certain gaps which were discussed—

When my minority report was written, nearly a year ago, there was some difference of opinion as to the importance of closing the gaps in them, but I believe all that I have named were convinced that the retention of the flood waters within the levees would accelerate the progress of channel development. I think my views and those of General Gillmore (the president) and Major Suter have, on the levee question, been in full accord from the first day the commission met. I have, however, never advocated raising them, but simply closing the gaps in them.

Somewhat further on in his testimony he says:

If you raise the flood-line (or slope) say five feet at Red River, you will have just that much less slope in the river above. I think there is no problem before the Mississippi River Commission, or before the country, or before Congress, connected with the Mississippi River, that is more important than the closure of Bayou Atchafalaya, for its discharge is rapidly increasing and will continue to increase, and, if it be not promptly checked, the whole Mississippi River will go out through it. I speak with all the earnestness I can command on this matter.

Nowhere does he say that the commission has dissented from him in his conclusions.

Again I read from the testimony of this distinguished engineer:

Q. Then there is no doubt that the water above the natural channel at the time of flood, without regard to levees, moves with a greater velocity than when the water is just even with the banks?

A. I think it would move with greater velocity, of course.

Q. And so would have a scouring force greater on the bottom of the river, would it not?

A. It would have a greater scouring force.

Q. And wouldn't that be sufficient, without building up levees, for the improvement of navigation?

A. It would be impossible in that condition of things to have permanence in the channel. So long as the wide places exist it would be eternally caving its banks and creating new shoals at new places. My views upon the levee question are easily stated and I think they can be readily understood. I do not pretend to say that the improvement of the river for navigation alone and independently of any protection of the banks against overflow can not be accomplished ultimately without the maintenance of the levees. I will say even more, namely, that if there were no levees to-day in existence below Cairo I would not recommend the building of them as a part of the system of improvement adopted, because to rebuild the 2,000 miles of them as they now exist to their present height would cost from sixty to seventy million dollars. But as they are already built, and three or four millions will close the gaps in them, and thus give us a much greater scouring force to deepen the channel through our works, and will maintain and deepen other parts of the river that would become troublesome to navigation if the crevasses are left open, and which are not yet under treatment, I feel fully warranted in urging with the greatest earnestness the closure of the gaps in them and their maintenance in good condition during the progress of the improvement of the channel. I urge this as a measure of economy, and a very important, one. I feel perfectly sure that the cost of the channel improvement will be three or four fold greater than the cost of this levee work, if the levees are allowed to remain in bad repair or such condition as they were in a year ago. In this condition the effect of the crevasses is to increase the shoals in the channel and make many miles of channel works necessary that would not otherwise be needed, and this in portions of the river now needing no such treatment. As the places now under treatment are deepened the flood-line will fall, and in a few years the maintenance of the levees will be unnecessary above Red River. Below there some of small height will probably be needed even after the improvement is completed, but the maintenance of them, if Atchafalaya be closed, will be very inexpensive. I have no personal interest to serve in this matter. I have no lands to protect with these levees, and have no more interest in the restoration and maintenance of them than that of any one member of this committee. I have my reputation as an engineer at stake in expressing these views, and will be glad to have it judged of in the future by the results which will follow a rejection or acceptance of them. I do not advocate the raising of the levees to a greater height than they were at the close of the war.

Again:

Q. Would it not be a better thing to put down works at one place—say, for for instance, at Plum Point reach—and perfect the works there according to the plans of the commission, and then wait through a season of flood and test the efficacy of this work?

A. If there were any doubt as to the absolute result of such works there might be some wisdom in doing that; but they are so thoroughly verified by observations and by scientific deductions from well-established laws, that they are just as certain of producing their results as it is certain that if you stand a pole out in the park and the sun shines upon it it will cast a shadow.

Q. You do not anticipate any failure in the matter?

A. Not at all. I think it would be very unwise to suspend work at any of these points where it has been commenced. It would result in great loss. It would cause a decay of plant, a disorganizing of the force employed at each, and many other expensive things.

Q. If the work on a given reach should turn out to be a failure, the plant would probably drift into decay, and there would be no need for preserving it for another day?

A. There is no probability of its turning out a failure to justify such a suspension.

Q. Your commission are not unanimous in regard to their opinion as to the absolute perfection of their theory?

A. They are, with the exception of General Comstock, and I don't know that he goes so far as to condemn the work. In the first report he dissented because he thought there were certain principles laid down in the report which he did not think had been sufficiently demonstrated to be recognized as established facts; but I think that General Comstock has not had that experience in the construction of works of this sort that some other members of the commission have had.

Q. He does not agree with some of you in regard to the efficacy and importance of the levees in connection with the low-water navigation?

A. No, sir; he does not think they are an essential factor in the improvement of the navigation.

[Here the hammer fell].

Mr. HISCOCK. I would like about two minutes more.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. I will give my colleague two minutes more.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, you may go through the reports of this Mississippi River Commission, you may carefully read the testimony taken before this special committee to which I have referred, and in every line of the report, in every line of the testimony, Captain Eads shows himself to be in full accord with the majority of the Mississippi River Commission; and the only question upon which he differs with them in the slightest degree is this question of the closure of the gaps and the extent to which the levees should be built.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The Committee of the Whole rose informally, and Mr. BAGLEY took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 3258) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Saint Croix River at the most accessible point between Stillwater and Taylor's Falls, Minn.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1365) granting an increase of pension to Eugene O'Sullivan, late a sergeant of Company K, Eighteenth Missouri Volunteer Infantry.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. HART. Mr. Chairman, the other day when this bill was under consideration in the Committee of the Whole we had gone as far in reading the paragraphs as that which relates to the proposed improvement of the Galveston Harbor. A proposition to amend had been made by the gentleman from Illinois, and an intimation had also come from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors itself that it would propose some amendments to the measure. I desire now to occupy the time that is allotted to me in speaking more particularly of that special improvement.

Two propositions are pretty clearly established in the history of this country. One of these is that Congress has the constitutional power to legislate in favor of internal improvements; and the other is that a judicious system of improvement of rivers and harbors is demanded by sound public policy.

The only question, therefore, which can arise to-day under this bill is as to the propriety or advisability of any particular measure or measures that may be presented to our attention. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors have had this whole subject under advisement for many months. They have deliberated upon it. They have presented to us a bill which, I say in all kindness, is in some respects most "fearfully and wonderfully made." It contains some measures of vast national importance and great public necessity—measures which ought to be adopted; and it contains other measures of doubtful propriety and which, as I believe, involve the wasteful and useless expenditure of millions of the public money. Belonging to this latter class is the proposed improvement at Galveston. It has been stated on this floor, and is admitted to be true, that the Government of the United States has already expended over $1,600,000 in and about that harbor; and it has actually succeeded in increasing the depth of the water in the channel three inches. That is at a cost of about $533,000 an inch, or at the rate of $6,400,000 a foot.

Every dollar of this money expended there has been thrown away. And it is now proposed that all that has been done, all the work that has been established there, shall be torn out, destroyed, and removed, and some other plan adopted. What that plan is is known only to the gentleman who is sought to be made the chief engineer of this work.

We are asked to-day, without any report from engineers, without any report from commissions or officers of the Government, without any estimate of cost, without any assurance of success, without any plans or specifications, without any facts upon which we can form an intelligent judgment, to spend $750,000 the first year and untold millions in years to come. And then, sir, when we have sunk these millions in the quicksands of Galveston Harbor, the improvement in all human probability will be as the former ones have been, a complete and absolute failure.

Is there a business man on the face of the earth who would entertain such a proposition for a single moment?

Only two things are certain. One is that an immense sum of money is to be expended and the other is that a profitable business situation is to be given to the supervising engineer. All else is speculative, vague, and uncertain.

We are required to walk entirely "by faith and not by sight"—a very good doctrine in matters of religion, where we are in the hands of the Great Master Builder, who made and fashioned the water ways of the world, but a very poor one when our reliance is to be placed upon the solitary judgment of a man who is interested in obtaining employment at the hands of Congress.

It is proposed by the bill as presented to the House that the entire Engineer Corps of the country shall be ignored, and that the Secretary of War shall employ James B. Eads to furnish plans and specifications and supervise and manage the work. He is to have autocratic and unlimited control of the project; he is to be accountable to nobody and subject to no authority. Neither is there any limitation as to time or expenditure of money. For his services he is to receive a salary of $5,000 a year and a contingent fee of $3,000 for every additional foot of channel-depth. He is not required to give his entire time to the work, for in another part of the bill the committee provide that he is to have a salary of $3,500 per year as engineer of the Mississippi River Commission. Thus his annual salary will be $8,500, with a bonus of not less than $54,000. How long this employment is to last nobody knows. In the language of the old song—

It may be for years, and it may be forever.

This, sir, is the project which we are called upon to indorse. It is nothing more or less than a bargain which is sought to be incorporated into a statute.

I have entire confidence in the integrity and sincerity of the members of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. They have done that which they believed to be for the public good. I do, however, question most seriously the soundness of their judgment and the wisdom of their action in this matter. Captain Eads is an eminent and skillful engineer; but I submit the question to the House whether it is safe to place in his hands or in the hands of any other man such unlimited control over the public purse and over the internal improvements of the country.

The project to which I have here referred is the one contained in the original bill, and we are justified in regarding it as the crystallized and deliberate judgment of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. A few days of discussion, however, has clearly demonstrated that the plan first submitted can not receive the indorsement of the House or the country. They have therefore intimated to us their intention to move an amendment in which they apparently eliminate the Eads project from the bill. I hope they will do this. But in my judgment the proposed amendment does not go far enough and is not sufficiently specific. In a later section of the bill it is provided that there shall be appointed what is denominated a "harbor board," to be composed of seven persons. Two of these are to be taken from the Engineer Corps of the Army, one from the Coast Survey, and four from civil life. In defining the duties of this board the bill declares that they shall examine and report upon what is known as the jetty system. Their labors are confined mainly to this particular plan of river and harbor improvement.

The Engineer Corps is pointedly condemned by being placed in the minority on the harbor board; and the jetty system, of which James B. Eads is the especial champion, is brought to the front. Now, the committee in the amendment which they propose declare that this harbor board, so constituted and with such special instructions, shall take charge of the Galveston enterprise. Here is abundant room to inaugurate precisely the plan contained in the original project for the improvement of this harbor. I shall therefore at the proper time offer an amendment to change the character of the harbor board and extend the scope of its investigations beyond the mere examination of the jetty system. I believe that a majority of this board should be composed of men belonging to the Engineer Corps of the Army. And I am further of opinion that in determining the matter of establishing a harbor on the Gulf within the State of Texas they should not be confined to the city of Galveston alone.

In the remarks that I have made I would not be understood as being opposed to the establishment of a first-class harbor at Galveston or some other place on the southern coast of Texas. The growing prosperity of that State, the marvelous increase of its productions, demand an outlet, and it is in the interest of trade and commerce that one should be constructed. If in consequence of quicksands and currents or other peculiarities of the coast it is found impracticable to build such a harbor at Galveston as the business of that region requires, then let one be established at some more eligible point. My objection is to the method which this bill proposes to adopt, and not to the project of a harbor. Offer us a feasible and practicable measure, one which gives assurance of success, and I am willing to vote whatever sum is needed for the completion of the work.

I am in favor of river and harbor improvements. There is no more important or necessary legislation. Neither is there any class of legislation which is more liable to abuse or corruption. Let an effort be made to reconcile the differences in regard to this measure. Let us place upon it such amendments as will make it acceptable to the House and the country. The people will sustain us in passing a wise and just measure and they will not be disposed to complain at the cost, provided they know that the money will be wisely and honestly expended in making permanent and valuable improvements.

Something has been said during the debate as to its being a sectional controversy. Certainly no man here should allow himself to be influenced in the slightest degree by any such consideration. I hope the word "sectionalism," especially in the sense in which it is so often used, may become obsolete. A few years ago sectional lines and divisions were sharply drawn and were marked by the blood of our people shed in civil war. That internecine strife is over. We are becoming united now, and the bonds of union are growing stronger. Education, commerce, and business are the great promoters of union and harmony. The glory of one State is the glory of all; the prosperity of one section is the prosperity of all. I rejoice in the growth of the "Lone Star" State and in the prosperity and wealth of her people. Texas and Maine, New York and California, Oregon and Florida, are all parts of the same Republic. The Atlantic, the Pacific, the lakes, the Gulf, and the rivers that lie within the circuit of these waters are all parts of one great system of commercial interchange and communication, and each belongs to the other. The question to be asked is, not where a proposed improvement is to be made, or in what State or on what coast; but is it needed by the business of the country; is it practicable and is the method proposed for the construction of the work founded upon sound business principles? If these three interrogatories are answered in the affirmative, then the measure should receive the sanction of Congress.

There are other propositions contained in this bill of which I would like to speak, but time will not permit. A large sum is appropriated for the Mississippi River.

The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], in his speech a few days ago, made a startling statement. I quote the following paragraph:

I look upon that river as a national question. The people of this country have got to a point where commerce demands outlets, and all these bars and all these barriers which clog up the energy and enterprise of our country have got to be removed, and to remove them we may well expect to make expenditures commensurate with the difficulties involved, as other nations have been forced to do under like circumstances. And I need only call attention to the fact that France the first year after the Franco-Prussian war appropriated $1,000,000,000 on works of this kind, $100,000,000 to be spent each year for ten years. While we can not go to that great length at once, yet we need not hope to overcome the great natural barriers at much less cost than other nations have to pay under similar circumstances. We have reached the time for a turn, and the battle is joined right here, now.

Is it true that the advocates of the Mississippi River improvement are embarking in an enterprise which they know or have reason to believe will cost the Government hundreds of millions of dollars? Is this where they intend the surplus money of the Treasury shall go? Under these circumstances it is but the dictate of common prudence to inquire carefully into the schemes which are from time to time presented. If you propose an improvement by which you seek to control the waters and currents of that mighty stream, let us have some intelligent understanding of the plan to be adopted and the amount to be expended. All projects heretofore have proved abortive. Efforts have been made to deepen the channel and protect the banks, with how little success is well known to the world.

You build a dike or drive a row of piles this year, and think you have accomplished something for the protection of adjacent lands or the navigation of the river. But a flood comes and the work of a year and the expenditure of millions is carried off in an hour; your dikes, piles, and mattresses are undermined and swept away in the eddying and surging waters. You can not change the character of the soil through which the river flows. You can not prevent the coming of the floods. They are in the hands of a mightier power than that of man. Nothing less than a solid wall of stone a thousand miles in length will govern this great water course. Are you ready for such a measure and such an expenditure as this? That something can be done by dredging and removing snags is doubtless true. Do it. That is a proper and legitimate use of the public money. As to the other plans, however, let us be slow to act, unless we are sure of more satisfactory results than have yet been attained.

I have not attempted to enter into a thorough discussion of the different measures contained in this bill for the improvement of rivers and harbors. It may be laid down as a general proposition that any water way, whether large or small, which at a reasonable cost can be improved so as to benefit the trade and commerce of the country should receive attention; and, on the other hand, all impracticable schemes, and all schemes which savor of jobbery should be condemned and repudiated.

Reference has been made during the debate to the fact that there is a large surplus of money in the Treasury, and, therefore, we can afford to make all the proposed improvements. This is a poor argument. It is probably true that the nation is to-day better able to enter upon a general system of public works than ever before. But that is no excuse for extravagance or recklessness. The Government has all the money required for necessary and legitimate undertakings, but not a dollar more. It is important that economy should be exercised in all branches of the public service.

There are legitimate demands for the money in the Treasury without wasting any portion of it in building dikes that will be swept away by the first flood, or walls or embankments that are buried out of sight within a month after they have been constructed. Pension the soldiers of the Union Army and the widows and orphans of those who are dead; build a navy which shall be sufficient to cope with the other powers of the earth; strengthen your coast defenses; enlarge your merchant marine; establish a national system of education; pay the public debt. All these are objects of supreme importance. They affect the general welfare and prosperity of the people. So long as these exist no time need be spent in trying to discover new methods of exhausting the national revenues.

Mr. WILLIS. I move by unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that all gentlemen who desire to may have leave to print in the RECORD remarks on the river and harbor bill.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. OCHILTREE. Mr. Chairman, I believe it was a writer on natural history who, jealous of the distinguished career of Buffon, the great naturalist, said, among other things, that "A crab was a red fish that ran backward," and was answered by Buffon that, with a difference of three things which he stated, the definition was correct; that in the first place a crab was not a fish, in the second place it was not red, and in the third place it did not go backward. [Laughter.] With those exceptions the description was very good. And so it is in reference to what has been stated by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HART]. He has predicated his whole argument in opposition to the Galveston appropriation upon the ground that the harbor is filled with quicksand. Now, we have no less eminent authority than the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army that rubble will stand there, and that it is not a quicksand; and therefore the strictures of the gentleman from Ohio go for nothing, as well as those of other gentlemen who have preceded him in the same line, and who, with all due deference, utterly misconceive the true situation of affairs in regard to that work.

As it has been intimated by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors he has been instructed by that committee to strike out the whole of the section and to eliminate the so-called Eads proposition for the improvement of Galveston Harbor from this bill, I do not feel called upon to defend that particular portion at this time. But, sir, it will be well remembered that during the consideration of the river and harbor bill in the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress there was recommended an appropriation of $250,000 for the improvement of Galveston Harbor under the direction of the Government engineer then in charge at that point. I at that time made a motion to strike out the item, for the reason that I believed the plans of the Engineer Department for that particular harbor, if adhered to, would result in no adequate relief, and that the system would simply resolve itself into an annual frittering away of the public money without any benefit to the public good. I insisted that the methods to be employed for the work at that harbor demanded the application of the highest engineering talent and skill, which did not seem to be possessed, or at least not employed, under the Government system of improvement there. I could not, therefore, conscientiously consent to the expenditure of another appropriation on a plan that neither the people of Galveston nor myself, speaking for them, believed was feasible.

The people of Galveston are not clamoring here, Mr. Chairman, in the interest of any job or syndicate, as has been frequently insinuated both in speech and print since this question has been agitated—all they ask is justice. The best evidence of this is the fact that upon the failure of the river and harbor bill in a former Congress, so well were they disposed to allow the Government engineer at that time in charge to proceed with the work under his plan that the city of Galveston itself advanced $100,000 for that purpose. It was only after giving every opportunity for carrying out the promise he made at that time that they were thoroughly convinced of the uttter futility of further reliance upon the Government method. It was then that we turned to the plan proposed.

I can not allow this occasion to go by without making this statement to the House explanatory of my action in regard to this appropriation.

Sir, I may be pardoned for the assertion that there has been almost a total misconception of that action, occasioned perhaps by the fact that under the iron-bound rules of this body I have been unable to explain on the floor the real conditions incident to this most important item; for, sir, the anomalous situation is presented here of a debate continuing over a period of almost an entire week, involving the dearest and most vital interests of a great commercial community, and the immediate representative thereof has been debarred the opportunity of explaining and defending these interests because of the procrustean and tyrannical rules in force here to-day. I appealed in vain to the courtesy of the distinguished chairman of the Committee of the Whole House. I importuned the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, I begged individual members of that committee to give me a portion of their time, but, as is well known, under the operation of the previous question, even those members of the committee who had been kind enough to spare me a few minutes were themselves cut off from participation in the debate; therefore I was compelled to accept the courtesy of the House and have my views incorporated in the RECORD.

Sir, we have waited for relief during ten long years in that important city which is seventh in exports and imports in the country, as I have shown in the official tables submitted in my speech to this House on Tuesday, February 3d, instant. Those gentlemen who have seen fit to sneer at the situation and capabilities of that city ought to look well into the exact figures before making assertions that can not be substantiated. The gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. SPOONER] went so far a few days ago as to make the statement, when I interrupted him, that the exports of Galveston amounted only to a little over $400,000.

Mr. SPOONER rose.

Mr. OCHILTREE. I will read exactly what is printed in the RECORD:

Mr. OCHILTREE. Will the gentleman from Rhode Island allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, sir.

Mr. OCHILTREE. Do you claim the exports from all the customs districts in Texas amount to only the sum you have named?

Mr. SPOONER. I speak now of the exports of cattle, sheep, and swine only, which represent the great industry of Texas.

Gentlemen who get up here and use not only their own time but that of three or four other members upon this floor should be a little more exact when they come to the question of facts. My friend from Rhode Island was specially incorrect, although from the great array of figures pervading his speech one would imagine he was a perfect Gradgrind. He seems to forget entirely that Texas is the largest cotton-producing State in the country, and that the exports of cotton from Galveston amounted to over $25,000,000 in the very year of which he speaks, where he says that the main exports from Galveston are cattle, sheep, and swine.

Gentlemen say if all this money (aggregating nearly one and a half million dollars) has been expended at Galveston and no appreciable improvement is apparent, why not abandon work there altogether and commence operations elsewhere? Why, Mr. Chairman, the history of almost all the great commercial cities of the world is a constant battle against nature as evidenced by ancient Venice, the proud mistress of the seas, rising like Venus from its very depths; by the mighty marts of trade, like Antwerp and Amsterdam, that sprang up from the lowlands of the Netherlands. Look at London and Glasgow and Liverpool and Havre and Cherbourg. Do you know that upon the latter work over $100,000,000 have been expended and $15,000,000 of that at one time, the sum total almost equal to the whole expenditures of this country since its foundation upon all its river and harbor works? Why, sir, poor, puny little Portugal is preparing now to expend $17,000,000 upon the harbor of Lisbon, having already issued proposals for a stone quay six miles in length from the railway station on the river Tagus to the tower of Belem. As was well said lately by that able paper, the Marine Journal of New York:

The House debate upon the river and harbor bill has elicited more practical knowledge and information upon the condition and requirements of our ports than any similar discussion for several years. If the speeches of the several Representatives during the past month could be printed in full in the press of the country, they would have a wholesome effect upon public opinion, which voice is, ignorantly, against extended river and harbor appropriations. The public know very little about the actual necessity of improving our water highways. The appropriation of ten to fifteen millions of dollars in one lump for that purpose seems to many an awful waste of money. The people, of course, confide in the daily press, which, much to its shame, often misleads in its harsh criticisms upon the motives of the committee in charge of the bill.

Americans who go abroad and observe the magnitude of the river and harbor improvements of Europe must feel mortified at the insignificance of the hydraulic engineering achievements of their own country. In almost every other respect the United States leads its sister nations in enterprise. Before there is anything done the people of the United States must wake up to the importance of its rivers and harbors and encourage Congress to appropriate means to perfect them commensurate with the pressing necessities of commerce.

And here we are found haggling over a few hundred thousand dollars, when its expenditure would open to the commerce of the world a territory larger than a half dozen European States; and we allow the valuable, the inestimable services of the only really great hydraulic engineer we have yet produced in this country to be controlled by the governments of Great Britain, Mexico, and of the Brazils, all of whom are anxious to shower wealth and decorations upon him for his wonderful achievements.

Mr. Chairman, I will not conclude without again repelling the many imputations that have assailed this measure. Sir, we come here in good faith and reiterate that the plans for improving Galveston Harbor are radically defective; that under that plan, though pursued for nearly ten years and with an expenditure of over one and a half million dollars, nothing tangible or definite has been accomplished. We show you that such was the anxiety of the people for an honest solution of the experiment as conducted by the engineer in charge that when the Government appropriations failed and the aforesaid engineer guaranteed that he would give eighteen feet of water if he had $100,000 more to expend, the public-spirited little city voted that sum and gave it to him with a "Godspeed" on his mission. That after this home expenditure and "nothing to show for it," then, and not until then, did we determine that we would turn in a different direction for relief.

Thus it was, sir, that our eyes were directed to Captain Eads. We had seen the wonderful creation of his prolific brain reared in solemn grandeur over the rapid and tawny torrent of the great Father of Waters at Saint Louis. We had seen him unloose the mighty and restless waves of that great inland sea and scour out a channel deep and wide into the ocean where only failure and disaster were predicted by the same critics who decry him to-day. We see the Great Eastern, the "monarch of the seas," ploughing her proud way to the Crescent City—yea, even through the outlet that these same envious critics said would only be a "stagnant ditch" if the plan of Eads was adopted. So all our hopes were centered upon securing his valuable services to open our harbor to the commerce of the world. After earnest solicitation on our part he made propositions that we felt assured would procure the desired result; those propositions were incorporated in a section of this bill. We hoped that it would meet with the approbation of this House.

There has been such an uncalled-for, such a bitter, such an unjust opposition developed that we have most reluctantly concluded to strike out that section and insert another that I think will meet with the wishes of all concerned. I beg to say now, once and forever, that any assertion to the effect that other than proper motives have been used in the efforts to secure this legislation are entirely without foundation—unjust and untrue. Even the ordinary methods pursued by delegations visiting the capital to urge important legislation have been wanting; the committee from Galveston, composed of leading business men of that city, have spent several weeks here, and their whole conduct has been characterized by a Spartan simplicity of manner and living.

I do not believe, sir, that they have ever expended a single dollar to even indirectly forward the important matter in which they were so deeply interested, and have invariably turned a deaf ear to the threats or appeals of the "lobby wolves" who usually fatten and thrive upon the pecuniary offal of enterprises not so good or meritorious as this.

Mr. BEACH. I addressed the House, Mr. Chairman, on the river and harbor appropriation bill at the last session of Congress so fully, and on a bill substantially similar to this, that whatever I may say now would only be a repetition of what I then said. But in view of the action taken by the State I have the honor in part to represent on this floor, I feel called upon to say just a few words in justification of the vote which I shall cast upon the passage of this bill, and particularly on the provision which looks to the appropriation of $300,000 with which to begin the construction of the Hennepin Canal.

The State of New York has, as I understand, declared by its Legislature, by an almost unanimous vote, in favor of the Hennepin Canal project, and has requested the members of Congress from that State to support the project and vote an appropriation in this pending bill. I regret, sir, exceedingly that I can not comply with that request. I have very strong convictions as to what my duties are in this matter, and without stopping to explain them, I may say that they point in a direction quite the contrary to that recommended by the Legislature of my State.

Mr. Chairman, I have never yet voted for a river and harbor appropriation bill and never shall until some different plan for the construction of these bills has been provided. This system of making one hand wash the other—the system upon which all the river and harbor bills are constructed—is, in my judgment, a most vicious one and one that I fear we shall never get rid of until we amend the Constitution in accordance with a resolution I introduced at the last session of Congress, giving the President of the United States the power to veto one or more objectionable items in an appropriation bill.

But, sir, I have risen to give the reasons why I can not support the Hennepin Canal project. In the first place there is no warrant in the Constitution for it; and in the second place if there was it would, in my judgment, be the height of folly for the General Government to undertake its construction.

The time has come, sir, when we should divest ourselves of our prejudices and those old stage-coach notions and look upon facts as they are. Any one who will give a fair and impartial investigation to this canal question must come to but one conclusion, and that is that canals are a failure. I showed that in my speech at the last session of Congress, and I gave the reasons why.

Now, what are the facts? There have been about 2,000 miles of canals built in this country in the construction of which there has been expended over $45,000,000, and they have practically been all abandoned. The New England States have abandoned all their canals. The State of New York has abandoned her lateral canals, which cost over $10,000,000. Pennsylvania has abandoned canals which cost over $12,000,000, Ohio has abandoned canals which cost over $3,000,000, and Indiana has abandoned works of this character which cost that State over $6,000,000. Among the canals that have not been abandoned none are a source of profit. They are but dead property, and the States which are interested in them are now trying to shove them off upon the General Government.

The State of Illinois is here with her little bill trying to make a present to the General Government of her Michigan and Illinois Canal, and my own State of New York, I hear, sir, is anxious to dispose of the Erie Canal in some manner. All of these point unerringly to the same conclusion, and that is that the day of canals has gone by. The battle between water ways and railroads has been going on for the last twenty-five years, and the water ways have been driven slowly but surely to the wall. In less than twenty years I venture to say there will not be a single canal in this country in operation.

Mr. BURLEIGH. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BEACH. I can not yield now, as I have but a few moments. Railroads with improved grades, cheaper construction, and greater economy in operation will drive the water ways out of existence. I might elaborate this point if I had time. I will say, however, before resuming my seat, in anticipation of a charge which is commonly brought against all of those who speak unfriendly of the canals, that I am by no means what is commonly called a "railroad man." I am opposed to the method by which railroads are constructed, and I am opposed to the methods by which they are operated. I have never given a vote on the floor of this House but what will show that where there is a conflict between the railroads and the people I have been always on the side of the people.

What I contend for, sir, is that if you stop the wrongs which spring from the construction companies, from the consolidation agreements; if you stop the watering of stock, stop the $50,000 salaries paid railroad officials, stop all the frauds and cheating which are practiced by the railroad magnates, and let a railroad be built and operated the same as would be the case if conducted by a private individual, then I claim that the railroads can and will carry cheaper than the canals. And this is what we are coming to. In confirmation of the views I entertain on this subject I might point to the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company in my own State, which is a private corporation operating a canal between the coal-fields of Pennsylvania and the Hudson River at Rondout. This canal has been operated for a number of years at a profit; but its owners are now about to lay the rails on the bed of the canal for the simple reason that they can carry coal cheaper by railroad than they can by the canal. In view expressly of these facts and others that I might cite if I had time, it would, in my opinion, be the height of folly for the Government to undertake the construction of any more canals; and for these reasons, sir, I shall vote against this proposition.

Mr. GUENTHER. Mr. Chairman, the river and harbor bill now under discussion fails to make any appropriation for the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers improvement. Inasmuch as for several years no money has been expended on the Wisconsin River anyway, and being convinced that even if an appropriation were made for the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers no part of it would be expended on the Wisconsin River, I shall not endeavor to have this clause stricken out, believing that in the end it will be for the best, as the result will be to demonstrate that the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers as a through route of transportation between the Upper Wisconsin and the great lakes is not only entirely feasible, but that the benefits which will arise by its completion to the whole Northwest will be such as to more than justify the expenditure of money it will require. I wish, however, to give notice now to this House that at the proper time I shall move to appropriate a sum of money for the improvement of the Fox River independently, without reference to a through route in connection with the Wisconsin River.

The gentleman from Texas, the father of the interstate commerce bill, said in his remarks the other day that this through route would never be completed. I admit that if Congress will not make sufficient appropriations, enough to at least give reasonable assurance that the work will be completed in our time and generation, the prophecy of my friend from Texas will prove true.

I wish to call the attention of this House to the opinion of a very respectable and well-informed body of gentlemen, of whom it can not be said that they favor this improvement not because they believe in the public importance of this work, but because they are only anxious for the expenditure of the appropriation. The improvement is in Wisconsin. The gentlemen I refer to live in Minnesota.

The opinions are embodied in the following letters:

SAINT PAUL, MINN., November 13, 1883.

DEAR SIR: In answer to your inquiry of 19th ultimo, I am directed by this chamber to reply as follows:

That, taken in connection with the improvement of the Mississippi River from Prairie du Chien to the head of navigation, which is of the first importance—a through line of water communication—of the proposed depth, four or five feet, from the Mississippi River to the lakes, via the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, would be of incalculable benefit to the Northwest—so great and general that the expenditure of $5,000,000 to secure it in practical and permanent shape would be a wise investment.

It is clearly the duty of the Government to render these great natural waterways as useful to the public as possible not only directly in the transportation of freight, but also indirectly as regulators of rates, thus protecting against private or corporate combinations and monopoly.

In answer to your direct inquiries I am instructed to reply.

1. As to the effect likely to be exerted on this proposed route by existing centers of trade and capital on the western shores of the lakes.

I may properly add that I called the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that your communication seemed to call for a somewhat more extended review of the reasons which influenced the findings and report of the committee, and hoped these would be given somewhat more fully; but it appears, from verbal reports of the committee, that they hardly felt it to be wise on their part to discuss the question at length; and I must be content on behalf of the board to respond to your letter by simply communicating to you the expression embraced in the report.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant.

CHARLES RANDOLPH,
Secretary.

Bvt. Maj. Gen. JOHN NEWTON,
President Board of Engineers, &c.

REPORT OF MERCANTILE COMMITTEE.

SAINT PAUL, MINN., November 12, 1883.

GENTLEMEN: Your committee, to whom was referred the communication of General John Newton, of the Board of Engineers, United States Army, relative to further improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, to secure water communication between the Mississippi River and the lakes, would respectfully report:

That the Northwest is pre-eminently interested in cheap transportation, and thus in the establishment of lines of water communication with Eastern ports and markets, water competition, especially if under Government control, securing at all times even and favorable rates of transportation and protecting against combination and monopoly.

The history of the Fox and Wisconsin improvement is well known to this chamber. As far back as 1773 the route westward for freight and travel was by these rivers, so nearly connected at the Portage as to be naturally preferable to any other.

From the first survey, in 1817, by Major Long, to the last, just completed, all competent engineers have agreed that the route is an excellent one and the plans of improvement entirely practicable. In 1846 the State of Wisconsin received Government grant of land in aid of this improvement, and soon after entered upon the work, surrendering it, however, to the General Government in 1871, on payment by the Government of $145,000 expended in addition to the value of the land grant. Since then the work has been conducted by the Government on the plan of improving the natural channel of the Wisconsin River by wing-dams and dikes, the Fox River by dams and locks, to secure slackwater navigation.

General G. K. Warren, about 1867, recommended that a canal be built along the Wisconsin River, from the Mississippi to the Fox River, in preference to any attempt to improve that wide and shallow stream. The final decision in this matter of canal or river must rest with very able and competent engineers who have the work in charge. From Saint Paul this route has about 250 miles of Mississippi River navigation: 112 miles on the Wisconsin, 7 miles of canal at the Portage, and 146 miles on the Fox River. Its plans contemplate 27 locks, 165 feet long, 6 feet deep, and 35 feet wide, covering a fall of some 200 feet. If the Mississippi River improvement, which is of primary importance, is carried out and 5 feet depth of water secured, a tug, properly constructed, can take at Saint Paul three barges, carrying 1,000 tons, in tow and deliver them safely on the lake at Green Bay. The canal and 54 miles of improvement on the Wisconsin were completed in 1879 (see report of Col. D. C. Houston, engineer in charge), and $2,161,000 have been expended in the work. It is now estimated that $3,000,000 more are required to complete it. Will it pay to expend this large amount upon it? Your committee firmly believe that it will, and that the benefits to the Northwest, direct and indirect, of such water way, under Government control, will be incalculable.

It should be a free highway for commerce, and thus forever a guarantee of cheap transportation, and of protection against monopoly and extortion. The great hindrance to this work for many years has been the opposition of parties interested in railroad lines, and very naturally inclined to delay and disparage so formidable a competitor. "They will not willingly permit in the Northwest the creation of a second Erie Canal."

Grain is now being carried by lake, canal, and river 1,422 miles—from Chicago, Ill., to New York—for $2.62 per ton, or less than 8 cents per bushel. By the Wisconsin and Fox River route, when completed, the rate from Upper Mississippi River points to the lakes should be less than by any existing route. It is not expected that this route would take out all the produce of the Northwest or bring in all its merchandise from the East, but it would surely modify and control rates of transportation between the Mississippi River and the lakes. Mr. Murphy, of New York, in his argument for the abolition of tolls upon the Erie Canal, said of it: "It is the great regulator of the cost of transportation, and it would be sound policy and wisdom for the State to maintain this great water way in a condition of the highest efficiency though not a ton of merchandise was carried upon it." Governor Horatio Seymour said of it: "If it did not carry a pound of freight, it would be wise to keep it ready for use to defeat unjust and hurtful charges." If, as has been asserted, "the chief element in the prosperity of any State or nation is the economy of transportation of persons and property," we can not hesitate to urge upon Government the immediate and permanent improvement of the greatest water way of this continent, the Mississippi River, especially that long-neglected portion of it from the Des Moines Rapids to the head of navigation, and, in connection with this, as part of the great plan of general improvement, the early completion of the natural and most available water way from the Mississippi River to the lakes, via the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers.

It would, however, be as great folly to complete this water way and neglect the improvement of the Upper Mississippi as to build an expensive bridge and neglect its approaches. When, however, the Mississippi River has had the attention it rightly demands, then let this most desirable and important connection between it and the lakes be promptly secured.

Your committee desire to express their thanks to General Sanborn, Governor Marshall, and Mr. Russell Blakely for valuable aid and interesting communications to the committee, from which they have drawn most freely.

These communications are submitted with this report for the use and information of the chamber.

Respectfully,

DANIEL R. NOYES,
Chairman, for the Committee.

To the BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE SAINT PAUL CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

I will also call attention to some extracts from a letter of B. J. Stevens, of Madison, on this subject:

* * * The cost of this route in comparison with other routes connecting the Mississippi with the Atlantic seacoast is given in this letter as the same appears in reports made by the Bureau of Engineers to Congress.

The estimated amount required to complete the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin route is less than one-seventh of the estimated amount required to complete the Illinois route (the Illinois Canal, Illinois River, and the Hennepin Canal included), and less than one-tenth of the estimated cost of the James River and Kanawha route. The present census shows that the center of the wheat and corn districts lies west of the Mississippi River and opposite the mouth of the Wisconsin River, making this the most direct and important of these routes.

Nothing can be said favorable to any of the proposed water routes which may not be said with equal or greater truth of this route. A northern mouth to the Mississippi is more important than a southern one, not that it will transport greater amounts of freight than will go by the southern route, but its effect, indirectly, in reducing railroad rates will be greater. The great bulk of transportation is done by the railroads on eastern and western lines, all of which come in direct competition with the northern route, and in a lesser degree and less direct way with the southern route.

I know that for many years this improvement has been the target for many cheap witticisms and flat jokes. Men, from motives which I do not care now to criticise for want of time, have modestly assumed to know more about the engineering art and science than those who have made engineering a life study, while these modest gentlemen probably never spent an hour in their lives studying that science. I base my opinion on that of distinguished engineers, that the improvement is entirely feasible and its cost justified by the advantages the whole country would derive therefrom. Now as to the Fox River, its importance to navigation and commerce, I wish to refer this House to a report by the board of engineers to the Chief of Engineers, dated September 17, 1884. I will only read what refers to the Fox River:

With reference to the navigation of the Fox and the requirements thereof, the board have to report that at present there is three feet available depth of navigation in the Upper Fox, from Portage to Princeton, four feet from Princeton to Oshkosh, four and a half feet at Menasha, and five feet thence to Green Bay. At present there is one regular boat between Portage and Berlin, three from Berlin to Oshkosh, and seven from Oshkosh to various points on the Fox and tributaries. Besides the regular boats a number of tugs and transient boats navigate the lower river and Lake Winnebago. Below Berlin the freight business is already large, and will greatly increase as soon as continuous navigation can be assured. Even in its present uncertain condition the Fox River is of great value in regulating freight rates by rail to all points reached by it, and it is the opinion of the board that the navigation is worthy of maintenance and improvement. The freights carried consist mainly of coal, salt, lumber, stone, lime, and other building material and manufactured articles. The continual failure of the old structures necessitate frequent suspensions of navigation for repairs, and the resulting uncertainty in the minds of those desiring to put boats in the Fox River trade has acted to retard the development of river traffic, which can only be remedied by a completion of the improvement in a permanent manner.

After considering the present and the probable amount of commerce of the river the following recommendations are respectfully made:

First. That from Portage to Montello a depth of four feet of water at low water be maintained, and that the old wooden locks, four in number, be thoroughly repaired and preserved for the present.

Second. That the channel between Montello and Lake Winnebago be deepened by dredging to six feet and widened to one hundred feet.

Third. That the channel of the Lower Fox be deepened by dredging and rock excavation to six feet throughout, and that the old wooden lift-locks, eight in number, be replaced as rapidly as practicable by permanent works of stone. Also that the old timber lock at Little Chute be repaired and used as a guard lock.

It is the opinion of the board that, on account of the faulty construction of the old locks, they can not be economically repaired and maintained when of considerable lift, and that the navigation of the Lower Fox is of sufficient value and importance to justify the construction of permanent works, without reference to the project for a through route of transportation from the Mississippi River to the great lakes.

A plan and sections of the proposed dam and sluiceway at Menasha, and a map of Neenah channel, showing limits of proposed dredging, are herewith respectfully submitted.

O. M. POE,
Lieutenant-Colonel of Engineers.
WILLIAM E. MERRILL,
Lieutenant-Colonel of Engineers.
J. W. BARLOW,
Lieutenant-Colonel of Engineers.
W. L. MARSHALL,
Captain of Engineers.

Lieut. Col. D. C. Houston, Corps of Engineers, in a letter dated October 16, 1883, to the board of engineers, says (page 1928):

Appended (E 1) is a list of the works on the Fox, showing their condition and the estimated cost of maintaining and operating them for the existing navigation.

I estimate the cost of putting the locks, &c., in good working order, including such dredging as is necessary, as follows:

Lower Fox	$120,000
Upper Fox	40,000
Annual cost thereafter of operating and maintenance:
Upper Fox	20,000

The navigation of the Fox is of great value to the people along the river, not only directly as affording a cheap and convenient transportation, but indirectly by reducing freights on the railroads which run parallel to the river. The rapid increase of the industries on the river will enhance the importance of this navigation. The navigation of the Fox above Berlin has not been as large as below, for the reason, principally, that the improvement of the channel has not been carried sufficiently far to give a deep navigation.

This is a matter of dredging, and as the Government owns a number of dredges the channel can soon be improved at a moderate cost. Extensive quarries of granite, an article in great demand in this section, are being opened on this section of the river, and these will depend on the river for an outlet.

The present and prospective interests are, it is believed, sufficient to warrant the maintenance of the existing works on the Fox River, including Portage Canal and such dredging in the channel as may be necessary for the boats navigating the river, independent of the question of through navigation. Moreover, these works will constitute an essential part of a through water route to the Mississippi in the future, either by improving the channel of the Wisconsin River or by a canal through its valley.

Further on, on page 1937, he gives a statement of the value of articles manufactured annually in the Lower Fox River Valley, which statement I will print with my remarks, showing a total of $20,870,553. The population of the counties bordering on Fox River, according to the census of 1880, was 231,646. These figures, I think, will be sufficient to convince this House that an appropriation should be made for the Fox River, and I trust to its sense of justice that my amendment, which I will offer at the proper time, will prevail.

As I said before, for the last three years no part of the money appropriated for the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers has been expended on the Wisconsin River, but all on the Fox. The last river and harbor bill appropriated $160,000. The bill before appropriated $200,000. Not a cent of these sums was expended on the Wisconsin River, so that they were virtually appropriations for the Fox River only.

The table referred to by Mr. GUENTHER is as follows:

Mr. CLARDY. I regret, Mr. Chairman, that I have not time to reply to some remarks submitted by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] in relation to the change of plans on the part of the Mississippi River Commission. I think it is a matter of regret that the friends of that improvement have been the first to show a disposition of unfriendliness to it. I know that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors is composed of gentlemen who recognize the commercial necessity of so improving the Mississippi River that the commerce of the greatest agricultural country in the world may be borne unvexed and almost untaxed to the sea. And I think if we would look to the expression of the opinions of gentlemen who understand that improvement, who know its history, we would content ourselves with the only plans that have ever been presented for the systematic improvement of that river.

The convention which met in the city of Washington in the month of February last year gave expression to the judgment of the 30,000,000 people in the Mississippi Valley in declaring that the work of the commission had passed beyond the region of experiment and fully justified the expenditures made and the plans adopted for the improvement of that river. And, for one, I propose to regard that utterance as binding upon me.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Does the gentleman not know the executive committee at its last meeting in this city indorsed the action of our committee in this regard?

Mr. CLARDY. I do not know it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. That is a fact.

Mr. CLARDY. I do not know what, if any, action was taken by the executive committee. I say this: If there has been any change of plan on the part of the commission that change is not made manifest by the report annually submitted to the Secretary of War by that commission. I have examined the reports made since I listened to the remarks of my friend from Arkansas, and I have become convinced that there are no essential changes made; and for one, I repeat, I propose to content myself with the plans that have met the approval of the people who are interested in the transportation of the products of the great West to the sea.

But, Mr. Chairman, I have not time to discuss that question. I want to call the attention of the committee to the appropriations proposed to be made by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors for the improvement of the river between the mouths of the Ohio and the Illinois, a distance of two hundred and twenty-nine miles. In the report submitted by the engineer in charge of this work to the Forty-sixth Congress it was stated that if there was an increase of appropriation it would require a century to complete that work and that it would cost the Government $30,000,000. The committee of that Congress were impressed with the force of the argument presented by the engineer, and reported, and Congress passed, an appropriation of $600,000, besides providing for improvements at intermediate points. That appropriation was made by three distinct Congresses. In the last Congress the appropriation was reduced.

Mr. CLARDY. I understand three minutes will be allowed in which to discuss an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. That will be after the hour and a half's debate is concluded.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. I believe I have four minutes remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. I yield one minute to my colleague, Mr. BURLEIGH, and then I will yield the three remaining minutes to my colleague, Mr. HISCOCK.

Mr. BURLEIGH. I simply wish to have read a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATE OF NEW YORK, IN THE SENATE,
Albany, January 29, 1885.

Resolved (if the assembly concur), That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be respectfully requested to urge the passage of the appropriation of $300,000 to aid in the construction of the Michigan and Mississippi (Hennepin) Canal in the river and harbor bill now before Congress.

STATE OF NEW YORK, IN SENATE,
January 29, 1885.

The foregoing resolution was duly passed.
By order of the senate.

JOHN W. VROOMAN,
Clerk.

STATE OF NEW YORK, IN ASSEMBLY,
January 29, 1885.

The foregoing resolution was duly passed.
By order of the assembly.

C. A. CHICKERING,
Clerk.

Mr. BURLEIGH. In answer to my colleague from New York [Mr. BEACH] I wish to state the people of New York will not give up the water ways, for the simple reason that they are the only system of transportation——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will yield another minute to my colleague [Mr. BURLEIGH]. How much time have I left?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] has no time remaining.

Mr. HISCOCK. I beg the Chair's pardon. Four minutes were allowed to me by my colleague [Mr. SKINNER].

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. I yielded one minute to my colleague, Mr. BURLEIGH, and three minutes to my colleague, Mr. HISCOCK.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand that was the arrangement.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will give one minute more to my colleague [Mr. BURLEIGH].

Mr. BURLEIGH. As I was remarking, the people of New York will not give up the water ways, for the simple reason that they are the only system of transportation that does not discriminate against the people of that State. The great water ways that unite the West with the Hudson River and Lake Champlain with the Hudson River transported last year 6,000,000 tons of freight.

I am in favor of the improvement of the rivers and harbors of this country. It is the only chance that the people have for protection against extortion. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] has talked about the enormity of this bill and the immense appropriation that it makes.

Sir, another distinguished gentleman from Maine, in his campaign speeches last year, stated that the wealth of this country was fifty-five billions. This bill appropriates $12,000,000 for the rivers and harbors. What does that amount to? It is no more than spending $2. Twelve millions compared to fifty-five billions is as $2 to $10,000, or the price of half a thousand of Maine shingles [laughter] for the improvement of a ten-thousand-dollar farm. I say that the people of this country are in favor of appropriations for the improvement of their rivers and harbors.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, returning for a moment to the discussion of Captain Eads's position and attitude in reference to the Mississippi River Commission, I desire to state that in reference to the levee system it is true that the commission has not progressed with the work as rapidly as Captain Eads recommended that it should. It is equally true with reference to the rectification of the mouths of the Red River and the Atchafalaya that the commission has not proceeded as Captain Eads desired; and it is equally true, and gentlemen on all sides agree, that the rectification of the mouths of those two rivers is inconsequential to the navigation of the Mississippi River.

It is also equally true that Captain Eads has stated in his testimony that the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi could be accomplished without having recourse to the levee system, but that that system would incidentally aid it; and that in his judgment the desired result could be much sooner accomplished by having recourse to that system. And I believe that if gentlemen will go through with the different reports upon this subject, those in which Captain Eads has united and those from which he has dissented, and will go through all his testimony on this subject, they will find that up to the winter of 1883 Captain Eads was in accord with the Mississippi River Commission.

Now, I do not desire to reflect, and it has not been my intention to reflect, upon the motives of Captain Eads, but I could not refrain from calling attention to the fact that so soon after he resigned from the commission gentlemen interested in the improvement of the Mississippi River joined in an outcry against the management of the commission, and with that outcry comes to us evidence that the revetment system at least has been a failure, nearly if not quite 25 per cent. of the original cost of the work having been expended in its repair.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR addressed the committee. [See Appendix.]

Mr. BLANCHARD obtained the floor and yielded to Mr. CUTCHEON.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, I believe in river and harbor improvements. I believe in their constitutionality. I believe in their sound national policy. I believe in their utility to commerce. I believe not only in the improvement of the great national water ways which have been spoken of by the gentleman who has just taken his seat, but I believe in the improvement of the smaller streams. I believe that the money which has been expended in the improvement of the smaller streams has returned a better equivalent in the advancement of the commerce of this nation than the millions which have been spent upon the great national water ways. I believe that for every dollar this nation has put into the development of the smaller rivers and harbors, especially on the great lakes and their connecting water, $10 have come back in wealth to this nation. And it will be a sorry time for this country when we throw our millions into the improvement of the great water ways like the Mississippi, and the construction of such doubtful schemes as the Galveston Harbor improvement, while we leave unimproved the smaller water ways, which are the feeders of commerce.

Mr. Chairman, you can not have a great river unless you have springs and fountains and rivulets at the head. So you can not have a great volume of commerce until you have established the springs and fountain-heads of commerce. These small rivers, these small harbors are the fountain-heads and feeders of commerce, contributing to the great volume that makes our commerce magnificent. More than that, Mr. Chairman, the improvement of these small rivers and harbors has been the instrumentality which has created the tremendous growth of our commerce in the past twenty-five years.

I claim for that political organization to which I belong the honor of originating, or at least carrying forward, this great policy; and I trust we have not to-day reached a time when gentlemen on this side of the House are going back upon that system which more than any other has developed the commerce of the United States since the Republican party came into power.

When the proper time comes I shall have something to say in regard to certain amendments which I shall offer, relating more particularly to the district I represent. But just at this moment I desired to say this much in behalf of the smaller water ways and harbors which are the fountains and springs that make up the only commerce that flows down your great water ways, whether through the Mississippi to the Gulf, or along that more magnificent water way the great chain of lakes that leads from the western end of Lake Superior to the Atlantic Ocean, and compared with which your Mississippi River is but a rivulet. [Applause.]

Mr. FORAN. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I would like to have read. Will the reading come out of my time?

The CHAIRMAN. The reading must come out of the gentleman's five minutes.

Mr. FORAN. If my amendment be read now, will it be considered as pending?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order to offer amendments now; they can merely be read by way of notice.

Mr. FORAN. I ask the Clerk to read my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add after the word "dollars," in line 314, the following:

"Provided, That said amount shall be expended in the construction of a section of breakwater, of the same size and character of the present lake arm of said Cleveland harbor of refuge, to begin at a point three hundred and fifty feet north thirty degrees east from the northeast corner of the east end of the lake-arm, and extending 4,000 feet in a direction east nine degrees north, or as near that direction as future soundings may decide: Provided further, That the $100,000 appropriated for continuing improvement of said Cleveland Harbor by act of Congress approved July 5, 1884, and entitled 'An act making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repair of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes,' is hereby made available for the construction of said section of breakwater as aforesaid."

Mr. FORAN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment, which I shall submit at the proper time, does not enlarge at all the appropriation for this harbor. It contemplates simply a change of the original plan at the suggestion of the Board of Trade of Cleveland and the merchants and citizens of that city. This change is approved by the local engineer, approved by the board of engineers constituted at Cleveland last November, approved by the Chief of Engineers, and approved by the Secretary of War. The report on this subject did not come here in time to be acted upon by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. I trust, however, that committee has no objection to this proposition; and if so, I have no desire to occupy further time. I will ask the chairman of the committee [Mr. WILLIS] whether there is any objection to this amendment being made at the proper time. I repeat, it does not enlarge the appropriation, but simply proposes a change of plan.

Mr. WILLIS. So far as I am personally concerned I see no objection to the gentleman's amendment. I can not, however, speak for the committee, because the question has not been before the committee. So far as I know the amendment is all right.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not yet pending.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I have not participated in the discussion of this bill. I have sat here very patiently for a good many days, and have heard criticisms upon the river and harbor bill made by members, as I have no doubt in the discharge of what they believed to be their duty, some just and some perhaps unjust, without any reply on my part. I would have been glad to have said something in reply, and to have had the opportunity to speak at some length upon some of the provisions of this bill; but the opportunity was not afforded me.

This bill has been characterized by some gentlemen of the committee as most outrageous in its character. That this bill and every other river and harbor bill may be subject to some criticism and objection I do not doubt. The fact is that it is extremely difficult to avoid inequalities in the preparation of river and harbor bills, let the committee, charged with their preparation, do the very best they can. But I will say to gentlemen of the committee that when you talk about this river and harbor bill being so outrageous in its character, there are but few items in it that were not in the river and harbor bill of last year. And while that is so, it will be remembered, I think, that that bill was the most generally commended of any river and harbor bill that has passed Congress since I have been a member.

I believe in river and harbor improvements. I believe in giving increased facilities to the commerce of the country. I believe there is no money which goes out of the Treasury so much in the interest of the people as that which goes out to improve the rivers and harbors of the country and to give increased facilities for the transportation of our immense commerce, and which is so rapidly increasing and growing.

But I wish to say a few words in reply to what my friend from New York [Mr. BEACH] has said. He says that canals have gone out of use; that New York has abandoned her lateral canals, and that Pennsylvania and Ohio have abandoned their canals. Pennsylvania sold one of her canals for $12,000,000 to the great railroad corporation of that State, and the railways would give more than twice $12,000,000 for the Erie Canal if they could purchase it or compel its disuse.

I hold here an official report of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, showing for every year from 1868 down to 1884 the difference in the cost of carrying a bushel of wheat from Chicago to New York city by lake and canal, by lake and rail, and by all rail.

The figures are as follows:

* Including Buffalo transfer charges and tolls.

That table, Mr. Chairman, shows how much the people of the West and the Northwest who send their wheat to New York, to Boston, and other localities, as well as the people who have purchased it, have been benefited by the Erie Canal. It is the cheap transportation by lake and canal which has enabled us to export so largely the wheat and other products of the West and Northwest, and which has helped to give us the balance of trade in our favor for a few years past.

I do not believe in canals everywhere. I believe canals may be properly abandoned where they are not in the lines of commerce and do not connect great systems of navigation. But make this canal and connect the Upper Mississippi with the lakes, and you put New York in direct connection with Saint Paul by a continuous line of water transportation, and if that is not in the interest of the people of the West and Northwest who have been demanding and who will continue to demand at the hands of Congress this improvement, I do not know what could be done in their interest.

I tell you, Mr. Chairman, it is to the interest of our people East and West to have this connection. They have demanded it, and they will continue to demand it. We pay into the Treasury from the collection district in which I live alone more in six months than would build this canal. We do not drink the whisky, but we produce the grain from which it is made, and we should have cheap transportation to enable us to reach the markets of our own country and of the world. While you appropriate millions from the Treasury to improve rivers of less importance in my judgment to commerce and to the country than is this great work, I wish you to do justice to the people of the West and Northwest and give them this improvement which they have so long demanded.

It is said, Mr. Chairman, that this canal is in Illinois; that it is a local and not a national work. A very good answer was made to this by Abraham Lincoln many years since, when a member of the Thirtieth Congress.

In a speech made in the House of Representatives on the 20th day of June, 1848, speaking in favor of internal improvements and against an internal-improvement veto just submitted by President Polk, Mr. Lincoln said:

Nothing is so local as not to be of some general benefit. Take for instance the Illinois and Michigan Canal. Considered apart from its effects it is perfectly local. Every inch of it is within the State of Illinois. That canal was first opened for business last April. In a very few days we were all gratified to learn, among other things, that sugar had been carried from New Orleans through the canal to Buffalo, in New York. This sugar took this route doubtless because it was cheaper than the old route. Supposing the benefit of the reduction of the cost of carriage to be shared between seller and buyer, the result is that the New Orleans merchant sold his sugar a little dearer and the people of Buffalo sweetened their coffee a little cheaper than before—a benefit resulting from the canal, not to Illinois, where the canal is, but to Louisiana and New York, where it is not. * * * This instance clearly shows that the benefits of an improvement are by no means confined to the particular locality of the improvement itself.

Mr. WILLIS. How much time for general debate remains?

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty minutes in opposition to the bill.

Mr. WILLIS. I move the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BLACKBURN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HAMMOND reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union having had under consideration the river and harbor appropriation bill had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted in the following cases:

To Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. HART, for the remainder of this day, on account of sickness.

MRS. F. M. NORTON.

Mr. CANNON, by uanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8189) granting a pension to Mrs. F. M. Norton; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

DANIEL J. BINGHAM.

Mr. YAPLE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8190) granting a pension to Daniel J. Bingham; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE W. BRIGGS.

Mr. YAPLE, by unanimous consent, also introduced a bill (H. R. 8191) granting a pension to George W. Briggs; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

WILKIN BRIGGS.

Mr. YAPLE, by unanimous consent, also introduced a bill (H. R. 8192) granting a pension to Wilkin Briggs; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JESSE MANUS.

Mr. NEECE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8193) for the relief of Jesse Manus; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

TELESCOPE FOR CARTHAGE COLLEGE, ILLINOIS.

Mr. NEECE, by unanimous consent, also introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 329) to donate one telescope, not in use, to Carthage College, Carthage, Ill., for scientific and educational purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, by the order of the House a recess was to be taken from the time of the close of this evening's session until 8 o'clock to-night, at which time the House shall reassemble and continue in session until 10 o'clock, for the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill, and then take a further recess until Monday morning at 10. It is said to be very inclement out of doors, and I therefore ask unanimous consent to supersede the former order, and that the House continue in session until 8 o'clock for the consideration in Committee of the Whole of the legislative appropriation bill and then take a recess from 8 o'clock until 10 o'clock on Monday.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania, and others. Why not say until 7 o'clock this evening?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think we ought to have two hours for the consideration of the bill to-night.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana. The Chair hears none.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The understanding is that before 11 o'clock Monday the House is to adjourn so as to save the Monday session?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That was the understanding.

The Chair understands that the recess is to be taken by unanimous consent at 8 o'clock this evening until 10 o'clock Monday morning, but before the hour of 11 o'clock the House is to adjourn in order that Monday's session may not be lost.

Mr. MILLS. If that requires unanimous consent I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the House has ordered that on and after Monday next 11 o'clock instead of 12 o'clock shall be the hour of daily meeting.

Mr. MILLS. I ask if that arrangement which the Chair has suggested requires unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that unanimous consent was given to the arrangement.

Mr. MILLS. It was agreed by unanimous consent to take a recess from 6 o'clock this evening until 8 o'clock to consider the legislative bill, but not to take a further recess until 10 o'clock on Monday, with the understanding that an adjournment should be had before 11.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas is correct. The gentleman from Indiana now asks unanimous consent that the House continue in session until 8 o'clock this evening, and that a recess be taken from that time until 10 o'clock on Monday, with unanimous consent that before 11 o'clock the House shall adjourn.

Mr. MILLS. I object to that unanimous agreement.

Mr. REED, of Maine. That part of the proposition was an understanding already entered into during the course of the day.

Mr. MILLS. I think not.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I assure the gentleman that that was my understanding.

Mr. MILLS. It was agreed that we should have a recess from 10 o'clock to-night to 10 o'clock Monday morning, and nothing more.

Mr. HAMMOND. The gentleman from Kentucky stated that if that was done he would move to adjourn prior to 11 o'clock.

Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman from Texas is correct. I did make a motion that the House take a recess from 10 o'clock to-night until 10 o'clock on Monday morning, with the understanding that I should move an adjournment at five minutes to 11 o'clock; but that failed and the request was withdrawn. This now comes up as a new proposition, my motion having been withdrawn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the gentleman from Indiana will please state his motion again, and the Chair will submit it to the House for consent.

Mr. HOLMAN. My motion is that by unanimous consent the order now pending shall be superseded and that the House shall continue in session until 8 o'clock, and that a recess shall be taken from 8 o'clock to-night until 10 o'clock on Monday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. PERKINS. There will be no objection with the understanding that the House at five minutes before 11 adjourn.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. MILLS. Does that require unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It does.

Mr. MILLS. Then I object.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Regular order.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the House will not adjourn. We can devote two hours now to the legislative bill.

Mr. LONG and others demanded the regular order.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I think we ought to give two hours to the appropriation bill this evening.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. WILLIS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIS. As I understand this is Friday's session, ought not a motion be adopted that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that whenever the motion to adjourn is carried, under the order of the House it will be to meet on Monday at 11 o'clock, unless some other time shall be fixed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I then ask unanimous consent that the House remain in session now until 8 o'clock.

Mr. MILLS. I have no objection to taking a recess from 8 o'clock to-night until 10 o'clock on Monday morning, but I stop my consent at that point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection has been made to that.

Mr. BAYNE. I think not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the Chair is mistaken. The Chair thought the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] objected to that unless coupled with an understanding that the House on Monday would adjourn five minutes before 11 o'clock.

Mr. PERKINS. I did.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the Chair was correct in his recollection.

Mr. HAMMOND. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMMOND. Can we not go on with the business until 8 o'clock and then settle this matter as to what shall he done on Monday?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is in the power of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is the request I made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the gentleman from Indiana moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, intimating that his intention is to proceed with the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make that motion.

Mr. KEIFER. I ask what is proposed by the gentleman from Indiana; whether he intends to go on and have the legislative bill debated to-night?

Mr. HOLMAN. I propose the committee shall dispense with the first reading of the bill and proceed to its consideration by paragraphs at once.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman does not propose then to have the Clerk read that long bill before it is considered by paragraphs?

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir.

The motion of Mr. HOLMAN was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8179) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that by unanimous consent the first reading of the bill be dispensed with, and also that general debate be considered as closed, and that the bill be now read by paragraphs for amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill and read the following paragraph under the head "House of Representatives:"

'Office of the Speaker: For private secretary to the Speaker, $1,800; clerk to the Speaker, $1,600; clerk to the Speaker's table, $1,400; in all, $4,800.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 191, strike out "$1,400" and insert "$1,800;" so that it will read "clerk to the Speaker's table, $1,800."

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I want to call attention to the duties that are imposed upon this officer of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be again read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I raise the point of order.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I wish to say, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to say about this bill that if the gentleman from Indiana is going to make a point of order and then allow debate, it wastes so much time I insist on the point of order being settled before we enter on debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas will be heard on the point of order.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I think the question is not whether I will be heard on the point of order. I had already been debating before the point of order was made. I insist I have the right to go on.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think not.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I began to debate and had finished a sentence before the gentleman from Indiana made an inquiry as to the nature of the amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rose before the gentleman proceeded to speak.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I insist on my right. I had completed a sentence, as the notes of the reporter will show.

Mr. HOLMAN. Had the amendment been read.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. It had.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rose instantly, as soon as I understood the proposition was pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas offered the amendment and proceeded, if the Chair remembers correctly, to make about this statement: "I will call attention to the duties of this officer," and was proceeding further when the gentleman from Indiana made a point of order.

Mr. BUDD. The gentleman from Indiana rose while the gentleman from Arkansas was speaking, and asked what was the amendment proposed.

Mr. RANDALL. Advantage has never been taken when a gentleman rises to make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. These things are done so quickly that the Chair is not disposed to cut off the gentleman from Indiana from making the point of order. As the gentleman from Arkansas was proceeding to make a statement he was interrupted by the gentleman from Indiana at such time as the Chair thinks requires him to hold the point of order was made in time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to say this: there has been a good deal said in regard to this matter——

Mr. RANDALL. I object to debate until the point of order is disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. Nothing is in order in this discussion except on the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. I want that when points of order are made they shall be decided before debate is entered upon.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman himself is occupying more time——

Mr. RANDALL. I am saving time by insisting at the outset of the consideration of this bill that this rule shall be observed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will not press the point of order if the gentleman from Arkansas will agree that the salary shall be $1,600.

Mr. BUDD. Make it $1,650.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I will accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment as proposed to be modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out $1,400 and insert $1,600.

Mr. BUDD. Say $1,650.

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not say that.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana, and will make it read $1,600.

Mr. KEIFER. I am satisfied with that proposition, if the other could not be accepted. But I want to suggest that the proposition be so amended as to apply to the present year, so that the present occupant of this position, the clerk now at the Speaker's table, may have the benefit of it.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I would be very glad to do so if the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will accept it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection the amendment will be made.

Mr. KEIFER. The appropriation to apply to the present fiscal year and to be immediately available.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am willing to make it one thousand six hundred, and to apply to the present occupant of the office.

Mr. KEIFER. But I want it to apply to the present year.

Mr. HOLMAN, Oh, we can not do that.

Mr. KEIFER. Oh, yes. There is no use in it if you do not.

The CHAIRMAN. That can be only by unanimous consent, and as objection is made the question is on the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS]. The Clerk will read the proposed amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 191, strike out "four" and insert "six."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KEIFER. Now I move that it be amended so as to make the appropriation applicable to the present year and to be immediately available.

Mr. HOLMAN. I can not consent to that.

Mr. KEIFER. It makes a difference of $200 to the present occupant of the office, and if it goes into effect only on the 1st of July next it will not affect him at all and the amendment will be of no value.

Mr. HOLMAN. Do I understand that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] wants to make it cover the entire fiscal year?

Mr. KEIFER. Yes; I want it to apply to this fiscal year.

A MEMBER. It is only $200.

Several MEMBERS. Let him have it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KEIFER. I move to further amend by adding "the same to take effect from the beginning of the present fiscal year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk continued the reading of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. I think that upon both sides of the House and on both sides of the Committee on Appropriations we are thoroughly agreed touching this bill down to and including line 323—at least that far.

Mr. RANDALL. Down to line 378.

Mr. CANNON. Yes. That includes the appropriations for the House of Representatives. I suggest, therefore, that by unanimous consent we consider the bill read down to that point.

Mr. HOLMAN. The bill had better be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] can be adopted only by unanimous consent.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Let us have the bill read.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Office of the Clerk: For Clerk of the House of Representatives, including compensation as disbursing officer of the contingent fund, $4,500, and for hire of horses and wagons for the use of the Clerk's office, $600; for chief clerk, journal clerk, two reading clerks, and tally clerk, at $3,000 each, and for the journal clerk (H. H. Smith) for preparing Digest of the Rules, $1,000 per annum; for printing and bill clerk, $2,500; for disbursing clerk, file clerk, and enrolling clerk, at $2,250 each; for assistant disbursing clerk, assistant enrolling clerk, resolution and petition clerk, newspaper clerk, superintendent of document-room, index clerk, and librarian, at $2,000 each; for distributing clerk and stationery clerk, $1,800 each; for document clerk, upholsterer, and locksmith, and two assistant librarians, at $1,440 each; one page, $720; one assistant journal clerk, at $6 per day during the session, $1,272; one assistant index clerk, during the session and three months after its close, at $6 per day, $1,824; one book-keeper and four clerks, $1,600 each; the person preparing the general index to the Journals of Congress, under resolution of June 18, 1878, $2,500; assistant to person preparing the general index to Journals of Congress, under resolution of May 22, 1882, $2,000; two messengers in the House library, at $1,314 each; one laborer in the bath-room, $720; four laborers, at $720 each; one telegraph operator, $900; one chief engineer, $1,700; two assistant engineers, $1,200 each; two conductors of elevator, at $1,100 each; one laborer, $820; five firemen, at $900 each; one electrician, $1,150; one laborer, $800; services in cleaning Statuary Hall and watching statuary therein, $720; in all, $91,444.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend line 211 by striking out "one thousand four hundred and forty" and inserting "one thousand eight hundred."

Mr. RANDALL. I raise the point of order upon that amendment that it changes existing law and does not retrench expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. RANDALL. No. I want it decided.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] desire to be heard on the point of order which is made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL]?

Mr. WOOD. I withdraw the amendment for the present.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Office of Doorkeeper: For Doorkeeper, $3,000; and for hire of horses, $500; assistant doorkeeper, $2,000; second assistant doorkeeper (George A. Bacon), to be employed in the document-room, $2,000; clerk for Doorkeeper, $1,200; janitor, $1,200; superintendent of the folding-room, $2,000; three clerks in the folding-room, one at $1,800 and two at $1,200 each; superintendent of the document-room, $2,000; chief assistant in the document-room, at $2,000; document file-clerk, $1,400; assistant document file-clerk, under resolution of December 19, 1881, $1,314; fourteen messengers on the soldiers' roll, under the control of the Doorkeeper, at $1,200 each, and hereafter messengers on the soldiers' roll shall not be subject to removal except for cause reported to and approved by the House; nine messengers, including messenger to the reporters' gallery, at $1,200 each; nine messengers, at $1,000 each; seven laborers, at $720 each; ten laborers, during the session, at the rate of $720 each per annum; one laborer, at $600; for the two laborers now in charge of water-closet, at $720 each; six laborers in charge of cleaning the Hall of the House, known as "cloak-room men," at $50 per month during the session; for the two "cloak-room men" now longest in the service of the House, from March 4, 1885, to June 30, 1886, at $50 per month each; and for one female attendant in ladies' retiring-room, $600; two messengers during the session, at the rate of $800 per annum each; for one employé (John T. Chancey), $1,500; one department messenger (C. W. Coombs), $2,000; for labor in folding books, speeches, and pamphlets, one foreman, $1,500; one messenger, $1,200; one folder in the sealing-room, $1,200; one page, $500; one laborer, $400; ten folders at $900 each; five folders at $840 each; three folders during the session, at the rate of $800 per annum each; and fifteen folders at $720 each; and for thirty-four pages during the session, including two riding pages, one telephone page, and one telegraph page, at $2.50 per day each; in all $127,657.45.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in line 300 the word "subject" and all thereafter in line 300 and line 301 down to the word "nine" and in lieu thereof insert the word "diminished." Also amend line 299 by inserting the words "the number of," between the word "hereafter" and the word "messengers;" so that it shall read, "the number of messengers on the soldiers' roll shall not be diminished."

Mr. KEIFER. I must make the point of order on that.

Mr. CANNON. Let us see how it reads first. There would be time enough to make the point of order after it is read.

Mr. KEIFER. But I do not want any doubt about the point of order. The object of the amendment is to change existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the text as it would stand if this amendment were adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is proposed to strike out from lines 299, 300, and 301 the words "and hereafter messengers on the soldiers' roll shall not be subject to removal except for cause reported to and approved by the House" and to make the provision read, "the number of messengers on the soldiers' roll shall not be diminished."

Mr. KEIFER. I make the point of order against the amendment that it changes existing law and does not retrench expenditures. The provision in the bill is in accordance with the existing law. It is in the bill for the present fiscal year, and I think has been the law for a number of years in succession.

Mr. HOLMAN. No; it was inserted last session for the first time, and it is in the appropriation law of the present year.

Mr. KEIFER. It is in the present law, and now it is proposed to strike this provision out for the purpose of enabling the Doorkeeper to remove messengers who are on the soldiers' roll.

Mr. HOLMAN. I thought on the hasty reading the purpose was exactly the reverse of that.

Mr. KEIFER. It would give the Doorkeeper power to remove them, and I make the point of order that it changes existing law and does not retrench expenditures.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope my friend from North Carolina [Mr. COX] will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. KEIFER. The proposition is to change the law so that the Doorkeeper may remove these men that are on the soldiers' roll, without cause or without stating any cause, and without the consent of the House, and put in whomsoever he pleases. At the same time the amendment provides that the number of messengers on the soldiers' roll shall not be diminished; so that it does not save any money. Therefore I make the point that it changes existing law and does not retrench expenditures.

Mr. HOLMAN. Very clearly it changes existing law.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. The gentleman [Mr. KEIFER] entirely misapprehends my purpose. The Democratic party has always taken care of the maimed soldiers of the country, and I hope that it always will do so. My only purpose is that if any of these men are found to be inefficient, the Doorkeeper, who is responsible to this House for the conduct of his office, might be at liberty to remove them without being trammeled as he is at present, and without the necessity of coming into the House and having a wrangle over the matter. The amendment has no other purpose. It provides that the number on the soldiers' roll shall not be diminished.

Mr. HOLMAN. The proposition clearly changes the present law. That proposition was put in the law last year for the first time, but it is now the law.

Mr. KEIFER. The amendment changes the law and does not reduce expenses.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I renew the amendment. I desire to be heard on that subject.

Mr. KEIFER. Well, I renew the point of order.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. It occurs to me, Mr. Chairman, that it is a very extraordinary state of affairs when a committee can inject into the body of an appropriation bill a provision of this kind intended to perpetuate a certain number of individuals in office without a law to that effect.

Mr. KEIFER. I make the point that it is not debatable as to the merits of the proposition. The point of order is pending, and I have said all I desire to say on that.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Well, I am going to speak on this question; that is all there is about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Well, my dear chairman [laughter], you can not reach a point of order until you first lay down the basis on which you are speaking. I propose in the first place to state that when your Committee on Appropriations for the first time last year injected a provision of this kind into your appropriation bill that does not make it a continuing enactment, and we have a perfect right to strike out of a subsequent appropriation bill an impertinent interpolation of that kind. Now, I think my friend from Ohio will see that that relates to the question.

I have no objection to having these positions continually held by soldiers; but why you should pick out a favored few and allow others of your soldiers to stalk the streets and starve is something I can not comprehend, especially in view of what I understand to be the fact, that many of the men now in these positions are enjoying handsome bounties at the hands of the Government in the form of pensions. Now there should be a certain amount of sense even in "buncombe." [Laughter.]

Mr. KEIFER. We are going to take care of fourteen of them at any rate.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. But why insist that the positions shall be held by these particular men and pass by others equally deserving? No man will go further than I will in the direction of caring for the soldiers of the Union; but why should you continue this provision and compel in every instance the reporting of each change to the House, to have a wrangle over it here, giving you gentlemen a text on which to parade again and again your stereotyped speeches which have been doing service for so long—those "one-armed" and "one-legged" speeches that have done duty until they have grown gray-headed. [Laughter.] There is no sense in that. This provision had no business in the last appropriation bill, and there is no reason why we should be compelled to allow it to remain in this.

Mr. GIBSON obtained the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] on the point of order.

Mr. KEIFER. On the point of order, not on the merits.

Mr. GIBSON. I do not desire to speak to the House in bad faith——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests to the gentleman from West Virginia that no remarks except upon the point of order are in order at this time. The Chair is ready to rule upon the question.

Mr. GIBSON. Well, I want to say this upon the point of order in addition to what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] has said, that a mere clause included in an appropriation bill at the last session providing that certain men should not be turned out of office is not to be construed as a continuing law. If it were so, then whenever your Appropriations Committee chooses by a provision of this kind to undertake to keep a man in office it makes a perpetuity of that office. I do not think that is the intention of this House. I undertake to say there are thousands of Democrats who lost their arms or legs in the war who were as good soldiers and as true men as any men of the other party.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. The gentleman is not speaking on the point of order.

Mr. GIBSON. Well, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I will make this suggestion to the gentleman from West Virginia, that this amendment can not pass without a quorum.

Mr. GIBSON. If the gentleman raises that point, I am done.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, some years ago when we were in Committee of the Whole and the present permanent Speaker of this House was in the chair, I myself argued that a mere provision in a current law which applied to appropriations was not such existing law as would furnish a guide in determining points of order like this. But after a very full consideration of the subject the then presiding officer held that such a law applicable only to the current year was existing law in such a sense as to furnish a guide in determining whether a particular provision was or was not a change in existing law. And ever since that time up to the present session such has been the ruling.

Mr. RANDALL. The point has been so decided this session.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order. Clause 3 of Rule XXI is so familiar to members of the House that the Chair does not deem it necessary to have it read.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I would like to have it read.

The CHAIRMAN. At the request of the gentleman from Missouri the Clerk will read the provision of the rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress. Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will also read a portion of the appropriation act of last year, which is the law to-day.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fourteen messengers on the soldiers'-roll, under the control of the Doorkeeper, and not subject to removal except for cause, reported to and approved by the House, at $1,200 each.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be observed that the language of the present law is identical with that of this bill. The Chair thinks existing law would be changed by the amendment proposed, and that there would be no retrenchment of expenditure thereby. The Chair is of opinion that the provisions of a law enacted, making appropriation and now in force, are in contemplation of the rule "existing law." The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order.

Mr. GIBSON. I move to strike out the following words:

Fourteen messengers on the soldiers' roll, under the control of the Doorkeeper, at $1,200 each, and hereafter messengers on the soldiers' roll shall not be subject to removal except for cause reported to and approved by the House.

Now, it has been pretty well understood as a part of the policy of the legislation of this country that we should create no preferred office-holding class. It has been pretty well understood that no administration either deriving its powers from its seat in the White House or from its powers in its seat in any similar capacity has the right to put into power any set of men who shall rule and regulate this country. Under this law here, and under a series of laws which have been passed before this one, a certain set of men have been put into office in this body.

By the law they are to be cut off from all the rules and regulations governing all other office-holders, and we are to be told they are to be a perpetual class of office-holders in this country forsooth because they were soldiers and got their position here by being members of a political party. There are, sir, a hundred thousand soldiers in this country equally as meritorious who are to-day denied the smallest pittance of office-holding for a solitary year while these men hold office for life.

Are we to be told there are no Democrats who were true soldiers of the Union during the rebellion? Are we to be told there were no men belonging to the incoming administration who were true to the flag of the country, and who lost arms and legs in its defense? I have no doubt the gentleman does like it as it is.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. The gentleman is not mistaken in that.

Mr. GIBSON. I would not be mistaken if the gentleman would like to fasten his friends on the incoming administration and to load it down.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. The gentleman is mistaken about that. It is the last cruelty I would inflict on any member of my party. [Laughter.]

Mr. GIBSON. The gentleman possesses some mercy, a quality I did not attribute to him. I wish to say this: that there is no reason why the incoming administration either in this House or out of it should not be allowed to appoint those office-holders who are best qualified to carry on the business of the country. Are you to suppose that the Sergeant-at-Arms would not appoint soldiers as well as those who are now here?

But why is it they should be made a perpetual office-holding class. I believe, sir, that any man from the North or any man in the Army from the North would do what is just. I remember, sir, with pleasure, I repeat it daily, I have taught my children to learn it, that from the soldiers of the North who carried their flag and their bayonet the people of this country, it matters not in what section they may be, have nothing to fear. They were just and brave in war and they were generous when it was over. I am now protesting only against politicians handicapping these soldiers by their action.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much the course that this discussion has taken. My friend should remember that if there is anything wrong about this soldiers' roll, from its beginning to the present time, the Democratic side of the House is responsible for it. It is our measure from the beginning.

In 1867, in pursuance of a resolution offered from this side of the House, introduced by myself, that roll was organized, but its members were only employed during the session. When the Democratic party came into power in this House, in the Forty-fourth Congress, and had control of this appropriation bill, it was made a permanent roll by a provision on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation, and permanent salaries at the rate of $1,200 per year were affixed. I then had charge of that bill. During the last session of Congress, out of abundant prudence, the language of this section was placed upon it, providing against removal except for cause reported to and approved by the House. So, sir, the whole legislation creating and giving permanency to this roll rests upon the Democratic side of this House.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I wish to ask the gentleman whether the preceding Doorkeeper, a Republican official, did not remove some of these soldiers.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not able to state; but for the express purpose of preventing that from being done by any party in the future this language was incorporated in the bill of last session and in the pending bill.

Mr. GIBSON. Let me ask the gentleman from Indiana if the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate did not remove every solitary man in the employment of that body under his control who was a Democrat?

Mr. HOLMAN. That may be true, and if so it makes me the more anxious that this provision should stand as it is in the bill. There may be and undoubtedly are great numbers of Union soldiers all over the country who suffered as much in the cause of their country as the fourteen men on this soldiers' roll. But these men on this roll have suffered as greatly at least as their comrades; each of them has lost at least an arm or a leg in the service of their country. They are maimed and disabled soldiers; disabled beyond recovery. They have been placed on this roll and have performed faithful service. While there undoubtedly are many others equally meritorious, yet all can not be thus provided for, and the merit of these and their services and sacrifices in the cause of their country no man can call in question. It is a roll of honor.

I will not consent by any vote of mine that a measure that recognizes the just claims of these disabled soldiers on the gratitude of their country—a measure for which this side of the House has been responsible for all these years—shall be stricken down, or even modified, in the House of its friends. No man on that roll, I do not care what his politics may be, whether Democratic or Republican, shall be removed from it with my consent so long as he shall faithfully discharge the duties to which he has been assigned. This soldiers' roll is our measure, and for one I will stand by it against all comers.

Mr. HILL. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. I understood the gentleman from Indiana, in response to the question of the gentleman from West Virginia when he asked if the Republican Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate did not discharge the Democratic employés and put Republicans in their places, to answer yes?

Mr. HOLMAN. I said "Yes; it might be true."

Mr. GIBSON. It is true.

Mr. HILL. And if it was true is that the reason why we should keep Republicans upon the roll of the House employés? I want the gentleman to say whether he thinks because a Republican office-holder has seen fit to discharge Democrats that a Democratic office-holder shall on that account retain Republicans. Is that what the gentleman means by his answer to the gentleman from West Virginia?

Mr. GIBSON. That is the logic of it.

Mr. HOLMAN. If I understand the gentleman from Ohio he complains that because some public officer has been unmindful of fair dealing, intolerant and proscriptive, therefore an officer of this House should be indifferent to the just claims of maimed soldiers who are now in the employment of the House. I have only this to say, that the proscriptive intolerance of no officer of the Government could justify this House in permitting any inconsiderate action to work to the prejudice of these disabled soldiers now in its employment so long as their duties are faithfully performed. This House will fulfill its whole duty to these crippled veterans uninfluenced by partisan considerations.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I only desire to submit a word or two. My recollection is, on a slight examination of this subject some years ago touching this soldiers' roll, that the gentleman from Indiana is correct in his statement, and that as early as 1867 this roll, or what is known as the "soldiers' roll," was constituted. Upon the roll were placed Union soldiers in the main armless, or at least having lost one or both arms, or one or both legs, and of both parties, and they so remained of both parties until the time that the Democratic party came into power in this House in 1874. Shortly after that time, either in that or the next Congress, under a Democratic House, there were some of these men removed from the soldiers' roll—I mean of the men who had lost an arm or a leg. When the Republican party came into power in the last Congress these men were restored to the roll, and the roll as now constituted, as I am informed and I think I am reliably informed, includes of the fourteen men belonging to both political parties, conscientious, prompt, and efficient officers. So you may say that this roll, with the slight exception I speak of under the Democratic rule, has remained substantially as it was constituted in 1867.

Now, then, it is true that this provision was put into the bill upon the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], I grant you to the effect that these men should not be removed except for cause, reported to this House and approved by the House. That was the proposition the gentleman from North Carolina moved to strike out, but withdrew the amendment, and failing in that, a point of order being sustained, the gentleman from West Virginia now proposes to abolish the soldiers' roll altogether.

Mr. GIBSON. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. CANNON. Let me get through with this sentence and then I will. Now, I can well understand why it was that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] felt it was necessary with his feeling about it to put this clause in the law for the current year that these men should not be removed except for cause reported to the House. He no doubt had a lively recollection of what had occurred heretofore in a Democratic Congress. I was perfectly willing this should go in, and now being in and being necessary I desire it may stay and I propose to vote that it shall stay.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will my friend allow me?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. Did I not while this House was a Republican body seek to incorporate this same provision on this bill?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir; the gentleman did. And I remember at that time I objected, saying the Republican party did not need such a provision, because it had always protected these men on the roll. But now, I grant you, the provision is needed; and being needed, I propose for one to vote for it.

Mr. HILL. I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois one question.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. I ask him if the Democratic Doorkeeper discharged Republican soldiers whether he did not appoint in their place Democrats who had served equally well in the Army?

Mr. CANNON. I am not going into the discussion of that question——

Mr. HILL. But I want to go into it. I want to know if any man was discharged by the Democratic Doorkeeper who was a Republican soldier unless a Democratic soldier was appointed in his place.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I will answer the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. Let me answer the question, as the gentleman from Ohio has put it in my time. Let me answer the gentleman by saying that two Doorkeepers of a Democratic House so conducted themselves touching those and other matters that their party, being in a strong majority, could not uphold and support them, and they were turned out.

Mr. HILL. Not for that, however. The gentleman will be candid enough to say it was not for that reason at all. And I will remind the gentleman Babcock was put out, too, and Belknap.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I came here to-night hoping we might proceed with the reading of this appropriation bill. Now, the gentlemen who offer this amendment are conscious of the fact that it can not possibly be adopted to-night. We might just as well stop here and settle that question once for all.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let us vote.

Mr. GIBSON. I desire to say to the House that, having examined the provisions of the bill, I propose a modification of the amendment, so as to commence at the word "shall," in line 300, the portion which I propose to strike out. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not know how other gentlemen may feel about this subject. I think——

Mr. KEIFER. We must have this modification reported, so that we can understand exactly what the point is.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

Mr. KEIFER. Let us understand what is to be stricken out.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, after the word "roll," in line 300, the following:
"Shall not be subject to removal except for cause reported to and approved by the House."

Mr. KEIFER. I make the point of order against that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] makes the point of order.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I want to ask a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order having been made, the gentleman from West Virginia will address himself to the point of order.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I call for the regular order. Let there be a decision on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion the amendment proposed by the gentleman from West Virginia would change existing law and that it does not retrench expenditure.

Mr. GIBSON. Will the Chair please to hear me on that subject?

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. That is the same amendment, practically, that was ruled out before.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. GIBSON. My purpose is to strike out not what is a law in a constitutional sense, nor what is considered a law in any legal sense. This is a mere proviso attached to a certain bill and attached to the compensation of certain officers.

Now, a law must be general. One of the first requisites of a law is that it shall be general. It is not a law in any proper sense of the word that any set of people shall remain in office, and I submit the Chair is stretching the idea of a law beyond any construction ever given to it by any commentator on the subject if he says this is a law. It is not general in its provisions; it does not apply to any other set of officers.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asks the gentleman from West Virginia if his amendment is to begin with the word "shall" after the word "roll?"

Mr. GIBSON. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. GIBSON. I want to say that is not a law, because it is not general in its application; and there can be no law that is not general in its application. The very hornbooks of the law lay that down, and every man who ever studied law, commencing with Blackstone, will know that no provision which is not general in its application can be considered a law.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GIBSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Then it would not be competent, I presume, for the Congress of the United States to pass a special act at all?

Mr. GIBSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. A special pension bill, for instance?

Mr. GIBSON. Ah, yes, it would; but you could not put that special pension bill up against general legislation and say it was "existing law."

Mr. KEIFER. It would be existing law for that case.

Mr. GIBSON. I know it would be existing law for that case, but this is for general legislation; and now we undertake to bring in a special bill for a special purpose, and upon it to defeat general legislation. I have no desire to prolong discussion upon this subject, but I submit that the amendment is not obnoxious to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule upon the point of order. The Chair had the Clerk read a few minutes ago, when the point was made on this paragraph, the present law. The language of the law is identical with the language of this paragraph of the bill under consideration. Therefore, to strike out the lines indicated by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] would be to change existing law, would not retrench expenditures, and therefore it is obnoxious to the rule.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, although this may not be regarded as a very important matter, I desire to say a single additional word. My friend from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] I hope will remember, and I have no doubt he does, that the two Congressional caucuses which organized this present Congress and the last, the first Republican and the last Democratic, both unanimously voted, or at least the Democratic caucus did, that the men on this soldier's roll should not be removed.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I remember that, and I propose to take care of them.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] desires to bring party politics into this matter, let us have a vote of the House on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

CIVIL-SERVICE COMMISSION.

For three commissioners, at $3,500 each; one chief examiner, $3,000; one secretary, $2,000; one stenographer, $1,600: one clerk of class 1, and one messenger, $840; in all, $19,140.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I would be glad if the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] would agree to pass over temporarily this portion of the bill, beginning with line 451, down to and including line 464. I am under the impression that the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. LYMAN, who is absent at this time, desires to offer some amendments, and I think we shall save time by passing these provisions over for the present.

Mr. RANDALL. Why is the gentleman from Massachusetts not here?

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] will recollect that this session extending to 8 o'clock was not expected until late this afternoon.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman is right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] asks unanimous consent to pass over the lines indicated by him, to be returned to later on. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not hear the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent to pass over the items relating to the Civil Service Commission, because I am under the impression that the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. LYMAN, desires to offer some amendments, and I think we shall save time by passing these provisions now and returning to them after we finish the bill.

Mr. KEIFER. They can be returned to at any time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. No objection being made, it is so ordered.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to discontinue the appointment and services of officers at ports of entry in all cases where for two successive years last past the revenues collected at such ports are less than the salary and expenses of the officers employed in the duties thereof: Provided, however, That the President may appoint a deputy collector at any such port in his discretion, who shall perform all the duties pertaining to such port, such deputies to receive only the fees collected thereat as compensation for their services; but if at any such port such fees collected in any one year shall exceed $1,500, such excess shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

That the customs-collection district of Duluth, Minn., shall comprise all the waters and shores of Lake Superior, and the rivers connected therewith, in the State of Minnesota, and the harbor and city of Superior, with the bays of Saint Louis and Superior, and the rivers connected therewith, within the State of Wisconsin, in which district Duluth shall be the port of entry; and there shall be a collector who shall reside at Duluth, and a deputy collector who shall reside at Superior.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] if it would not be as well to pass over this paragraph at present and return to it later? It evidently needs considerable amendment before it shall be adopted by the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have some amendments that I propose to offer to this paragraph, and I think myself that it would be as well to adopt the suggestion of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY].

Mr. DINGLEY. I will move to strike out the last word for the purpose of making a remark, unless the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will consent to pass the paragraph for the present.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection. The understanding is that the whole paragraph, beginning with line 695 down to and including line 716, is passed over.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, it will be so ordered.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bureau of Navigation: For Commissioner of Navigation, $3,600; two clerks of class 4; additional to one clerk acting as deputy commissioner, $200; one clerk of class 3; four clerks of class 2; three clerks of class 1; one clerk, $1,000; ten clerks, at $900 each; one assistant messenger; and one laborer; in all, $29,580.

Mr. DINGLEY. I move to amend by striking out $3,600 and inserting $4,000, as the salary of the Commissioner of Navigation. I make the motion for this reason, that——

Mr. RANDALL. I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. DINGLEY. It is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. In view of the gentleman's motion I reserve a point of order on the portion of the paragraph immediately following the place where this amendment comes in. It is liable to a point of order on the ground of changing existing law and increasing expenditures, and I reserve a point of order.

Mr. KEIFER. Let us understand this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] reserves a point of order on the amendment of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY].

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, the act creating this bureau was passed at the last session of Congress and provided that the salary of the Commissioner of Navigation should be $4,000. Upon the unanimous report of a committee and by a two-thirds vote of both Houses this salary was fixed; and we ought not now in an appropriation bill to make this proposed reduction.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, the office of Commissioner of Navigation was created at the last session of Congress, and, as is ordinarily the case in legislating upon a distinctive branch of the public service, the salary of this officer was made disproportionate to other salaries. The salaries of all the auditors, including the Sixth Auditor, who has charge of one of the most important of all our bureaus—and it can not be claimed that the duties of this Commissioner of Navigation are of a higher grade—the salaries of officers of this class are fixed at $3,600. It was thought proper that this salary should be made to correspond with the salaries of other officers of corresponding or higher grade.

Besides, it was deemed desirable to have a deputy commissioner, and for this purpose to make an increase of $200, which we have done. As we have thus increased this one salary, the services of the officer being considered very valuable, and that provision being subject to a point of order, I trust my friend from Maine will at once see the impropriety of giving the salary of the head of this new bureau so great a preponderance over that of offices that have existed for many years. The effect of such disparity in pay is, as my friend must see, to create discontent in the public service. Here are at least six officers of the Government—I could mention a great many more, forty of them, officers of the same class as this—whose salaries are so much less that it naturally creates dissatisfaction.

Mr. RANDALL. I withdraw my point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserve my point of order until the vote is taken on this amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I must say that the cutting down of the salary of the chief officer of this bureau to the extent of $400 and increasing by $200 that of the deputy did not very greatly distress me. It may be that the salary of the Commissioner of Navigation should be $4,000. But I doubt whether there is as much reason for giving that salary to this officer as for giving it to the Sixth Auditor; and these auditors, as the gentleman from Indiana has well said, get but $3,600 each.

Mr. DINGLEY. This subject was carefully investigated at the last session by the shipping committee who reported to the House the act by which this office was created. After considering the subject, taking in view especially the character of the duties to be performed—administrative, not clerical like those of an auditor—the committee were unanimously of opinion that this salary ought to be fixed at $4,000, and Congress by a more than two-thirds vote adopted the recommendation of that committee. In view of this action at the last session, it seems to me hardly proper that upon an appropriation bill we should now make this change in existing law by reducing the salary to $3,600.

If the House after thorough consideration of the matter should see fit to change the law on this subject that would be a different question; but I submit that the Committee on Appropriations, in view of the fact that this salary is fixed by law, had better consent that the amendment be adopted and not undertake on a bill of this nature to make a reduction. The officer entered upon his duties with the understanding that the salary should be $4,000. It was the understanding of the whole Shipping Committee that there should be appointed to and continued in this position a man worthy of this salary—an administrative officer of high character and attainments—not a person competent merely to perform clerical duties. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. DINGLEY, there were—ayes 5, noes 22.

Mr. DINGLEY. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

Mr. KEIFER and Mr. HOLMAN (to Mr. DINGLEY). Do not do that.

Mr. DINGLEY. I am perfectly willing this paragraph should be passed over and considered hereafter by the House, but I do not feel willing this salary should be reduced in this manner.

Mr. RANDALL. The Committee on Appropriations has only equalized this salary with that of other officers performing duties of corresponding grade.

Mr. DINGLEY. The Shipping Committee and the two Houses at the last session thought that this salary was not too high.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine makes the point that no quorum has voted.

Mr. CANNON. I ask by unanimous consent that this item be passed over for the present.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that ought to be done.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman had better not object, as we can not go on if objection be made when there is no quorum present in the Hall.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair appoints as tellers Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. DINGLEY.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I move that the committee rise.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 6, noes 22.

So the motion was disagreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers will take their places.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. It is perfectly apparent that there is no quorum present.

Mr. HOLMAN. When this bill is reported to the House I am perfectly willing that the gentleman from Maine shall have the floor to move to increase this salary, with the understanding in that event the others are to be put at what they are now.

Mr. DINGLEY. If I do that I wish to reserve the right of debate.

Mr. RANDALL. For how much?

Mr. DINGLEY. Ten minutes for myself.

Mr. HOLMAN. Very well; I do not object to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana will state the point of order which he reserves on the balance of the section.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make it now.

Mr. KEIFER. I am willing it should be passed over to be considered in Committee of the Whole, but I am not willing it should be passed over to be brought up after the bill has been reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union back to the House.

Mr. DINGLEY. It is perfectly satisfactory to me to have the question decided in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The CHAIRMAN. As objection is made, the tellers will take their places.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman from Ohio will not object. We propose to get through with this bill to-night.

Mr. KEIFER. You will have the yeas and nays in the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. It will not occupy much time in the House.

Mr. DINGLEY. This question will not occupy more than ten or fifteen minutes in the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. We expect to get the bill through to-night.

Mr. KEIFER. You can not when no quorum is present and objection is made.

Mr. HOLMAN. The same thing will occur on Monday.

The CHAIRMAN. There is objection to the motion of the gentleman from Maine. The tellers, Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. DINGLEY, will resume their places.

Mr. HOLMAN. I say I will have to consent to anything, as I am told I am at their mercy.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the section just read being passed over for the present, all points of order being reserved?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the Director: For Director, $4,500; examiner, $2,300; computer, $2,200; assayer, $2,200; adjuster of accounts, $2,000; two clerks of class 3; two clerks of class 2, one of whom shall be a stenographer; two clerks of class 1; one translator, $1,200; two clerks, at $1,000 each; one messenger; two copyists; assistant in laboratory, $1,000; one helper, at $500; in all, $28,940.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Is not that the Director of the Mint?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Should not that be stated. Is not that the proper designation of the officer, "Director of the Mint?"

Mr. HOLMAN. It has not been usual to insert it, but if the gentleman prefers it I do not know that I will object.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I suggest that the words "of the Mint" be inserted after the word "Director."

Mr. HOLMAN. This is the usual form, and it comes under the regular heading.

Mr. KEIFER. What heading?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. The legal designation of that officer is "Director of the Mint," and made so by the law.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend will find these abbreviations all the way through. If you put it in you should say "Director of mints."

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I am sure the title is "Director of the Mint."

Mr. RANDALL. You had better look at it and see what the title is.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves to insert the words "of the Mint" after the word "Director." [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I have no feeling about it except that the proper designation of this office should be given.

The question was again put, and decided affirmatively.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Commissioner of Internal Revenue: For Commissioner of Internal Revenue, $6,000; one deputy commissioner, $3,200; two heads of division, at $2,500 each; four heads of division, at $2,250 each; one superintendent of stamp-vault, $2,000; one stenographer, $1,800; twenty-four clerks of class 4; twenty-five clerks of class 3; thirty-four clerks of class 2; twenty-four clerks of class 1; fourteen clerks, at $1,000 each; sixty-six clerks, at $900 each, and hereafter no vacancies shall be filled in the grade of clerks at $900 each in this bureau until the number is reduced to fifty; two messengers; fourteen assistant messengers; and thirteen laborers; in all, $280,640.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I move to strike out that entire paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized to debate the proposition.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. How much time have I?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has five minutes.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. My objection in the first place, Mr. Chairman, is to the expenditure annually of $5,000,000 to keep up the office of Commissioner of Internal Revenue. But my objection applies not only to the money which is taken out of the Treasury, but to the demoralizing influence which is felt throughout the length and breadth of the land. As a means of raising revenue at the close of the war it might have been a necessity, but to-day when we see the political machinery, when we see the corrupting influence of this Bureau of Internal Revenue, when we see the arrests which are being made throughout the country, nominally for the purpose of collecting internal revenue, but really to protect a monopoly which has the control of this revenue, it becomes a serious question whether we should continue it or abolish it. I say the $5,000,000 of money to be spent annually to keep up this bureau is of the smallest consideration compared with the evil consequences which follow.

When we think of the number of men being arrested in at least a dozen States of this Union for the most trivial offenses, offenses which are technically violations of the internal-revenue laws, and see these poor people dragged one hundred miles from their homes in consequence, and fined and punished also by imprisonment, the question naturally arises in the minds of the American people what is it all for?

But we have seen within the last few weeks a Secretary of the Treasury put into the Treasury through influences, and that Secretary of the Treasury daring to make a regulation, in violation of the law, in violation of the act of Congress, and in the face of a positive refusal of the Forty-seventh Congress at both sessions, as well as a refusal of this Congress in its first session, to extend the bonded period for millions of gallons which under this oppression is crushing out of existence the small manufacturers of whisky. We have seen this dragging of poor people hundreds of miles into the Federal courts, pretending that they must be protected because, forsooth, they were paying revenue. We have seen them come into Congress in the first instance asking sixty days' extension of time, electing members of Congress and members of the United States Senate friendly to their extension, and then come into Congress again and asking one year's extension of time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. KEIFER rose.

Mr. NELSON. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. KEIFER. I wish to suggest to the gentleman in charge of the bill that it is now time that the committee should rise and an adjournment be had, in accordance with the agreement.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that by unanimous consent we will be permitted to continue for an hour longer.

Mr. KEIFER. I can not consent to that, because many members have gone away, in view of the agreement already made, who desire to submit propositions to certain parts of the bill. It was understood by unanimous consent that we should adjourn at 8 o'clock, and it would not be fair to those persons who agreed to that to extend this time in their absence.

Mr. HOLMAN. An hour longer would finish the reading of this bill.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I object. It is unfair to the persons here, as well as to those who are not here.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the committee will remain an hour longer I will consent that after the bill is completed those gentlemen who desire to offer amendments to preceding portions of the bill may have the privilege of going back for that purpose if they desire.

Mr. KEIFER. I think that could not be done under the agreement.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. What is the proposition?

Mr. HOLMAN. That those gentlemen who desire hereafter to offer amendments may have the opportunity of doing so by going back in the bill after it is completed.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I do not think we ought to consent to that.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, say one-half hour longer. That will enable us to dispose of the greater part of the bill.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I shall object to any extension of time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I want to say that gentlemen seem hardly to appreciate the importance of the prompt consideration of this bill. There are naturally some changes in the bill, and it is important that it should soon be sent to the Senate. It is a bill, notwithstanding the speed with which we are getting through with it, which contains many changes which must be considered. The Senate will necessarily occupy considerable time in its consideration and incorporate many additional amendments. The enrollment of the bill will take a long time. The committee of conference will have so many matters to consider that it ought certainly to get to the Senate at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I think, in view of the fact that the gentleman from Indiana has awakened to the urgency of the occasion, we ought not to go to sleep upon it.

Mr. HOLMAN. The bill will not take very much longer to conclude the reading of it.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I think we should have some mercy upon the clerks as well as upon ourselves.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will take the place of one of the clerks and read myself if it be necessary. [Laughter.]

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I shall object to the reader.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand the clerks prefer to go on now with the reading.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I want to hear the reading of this bill myself. I have staid here all day and have not been out of the House a moment. I simply propose to object to any extension of time to-night.

Mr. HOLMAN. We are, of course, at the mercy of my friend from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. The arrangement was distinctly made that we were to adjourn at 8 o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] desires unanimous consent to print some remarks upon this bill.

There was no objection.

Mr. KEIFER. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BRECKINRIDGE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill had come to no resolution thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House now take a recess until 10 o'clock on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 8 o'clock p. m.) the House took a recess until 10 o'clock on Monday.

AFTER RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House, at 10 o'clock a. m. (Monday, February 16), reassembled.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. NICHOLLS. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration the bill (S. 1915) to remove the political disabilities of J. D. Johnson.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is not in order. The hour set apart for motions to take up for consideration bills or resolutions on any of the Calendars of the House or on the Speaker's table has not yet been reached. The gentleman can only ask unanimous consent for the reference of a bill or resolution to a committee or to dispose of Senate amendments to House bills. Does the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] claim the floor?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Would it be in order now to ask for the reading of the rule?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will direct the Clerk to read that portion of the special rule which refers to requests for unanimous consent.

Mr. HOLMAN addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and directs the Clerk to read the last clause of the special rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That while this order remains in force the Speaker shall not entertain any requests for unanimous consent to consider any bill or resolution at any other time than herein provided; but he may entertain such requests to refer bills or resolutions to committees or to dispose of Senate amendments to bills which have passed the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is recognized.

Mr. HOLMAN. I had supposed the Committee on Rivers and Harbors were to proceed with the consideration of their bill this morning; but if that is not the purpose I will move that the House go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills, my object being to resume the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Before that motion is put I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. When it was unanimously agreed that the House should take a recess until 10 o'clock this morning, was it also agreed that an adjournment should be had before 11 o'clock?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is advised that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] entered an objection to the agreement that there should be an adjournment before 11 o'clock. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] whether he intends to have it understood that there shall be an adjournment before 11 o'clock?

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no purpose myself in regard to that.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I hope we may have that understanding.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to that being the understanding.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Unless such an agreement can be made now I suspect no business can be done this morning, although I should regret exceedingly to interpose any kind of obstacle to the transaction of the business of the House. Why should that agreement not be made now by unanimous consent?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think we should have a morning hour to-day.

Mr. BUCKNER. As I understand it, the question is whether or not there was an agreement on the part of the House that there should be an adjournment to-day before 11 o'clock.

Mr. HARDEMAN. My recollection is that when the recess until this morning was suggested the gentleman from New York [Mr. SLOCUM] objected, unless there should be an adjournment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read from the RECORD exactly what took place.

The Clerk read as follows:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana will please state his motion again, and the Chair will submit it to the House for consent.
Mr. HOLMAN. My motion is that by unanimous consent the order now pending shall be superseded, and that the House shall continue in session until 8 o'clock, and that a recess shall be taken from 8 o'clock to-night until 10 o'clock on Monday.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?
Mr. PERKINS. There will be no objection with the understanding that the House at five minutes before 11 adjourn.
Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to that.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?
Mr. MILLS. Does that require unanimous consent?
The SPEAKER pro tempore. It does.
Mr. MILLS. Then I object.
Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Regular order.
Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I move that the House adjourn.
Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the House will not adjourn. We can devote two hours now to the legislative bill.
Mr. LONG and others demanded the regular order.
Mr. REED, of Maine. I think we ought to give two hours to the appropriation bill this evening.
Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I ask now that it shall be unanimously agreed that the House shall adjourn before 11 o'clock. Unless that shall be agreed to I shall feel bound to call for a vote on the motion that the House shall resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to that agreement being made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] moves that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills; and pending that, he asks that it shall be agreed that at five minutes before 11 o'clock the committee shall rise and the House shall adjourn. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The motion of Mr. HOLMAN was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] will please take the chair in the absence of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN], who was presiding in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union during the consideration of the legislative bill.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. BLOUNT in the chair, and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8179) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

The Clerk commenced to read the paragraph headed "Collecting internal revenue," on line 1080.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. I desire to ask unanimous consent to go back to page 11, in order that I may offer an amendment at line 243.

Mr. MILLS. I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ERMENTROUT] to wait until we get through with the bill and then go back.

Mr. THOMPSON. It is a good time when we have reached the internal-revenue business to dispose of it. Let the Clerk read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not desire that we shall go back at this time to a former part of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it agreed that when the reading of the bill is completed the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ERMENTROUT] shall have leave to go back to offer an amendment on page 11?

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no such agreement at this time.

Mr. MILLS. Let the Clerk read on.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] objects to an agreement at this time.

Mr. HOLMAN. No, Mr. Chairman; I simply say that there is no general agreement to go back at this time, but I have no objection to going back at the proper time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Office of Publication of Records of the Rebellion: For two clerks of class 4; two clerks of class 3; one clerk of class 2; three clerks of class 1; five copyists, at $900 each; one foreman of printing, at $1,600; one pressman, $1,200; five compositors, at $1,000 each; two copy-holders at $900 each; two assistant messengers; two watchmen; and one laborer, at $600; in all, $29,380.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to amend this paragraph by inserting, in line 1692, after the word "For," the words, "one agent, $2,000;" and by striking out of line 1700 the words "twenty-nine" and inserting "thirty-one."

That will simply restore the law to its present condition.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I now ask unanimous consent that when the bill shall have been read through we may be permitted to go back for the purpose of making a few corrections.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, it will be so ordered. The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

General Land Office: For the Commissioner of the General Land Office, $4,000; one assistant commissioner, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall be authorized to sign such letters, papers, and documents and to perform such other duties as may be directed by the Commissioner, and shall act as Commissioner in the absence of that officer or in case of a vacancy in the office of Commissioner, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,250; two law clerks, at $2,000 each; recorder, $2,000; three inspectors of surveyors-general and district land-offices, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, at $2,000 each; three principal clerks, at $1,800 each; forty clerks of class 4; fifty-six clerks of class 3; sixty-seven clerks of class 2; seventy-three clerks of class 1; fifty-one clerks, at $1,000 each; and fifty-eight copyists, at $900 each; eight assistant messengers; twelve laborers; and six packers, at $720 each; in all, $490,850.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I move to strike out the last word of this paragraph, and I wish to ask the gentleman [Mr. HOLMAN] who has charge of this bill a question: Why do you make a difference of a thousand dollars between the salary of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the salary of the Commissioner of Pensions?

Mr. HOLMAN. That is simply one of the irregularities that occurred in the last session. The one salary was run up out of proportion; that is all. It was inevitable—that is to say, both Houses agreed to it.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. There was no reason why it should be done?

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir. On the contrary, there was very good reason why it should not be done; but Congress did it.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

That a committee consisting of five members-elect of the Forty-ninth Congress, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, shall, during the recess of Congress, inquire into and investigate the expenditure of appropriations for Indian schools and the education of Indians, the established system of such schools or education, and whether any changes should be made therein. Said committee shall also inquire into the expenditure of public money for the Yellowstone Park and the administration of the laws applicable to said park, whether any change should be made in said laws or the boundary of the park, and what steps, if any, can be taken to make of practical benefit and utility that portion of the public domain. That said committee have power to visit the places where appropriations mentioned herein are expended, and in doing so they are hereby authorized to use Government conveyances and means of transportation. Said committee shall have power to send for persons and papers and to appoint a clerk, and may report by bill or otherwise to the Forty-ninth Congress. The expense of said committee, and of witnesses that may be summoned before it, shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, on the draft of the chairman of said committee, in sums not exceeding $1,000 at any one time.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order upon that paragraph that it changes existing law and does not retrench expenditures.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, this is unquestionably new legislation, but under the present condition of the Indian service several million dollars are being expended annually for these Indian schools. There never has been a thorough investigation by Congress of the condition of those schools, their locations, the necessity for them, or the mode of their management, and it has been deemed exceedingly desirable to inquire carefully into that subject with a view to legislation by the next Congress. Therefore, while this provision is new legislation, and involves an expenditure of $5,000, I still think that upon reflection my friend from Alabama [Mr. HEWITT] will see the propriety of our trying to obtain some reliable data upon which to predicate legislation upon this subject at the next session.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I am perfectly willing to withdraw the point of order so far as regards visiting the Indian schools. I am willing that the paragraph shall be amended by striking out the provision with reference to the National Park.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEWITT]. The gentleman will remember that, so far as the House is concerned, we have had no inquiry into the condition of that park or the necessity for it—I do not mean the necessity for it, because the maintenance of the park is now an established policy, but I mean as to the requirements of its management. We have already, at the present session, changed the boundaries of the park, and we are appropriating this year a very considerable sum of money for its improvement. Therefore, while it might not be desirable to appoint a committee on the part of the House, or a joint committee, especially for this purpose, it seems to me that it may be well, inasmuch as the committee which visits the Indian schools can very readily perform this additional duty, to have the proposed investigation made, and I think that if the provision as to the inquiry into the state of the Indian schools is allowed to stand the other had better stand also. I trust, therefore, in view of the large expenditure that is now being made upon the park, that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEWITT] will withdraw his objection to the amendment.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and other members of the committee seem to think it important to provide for this investigation, and seem to believe that it will do good, I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Pension Office: For compensation of the Commissioner of Pensions, $5,000; first deputy commissioner, $3,600; second deputy commissioner, $3,600; chief clerk, $2,500; assistant chief clerk, $2,000; medical referee, $3,000; assistant medical referee, $2,250; two qualified surgeons, who shall be experts in their profession, at $2,000 each; eighteen medical examiners, who shall be surgeons of education, skill, and experience in their profession, at $1,800 each; twelve chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; law clerk, $2,000; forty-five principal examiners for review board, at $2,000 each; twenty-four assistant chiefs of division, at $1,800 each; seventy-five clerks of class 4; one hundred clerks of class 3; four hundred clerks of class 2; four hundred clerks of class 1; two hundred and twenty clerks, at $1,000 each; one superintendent of buildings, $1,400; two engineers, at $1,200 each; one hundred and thirty copyists; twenty messengers; twenty messenger-boys, at $400 each; twenty-five watchmen, and twenty-five laborers; five charwomen, at $400 each; in all, $1,954,650.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I move to strike out in line 2061 the word "five"——

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. The time has about expired that was to be devoted to this business this morning, and when the committee is to rise according to the agreement.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope my colleague [Mr. BROWNE] will allow this paragraph to be finished.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. If there is to be no advantage taken on the question of time I have no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no; it is understood that the committee will rise.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] withdraw his point of order?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. If it is understood unanimously that the committee will rise before 11 o'clock I have no objection to finishing this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be so ordered if there is no objection. The Chair hears no objection. The gentleman from Alabama will proceed with his amendment.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. In line 2061, I move to strike out "five" and insert "four."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment just offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEWITT].

The Clerk proceeded to read the amendment as above stated.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I now move, according to the agreement, that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. As many as are in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will say ay. [After a pause.] The ayes seem to have it.

Several MEMBERS. "A division."

The CHAIRMAN. A division is called for.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I submit that the committee must rise under the order of the House without a vote.

Mr. ELLIS. I would like to have that order read.

The CHAIRMAN. As many as are in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will rise and be counted.

Mr. HAMMOND (during the vote). I rise to a point of order. Before the present occupant of the chair came in unanimous consent was given that at five minutes before 11 o'clock the committee should rise.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. The committee should now rise, in accordance with the order of the House.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MCMILLIN). The present occupant of the chair has no knowledge of the matter referred to; but if the statement of the gentleman from Georgia be correct the point of order is well taken.

Mr. ELLIS. Let the order be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the order of the House.

Mr. KEIFER. The vote now being taken will settle the question.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HOLMAN moved to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to consider general appropriation bills, pending which,

On motion of Mr. HOLMAN, by unanimous consent it was ordered that said committee rise at five minutes to 11 o'clock, and that the House shall then adjourn.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the point of order is well taken; and the hour having arrived for the committee to rise, the House will resume its session.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. BLACKBURN] having resumed the chair, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8179) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, by order of the House as I understand, and I make the question of order——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 58 minutes a. m., Monday, February 16) the House adjourned.

DES MOINES RIVER LANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further resolutions that order is closed, and the Chair lays before the Senate the Calendar under Rule VIII, commencing with Order of Business 396, being Senate bill 1886.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1886) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands, in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] to indefinitely postpone the bill. The Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. LAPHAM. Mr. President, when I was taken off the floor by the expiration of the morning hour yesterday, I had referred to the early history of the grant of lands in Iowa and the confirmation by the resolution of 1861 and the act of 1862 of the title of the purchasers from the Des Moines River Navigation Company who had become the grantees from the State. I had also shown that the great mass of the settlers, claimed to be occupying these lands under the homestead and pre-emption laws of the Government, entered into their occupancy after the passage of both the acts of confirmation. There are a very few settlers, I am informed, who entered into the occupancy of the land after the grant of 1846 and after the lands had been certified to the State of Iowa by the officers of the Government but before the passage of the confirmatory resolution of 1861 and the act of 1862. I shall have occasion before I conclude to call the attention of the Senate to the case of one of the very earliest of these settlers and to show the condition of his title as against the grantees of the Des Moines River Navigation Company.

I was considering yesterday at the close of what I said the question of the condition of these lands in the possession of settlers in the Des Moines Valley. They are by no manner of means the thrifty and enterprising population so eloquently described by the honorable Senator from Iowa. They cultivate their farms very indifferently. The purchasers under the river grant have been paying the taxes since 1861; the settlers pay no taxes. When General Martindale, whose case I mentioned yesterday, went to one of the occupants of a portion of the land which had been conveyed to him, he entered into a contract with him for the sale of the lot at a reasonable price. The occupant then said to General Martindale: "I have no means with which to cultivate this land, and I want you to make me a loan of $150 to enable me to get a team and needed farming implements." The General very kindly and liberally made him the loan of $150 and entered into a contract with him for the purchase of the property. In less than three years that man joined the settlers' union, as it is called, the organization to which I shall refer by and by, and he has never refunded the money or paid a farthing upon his contract, and remains in possession to this day. He has repudiated his obligations. That, under the inspiration of this organization, is the character mainly of the occupants of those lands in that part of the State.

Now, Mr. President, it is as pertinent here perhaps as at any other stage of my remarks to ask a question and to answer it: Who are asking for this legislation at the hands of Congress? Who has petitioned for the passage of this bill or any similar bill? I am unable to find upon the files of the Senate any memorials in its favor; I am unable to find that any considerable number of the citizens of Iowa have ever asked for the passage of this bill. I do find, however, that one citizen of Iowa whose title has been tried in the Supreme Court, and held by that court to be invalid and ineffectual against the right of the purchaser under the Des Moines River grant, has sent his memorial here, and it is the only one of which I have heard. In that memorial addressed to this body he uses this language:

I believe you, knowing, as you do, this to be one of the most wicked, infernal steals ever accomplished by men calling themselves honorable and honest, yet in crime far in excess of the petty thief now in prison, where they lodged myself for attempting to defend my property, solemnly guaranteed to me by the rightful authority of our Government, and the greatest and most conspicuous criminal in the whole transaction is your present chairman, D. Davis, whose throne is darkness, whose crime is death, and whose home is hell; who, after committing the crime of corruption and robbery of the citizens' rights on the bench, he resigns in face of threats of impeachment, and worms himself into the Senate, where he is awarded the chair for his corruption. Can you look up at the monster of iniquity in the chair of the Senate with a clear conscience? When the head is a mass of corruption, the whole body is affected.

This is a sample of the spirit which pervades the minds of these settlers upon the Des Moines River lands, and it is the only instance I have been able to find of any request or memorial in behalf of this legislation. On the contrary, I have looked into the papers and I find that the remonstrances against this legislation are very earnest and very numerous. I desire to call the attention of the Senate briefly to the memorials which were presented in the Senate by my predecessor, Senator Conkling, and by the honorable Senator Kernan, in January, 1879, which, on the 13th of March, 1882, I asked to have taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the committee having this bill in charge. That was done.

The signers of these memorials state that they own, or represent owners to whom they have sold with warranty of title, over three-fourths of the 213,000 acres of land which the State of Iowa sold and conveyed to the Des Moines Navigation Company in 1858, and which Congress granted and confirmed to them by joint resolution of March 2, 1861; that their titles are good, and this the United States Supreme Court has repeatedly decided; that they have paid full value for said lands, and large sums for State and county taxes from 1861 to date; that the United States has no title or interest in said lands, legal or equitable, and this has been repeatedly decided by the United States Supreme Court.

They allege that the proposed legislation would unsettle titles, and not quiet them; would violate the right of private property, and make unjust discriminations against the memorialists as non-residents of Iowa, and in favor of residents of that State. They, therefore, petition that the proposed legislation be so amended, if it is to be considered at all, that their titles shall be specially and distinctly excepted from the operation of the bill.

This remonstrance is signed by a large number of people residing in the State of New York, the central portion of the State, by citizens of Minneapolis in Minnesota, by citizens of Boston, by citizens of Michigan, and it is stated that there are other owners of these lands than those who have signed this remonstrance, living in Massachusetts, in Ohio, and in Michigan. Here is a memorial or remonstrance largely signed, and, as I have said, assigning the reasons why this legislation should not be granted. I have numerous memorials which I myself have presented and which my colleague has presented to the Senate against the passage of this bill, and now I come to the consideration of a protest to the terms of which I earnestly and respectfully invite the attention of every member of this body.

The remonstrance was presented by the honorable Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] on the 15th of February, 1884. It is signed by one hundred and four settlers and owners of the Des Moines River lands in the State of Iowa, and I repeat I beg to invite the attentive consideration of the members of the Senate to the statements which they make:

The undersigned respectfully state that they are residents upon and owners of land in the State of Iowa which are their "homesteads" under the laws of Iowa, and which are either a part of the "river grant," or else are parts of an even section within its limits.

That the lands of the undersigned, which are part of the "river grant," were conveyed by the State of Iowa in 1858 to the Des Moines Navigation Company, that the grantees thereof have paid full value for the same, and the taxes thereon for many years, and their title to the same is good and has been established by repeated decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, all of which have been reaffirmed by said court in the month of November last.

We respectfully protest against the passage of any act of Congress directing that any of the undersigned, who are such grantees, shall be sued by and in the name of the United States for the purpose of clouding or destroying said title, as an act of oppression, interfering with the rights of property guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States.

We respectfully protest against the passage by the Senate of Senate bill 559, entitled "An act to quiet the title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands, in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes."

And we respectfully state that the property of the undersigned and all the property within the limits of said "river grant," both odd and even sections, has been greatly injured by the repeated agitation in Congress of the title to the land in the said "river grant;" that such agitation prevents the investment in and improvement of such lands by thrifty and industrious farmers, and that the proposed law, if passed, would act as a blight upon the whole district within five miles of the Des Moines River.

Mr. President, this is the state of the case so far as we have any expression sent here designed to influence the action of Congress, and it ought, it seems to me, to invite the careful attention of Senators to the consideration of this bill before they entertain the idea of its passage into a law.

I submit with great confidence to the Senate that Congress has no constitutional power over the lands to which this bill relates—I mean to that portion of the lands which were embraced in the grant to the Des Moines River Navigation Company. If they can be excepted from the operation of this bill, that is all I ask. The owners of these lands have done no wrong to settlers of the United States, and they ought not to be sued by the Government of the United States. If the United States has any right of action or any cause of action it can maintain it without the aid of this bill. The remedy of the Government is perfect if the Government has a claim; and if, as I say, and as the Supreme Court has repeatedly decided, the Government is divested of all its title, Congress can not confer upon the Government any right in respect to it. That doctrine has been so repeatedly decided that it would be useless to refer to the authorities sustaining it. Indeed, the honorable Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] conceded that so far as there were vested rights this bill could not be allowed to interfere with them, and when he made that concession he conceded away the entire case so far as concerns the title of those whom I represent.

If the settlers have any ground of complaint it is against the United States whose officers at one time encouraged them to go upon these lands when in fact they had become private property. If the United States will indemnify these settlers, the owners of these lands have no objection to that. I have no objection to that. I stated yesterday that Congress authorized an investigation in 1873 for the express purpose of making provision for the payment to these occupants of all the damages to which they had been subjected or to allow them substituted lands in the place of those which they were unlawfully occupying. It was contemplated at that time to ask of Congress that Congress should give relief to these individuals, and that relief would unquestionably have been obtained if the remedy had been pursued; but in an evil hour these settlers were induced to enter into a combination for the purpose of resisting the claims of the non-resident owners of these lands and to abandon all effort on their part to obtain relief at the hands of Congress. If anybody has a right to complain in respect to these lands, it is those who in good faith purchased them of the grantees of the State of Iowa, acquired the legal title, and have been disturbed and hindered in their assertion of their rights more or less from that day to the present.

Those who ask this bill in the name of the settlers know and long have known that these lands were private property. They knew when they settled upon them that they were private property and they have no right or title to them by reason of their settlement. The only object and effect of this bill is to enable them to keep unlawful possession of these lands against the rightful owners, to take the avails of the crops, and to expend those avails in payment of the agents and designing men who are instigating them to the acts of violence to which I shall presently refer.

Before doing that, however, it is proper that I should call the attention of the Senate to the bill itself and to its provisions. First, the bill provides that it is believed to be the true intent and meaning of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1871, entitled "An act confirming titles to certain lands," to ratify and confirm the adjustment and settlement of 1866 therein referred to, and the titles of the lands claimed, allowed, set apart, and received thereby and thereunder as a full, complete, and final adjustment and satisfaction of all right and claim of the State of Iowa and its grantees under the joint resolution of Congress passed March 2, 1861, entitled "A joint resolution to quiet title to lands in the State of Iowa," and the act of Congress approved July 12, 1862, entitled "An act confirming a land claim of the State of Iowa, and for other purposes." I believe that myself, but then the section provides that all lands—

For which indemnity lands were selected and received by the State of Iowa, as provided in the act of 1862, are, and are hereby declared to be, public lands of the United States.

Why are they public lands? The purchasers who own them were not parties to the arrangement and are in no manner bound by it.

We have nothing to do with that question. A portion of the persons who were thus provided for accepted the indemnity, but those who are now there and struggling against the true owners refused to accept the substituted lands which were at one time provided, and all these settlers could have availed themselves of that remedy if they had been properly advised. Now comes a qualification to this recital to which there can be no objection, except it is limited to cases where there is no contest and settles nothing. It is the first proviso, as follows:

Provided, That the title of all bona fide settlers under color of title from the State of Iowa and its grantees, or the United States and its grantees, which do not come in conflict with pre-emption or homestead claimants, are hereby ratified, confirmed, and made valid.

That decides nothing whatever. That leaves every controversy between these settlers and the owners of the fee of the land open and undisturbed. But then comes a further proviso:

Provided further, That the claims of all persons who, with intent, in good faith, to obtain title thereto under the pre-emption or homestead laws of the United States, entered or remained upon any tract of said land prior to January, 1880, not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres, are hereby confirmed and made valid in them, their heirs or their proper assigns; and upon due proof thereof, and payment of the usual price or fees, where the same has not been paid, shall be carried to patent.

In other words, this bill, if passed, provides that where a purchaser from the State of Iowa is the owner of a quarter-section of land, and a settler is in possession of it under claim that he entered under the homestead or pre-emption laws prior to January 1, 1880, that title is to be confirmed to the settler and he is to be entitled to a patent, directly in the face of every decision which the courts of Iowa and the Supreme Court of the United States have made upon this subject. Then this bill provides that the Attorney-General within sixty days after the passage of this act shall commence a suit or suits either in law or equity for the purpose of asserting the title to these lands.

Now let us consider what this remedy would be if this bill should pass. There will have to be just as many actions brought as there are several occupants. No two settlers can be united in an action, for the declaration would be demurrable. There will have to be just as many actions, I repeat, as would have to be brought now to settle these questions. Every man in possession of these lands now may bring an action to determine the question between him and the owners of the fee. The Attorney-General could do nothing more if this bill were passed. What is it then? It is a bill to authorize the United States at the expense of the public Treasury to go into the courts of the United States and try a question of private title. It is nothing more, it is nothing less; it is just that; and that is the obnoxious feature of this measure. So far from being a bill as indicated in the title to quiet the title of settlers on the Des Moines lands of Iowa, it is a bill to perpetuate controversy in regard to those lands.

The Supreme Court of the United States in every possible form has decided this question. There are ten decisions of that court. There are a number of decisions of the courts of Iowa to the same effect. Every possible legal question which can arise in this case has been already decided, and the question of title is as quiet as the law can possibly make it. The question of title is entirely quiet except as against a class of men who are there now resisting the process of law. It is only a few years since that one of them was fined by a court of Iowa $500 for contempt in resisting its process, and yet the fine was paid by the settlers' union, and in less than thirty days he was back in possession of the land again and is there to this day.

These settlers occupy very much the same position that the anti-renters in the State of New York occupied more than a quarter of a century ago. They undertook to resist the lawful title to the lands of which they were in possession. They gained for a time a strong hold upon the local popular sentiment. They elected judges, and the judges became corrupt; they elected sheriffs, and the sheriffs became venal; they carried the local elections, and the system ran riot for a time, until by its own weight it fell to the ground and the lawful titles prevailed, and we have had peace in the State ever since. Just so it will be in the State of Iowa if the disturbing element of this bill is not thrust in there. These contestants of the true title are now, to use a familiar phrase, on "their last legs." They have nothing on which to hang a hope unless they can gain something in the shape of this bill under which they may attempt another delusive and obviously fruitless litigation in respect to this property.

Why, Mr. President, the declaration in the first section of this bill, "That all the lands * * * for which indemnity lands were selected and received by the State of Iowa as provided in the act of 1862 are, and are hereby declared to be, public lands of the United States," is a brutem fulmen. If Congress has parted with the title to these lands, our declaration that they are public lands will be of no avail. It reminds me of the colloquy between a father and his son of which I once heard. He asked the boy, "John, suppose I call that calf's tail a leg, how many legs would the calf have?" "Why, five," said the boy. "Oh, no, my son, you are greatly mistaken." "Why yes, father; he has four legs now, and if we call the tail a leg, that will make five, won't it?" "No, my boy; don't you understand that calling the calf's tail a leg don't make it a leg?" So, Mr. President in this bill, calling these lands public lands can not make them public lands. The Government's title has been fully divested by three several and solemn acts of Congress, or two acts of Congress and one joint resolution. The Supreme Court of the United States, in numerous cases, has decided that there is a perfect title in these purchasers. Now what avail is it to declare that they are nevertheless public lands? Whoever drew this bill must have been a very poor lawyer, or else a designing trickster.

This is not the case of the forfeiture of a grant like the bills for the forfeiture of railroad lands. There is no phase of that kind in it. This is not a recalling by the Government of title which has been divested upon some condition which has failed. That is not a feature of this bill. This is a bill, leaving everything as it now is as to the legal title, which proposes simply to declare that a portion of these lands are public lands. So the sop that is thrown out in the bill declaring that the undisputed titles of those who have purchased under the grant of the State of Iowa are hereby confirmed is delusive. We do not ask Congress to confirm our grants; the Supreme Court has confirmed our grants. It was a judicial question between us and these settlers who held the legal title. It is not a legislative question; it is not a question which belonged to the Committee on Public Lands. It is a question which belonged to the Judiciary Committee of this body, to whom it was committed in the Forty-sixth Congress, and who unanimously decided that no such relief as is proposed by this bill could be obtained, and who recommended the indefinite postponement of the consideration of this bill. We do not ask Congress to pass a law confirming our title; we have got a better title than Congress can give now, because Congress has by legislative power divested the United States of all title to these lands, and we having purchased them, our title is better than any which Congress can give, and would not be aided by any declaration of Congress.

So the declaration of this bill that the lands for which indemnity was received by the State of Iowa are public lands, although a matter with which we have nothing to do, really is a delusive and utterly ineffectual declaration. We were not parties to that arrangement. In the case of Baker vs. Williams, 17 Wall., 144, Mr. Harvey, who was the agent of the State, testified that neither the Navigation Company nor any of its grantees were notified of or took any part whatever in said adjustment. So far as the lands for which indemnity was provided are owned by purchasers, this declaration is false and misleading. It was not for them the indemnity was offered, but for the settlers who had acquired no title.

Why, Mr. President, I repeat the question, at this distance of time, should the authority of the Government of the United States and the proceeds of the Treasury of the United States be thrust into this contest against these purchasers for value from the State of Iowa? Why should they be subjected to this unequal contest? The bill concedes that the Government could maintain no action, because it provides that the claims of settlers shall be united in a suit by the Attorney-General for the purpose of determining the question. In other words, the settler to whom the court is now open, the settler who can now go into court and try the question in all its aspects, is to have as a sort of annex to him the Attorney-General and the Treasury of the United States. They will walk into court arm in arm with the money-bags of the Treasury in their hands and attempt to overawe honest purchasers and owners and to subject them to an unequal contest. They will point to this false recital that those are public lands as their foothold in the controversy.

Now, who is in favor of giving this advantage to these persons who went upon the land, as I have already shown, after the title had passed to us and who can not be considered bona fide settlers? Certainly these settlers should not receive encouragement in the way of the facilities for litigation which are proposed by this bill. They should not for the reason, as I have said, that they went into possession knowing that the title had passed from the Government. They know also, if they know anything and are correctly advised, and I shall soon show that they have been correctly advised, that the only result of this bill will be to keep up a state of lawlessness and disorder in the counties in which these lands lie. If they can continue to reap the fruits of these lands and pay no taxes, they can afford to protract the litigation for an indefinite period of time, especially if the main burden of the expenses is borne by the Treasury of the United States; and that is the only effect of this bill.

The joint resolution of March 2, 1861, is very brief and in these words:

Joint resolution to quiet title to lands in the State of Iowa.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all the title which the United States still retain in the tracts of land along the Des Moines River, and above the mouth of the Raccoon Fork thereof, in the State of Iowa, which have been certified to said State improperly by the Department of the Interior, as part of the grant by act of Congress approved August 8, 1846, and which is now held by bona fide purchasers under the State of Iowa, be, and the same is hereby, relinquished to the State of Iowa.

This is not a release for the benefit of bona fide settlers, as this report falsely states. It is a release for the purpose of protecting the bona fide purchasers from the State. It is not confined to those who are settlers, and the Supreme Court in all these cases has held that this release by this joint resolution removes all cloud upon the title in the hands of these purchasers and vests in them a perfect title to all these lands. It is a legislative grant, it vests title in these purchasers, and is complete in its terms; it divests the United States of all title. Those who are bona fide purchasers from the State of the lands are shown by the records of the State of Iowa. They are shown by the report of the governor to the General Land Office in 1862. It appeared by that report of Governor Lowe that all the lands improperly certified had been sold and conveyed to purchasers, namely: 57,919.23 acres to individuals and 213,492.79 acres to the Des Moines River Navigation Company. I have that portion of Governor Lowe's report here. That report is printed in full in the record in the Supreme Court of the case of Riley vs. Wells, one of the cases in which this question of title was determined.

In the case of John Stryker (of my State, who was one of these purchasers) vs. Polk County (22 Iowa Reports, 131), at the April term in 1867, the supreme court of Iowa decided this:

That Congress, in 1861, made not a new grant, but for the purpose of giving effect to and carrying out the construction placed upon the original act relinquished to the State, for the use of bona fide purchasers, all the interest which the United States still retained. * * * Plaintiff held under a deed from the State; the State claimed under the original grant, the lists being duly certified; he was a bona fide purchaser, and the title still retained by the United States was relinquished to the State for his use.

That is what the court of Iowa decided, in exact accordance with the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. In 1871 the State of Iowa decided the case of Bellows vs. Todd, 34 Iowa Reports, page 18. Bellows claimed the land in contest, under Edwin C. and Electus B. Litchfield, who derived title through the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company. Todd claimed to have settled on the land in April, 1860, and he made a pre-emption entry 23d April, 1860, which he afterwards changed to a homestead entry, March 14, 1863, after this joint resolution of Congress. The judgment in the Iowa court in that case was in favor of Todd as a pre-emptor. At the trial among other things the plaintiff requested the court to instruct the jury as follows:

If the jury find from the evidence that the land in controversy was certified to the State of Iowa in 1853, under the act of August 8, 1846, and that the same had been conveyed by the State of Iowa to the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company, and by said company to plaintiff's grantors, and by them to the plaintiff in this action, then the plaintiff is entitled to recover.

If the jury find from the evidence that the lands were certified to the State of Iowa by the Secretary of the Interior under the act of August 8, 1846, then that certification was a reservation of the lands contained in such lists, and the same could not be entered under the pre-emption or homestead acts by the defendants.

The Iowa court declined to give these instructions. The case coming afterwards to the supreme court of the State, it held on appeal that the instructions prayed for ought to have been given, and the judgment below was reversed. This is a direct authority upon this question of title as between a homestead or pre-emption claimant and the purchaser under the Des Moines River grant. It was a prominent case decided in 1871.

The proposed bill declares valid all entries made up to January, 1880, nine years after this decision of the Iowa court.

The Secretary of the Interior, in December, 1868, and in February, 1869, in four cases decided that the title of the United States was by the joint resolution relinquished to the State, and therefore rejected the claims of pre-emption settlers, and none of the persons now in possession are clothed with any title from the Government; they have not received patents, and they can not obtain them in the present state of the law. They are mere squatters, without any semblance of right when the fact is found that they entered into possession after the title of the Government had been divested.

The case of Riley vs. Wells was a pre-emption case, Riley claiming under the pre-emption law a quarter-section. Wells held a title under the Des Moines River Navigation and Railroad Company. That case came to the Supreme Court of the United States. The case is not reported, and his honor Justice Nelson delivering the opinion, said:

It will appear from the case of Wolcott vs. The Des Moines Company that the tract of land, of which the lot in question was a part, had been withdrawn from sale and entry, on account of a difference of opinion among the officers of the Land Department as to the extent of the original grant by Congress of lands in aid of the improvement of the Des Moines River, from the year 1846 down to the resolution of Congress of March 2, 1861, and the act of July 12, 1862, which acts we held confirmed the title in the Des Moines Company. As the husband of the plaintiff entered upon the lot in 1855 without right, and the possession was continued without right, the permission of the register to prove up the possession and improvements and to make the entry under the pre-emption laws were acts in violation of law and void, as was also the issuing of the patent.

There is the case of the earliest settlement, with one exception, upon all these lands absolutely held by the Supreme Court to be of no avail whatever to the settler, although he had been allowed by the Land Department to prove up his claim and make in form a proper entry. Then we come to the case of George Crilly, which is a conclusive case upon this question. Crilly entered upon those lands in the year 1855. The majority report states his case, and shows that he was allowed by the proper officer of the Government to prove his claim and to take a patent for it. It is referred to in the report. My eye does not fall at this moment upon the statement in the report of the Commissioner of the Land Office which refers to Crilly's case, but he treated it as an exceptional case, and he allowed Crilly to prove up his claim and take a patent.

Mr. ALLISON. It is found on pages 13 and 14 of the report.

Mr. LAPHAM. Crilly claimed the southeast quarter of section 29, in township 89, in Iowa, under the pre-emption law. He got his patent in 1862, after the passage of the joint resolution. The tract containing this section had been sold by the navigation company to R. S. Burrows, of Albion, in the State of New York, who was a large purchaser of these lands. He filed a bill to set aside the patent of Crilly, thus presenting directly the issue whether there was any remaining power in the Government to grant patents to these lands.

In deciding the case at the December term, in 1872, Justice Davis said:

We have already decided that the Des Moines River lands were reserved from sale, and this reservation continued until Congress, by the joint resolution of 1861, released to the State, for the use of its grantees, the legal title still in the General Government, without any saving clause in behalf of settlers or those who might claim under the pre-emption laws of the United States.

They decided that the claim of Crilly, under a patent actually issued by the Government upon the settlement made in the year 1855, is absolutely void and can not prevail against the title of the purchaser under the river grant.

The grant to certain railroads in 1856 expressly excepted lands in the occupancy of settlers under the homestead laws. There was no such exception in the joint resolution of 1861.

In a case against Mr. Martindale, reported in 17 Wallace, there is an entire review of the legislation of Congress upon this subject, and Judge Miller, delivering the opinion in that case, concludes his opinion in this way:

This legislative history of the title of the State of Iowa, and of those to whom she had conveyed the lands certified to her by the Secretary of the Interior as part of the grant of 1846, including among her grantees the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company, needs no gloss or criticism to show that the title of the State and her grantees is perfect, unless impaired or defeated by some other and extrinsic matter which would have that effect.

By prior decisions he held that it had been settled—

That by the joint resolution of 1861 the title erroneously certified to the State, under the act of 1846, was validated and made good. * * * And we therefore reaffirm * * * that by the joint resolution of 1861 and the act of July 12, 1862, the State of Iowa did receive the title for the use of those to whom she had sold them as part of that grant (August 8, 1846), and for such other purposes as had become proper under that grant.

This is the state of the title as determined by the Supreme Court. This is the state of the title as determined by the report of the Judiciary Committee of this body made four years ago.

In this connection and as bearing on this point I now ask, as was suggested by the honorable Senator from Alabama in the opening of my remarks, that the views of the minority of the Committee on Public Lands, which truly and faithfully and fairly present the questions which arise on the bill, may at this time be read.

Mr. ALLISON. May I ask if the Senator from New York desires that the report should be read as part of his remarks?

Mr. LAPHAM. Yes, sir; the views of the minority, not the report proper.

Mr. ALLISON. I refer to the views of the minority.

Mr. LAPHAM. Except that the minority incorporated in their views the report of the Judiciary Committee made in the Forty-sixth Congress. That has been stated by the Senator from Alabama and by the Senator from Arkansas, and I do not ask to have that reread, but I ask to have it incorporated in printing the views of the minority as part of it.

Mr. ALLISON. Why would it not suit the convenience of the Senator to have it all printed in the RECORD?

Mr. LAPHAM. For the simple reason that the Senate I assume have not heard or listened to the view of the minority in regard to this case. They are appropriate at this time, in view of what I have stated as to the state of the law and the facts, to show that the views presented by the minority exactly fit this case and are conclusive against the passage of the bill. I hope the Senators present will attend to the statement of the views of the minority in regard to this question. They are much better than anything I could say upon the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, in the chair). The Senator from New York asks that the views of the minority may be read by the Chief Clerk as a part of his remarks.

Mr. COCKRELL. Have they not been read once?

Mr. LAPHAM. No, sir; we did not get within two or three pages of them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and the views of the minority will be read.

Mr. ALLISON. Does it require unanimous consent?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It requires unanimous consent to have them read by the Chief Clerk. The Senator can read them himself under the rule.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to having them read at the desk; I would relieve the Senator from New York as much as possible, as I know he is impaired by a cold, but I suggest to the Senator from New York that this matter might as well go into the RECORD without being read now. I think it would be more attentively considered in that form.

Mr. LAPHAM. I myself suggested that that portion of it which constitutes the report of the Judiciary Committee shall go in without being read, but the rest of it I wish to have read, or I shall read it myself, if any point is made.

Mr. ALLISON. I make no point. I hope the clerks will take note of the fact that the Senator from New York desires judicious omissions to be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerks have observed the remarks of the Senator from New York and will be governed accordingly.

Mr. LAPHAM. I wish to have the report of the Judiciary Committee printed as part of the views of the minority, but it need not be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands it, and the clerks so understand it.

The Chief Clerk read the views of the minority as indicated.

The views of the minority are as follows:

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

The undersigned, a minority of the Committee on Public Lands, are of opinion that Congress has no jurisdiction over the lands described in the bill, for the reason that the title thereto has vested perfectly, and beyond the control of Congress, in the grantees who hold under the State of Iowa. We are of opinion that such title has been conclusively sustained both by the judgments of the courts of Iowa and of the Supreme Court of the United States, and that all further efforts to change these results by Congressional action are misleading to the persons interested, are calculated to excite false hopes among them, and to foster a state of feeling that has already induced them to resist the authority of the laws to a dangerous extent.

Many times this matter has been carefully considered by Congress and the courts. In 1861 the difficulty of the situation was so obvious that Congress sought to settle it, or else to escape from it, by making a final relinquishment of the lands in the Des Moines River grant to the State of Iowa, so that it might dispose of them in a just and equitable way. Acting upon that authority, the State disposed of the lands, and all the courts have held that titles acquired under this authority were perfect. If this action did not divest Congress of all power to affect the title to those lands by further legislation, then it seems impossible that Congress can ever so far dispose of the public domain as to vest a perfect title in a grantee or purchaser.

The history of this vexed question was carefully presented to the Senate in the report of the Committee on the Judiciary, made on the 21st February, 1881 (Report No. 890, Forty-sixth Congress, third session). No facts have been brought to the attention of the Committee on Public Lands which in any way change the findings of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Some intimations have been made that the cases, or some of them, decided in the Supreme Court of the United States, which state the law as it affects the titles to these lands, were in fact agreed cases in which some facts that might have influenced the decision were not put into the records. What those supposed facts were has not been pointed out to the committee. This objection seems to be met by Baker vs. Williams, 15 Wall., 151. The cases cited in the report of the Committee on the Judiciary are based on the legislative history of this land grant, except as to the persons or lands that were, on the 2d March, 1861, included in the words found in the joint resolution of Congress of that date, namely, "which is now held by bona fide purchasers under the State of Iowa." No case could have been decided by any court upon the effect of this statute unless one of the parties had claimed under the description found in the words quoted. So that the meaning of this statute was necessarily discussed and settled in each of those cases. (See Des Moines Co. vs. Burr, 5 Wall., 689; Wolcott vs. Des Moines Co., 5 Wall., 681; Williams vs. Baker et al., and Cedar Rapids R. R. The report of the Committee on the Judiciary is as follows:

"[Senate Report No. 890, Forty-sixth Congress, third session.]

"Mr. GARLAND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following report to accompany bill H. R. 1067:

"On the 8th of August, 1846, Congress granted certain lands to the Territory of Iowa to aid in the improvement of the navigation of the Des Moines River. The grant was of 'one equal moiety, in alternate sections, of the public lands (remaining unsold and not otherwise disposed of, encumbered, or appropriated), in a strip five miles in width, on each side of said river, to be selected within said Territory by an agent or agents to be appointed by the governor thereof, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States.'

"Soon afterward a question arose as to the extent of the grant; whether it extended simply to the Raccoon Fork, or to the northern limit of the State, or to the source of the river in Minnesota. This doubt arose from the purpose of the grant, as it was stated in the body of the act, which was 'to improve the navigation of the river from its mouth to the Raccoon Fork.' Mr. Walker, then Secretary of the Treasury, as early as March 2, 1849, held that the grant extended on both sides of the river, from its source to its mouth, and following this decision the Commissioner of the General Land Office, by letter to the register and receiver of the land office at Iowa City, directed them to withhold from sale all lands situated in the odd-numbered sections within five miles on each side of the river above the Raccoon Fork.

"This construction was sustained by Mr. Johnson, the Attorney-General.

"Mr. Ewing, the Secretary of the Interior, reversed the decision of the Treasury Department, in a letter addressed to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated April 9, 1849, and held that the grant without an explanatory act of Congress terminated at the fork.

"His successor, Mr. Stuart, held a different opinion, and, in a letter to the Commissioner, dated October 29, 1851, said he was willing to recognize the claim of the State and to approve the selections made without prejudice to the rights, if any there were, of other parties, thus leaving the question as to the proper construction of the grant entirely open to the judiciary.

"Attorney-General Crittenden, to whom Secretary Stuart had referred the question, for his opinion, decided, on June 30, 1851, that the grant did not include the land above Raccoon Fork.

"Under the ruling of Mr. Stuart, the lands north of the fork for a distance of eighty miles were certified as inuring to Iowa, under the act of August 8, 1846. Within this belt are contained all the lands in controversy."

There were still further rulings.

"Thus, on the 25th of March, 1856, the Commissioner held that the grant did not extend above the fork, and in this he was sustained by Mr. McClelland, the Secretary of the Interior, who was also sustained in his opinion by Mr. Cushing, the Attorney-General. There were other rulings and complications not necessary to be stated. The question finally came before the Supreme Court of the United States in what is known as the Litchfield case (23 Howard, 66), and at the December term, 1859-'60, it was held that the grant was limited to the Raccoon Fork, and did not extend above it. But in consequence of the acts of Congress of 2d March, 1861, and July 12, 1862, the same court afterward held, in the Wolcott case, decided at the December term, 1866, that the grant extended to the north boundary of the State, and inured to the benefit of the grantees of the State, notwithstanding the act of May 15, 1856, which attempted to divert a portion of these lands to the benefit of certain railroad companies.

"This is but a partial recital of the legislation of Congress and the rulings of the Supreme Court, but is sufficient for the present.

"Many persons having settled upon the lands claimed at the time to be part of the public domain, and not included in the grant of August 8, 1846, but which were subsequently adjudged to belong to the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company, as grantees of the State of Iowa, and being liable by the decisions of the courts to be turned out of possession of their homes unless they could come to some terms with this corporation, an act of Congress was passed March 3, 1873, authorizing the President to appoint three commissioners to ascertain the number of acres and the value thereof, exclusive of improvements, of all the lands lying north of the fork as were held by said corporation or persons claiming title under it adversely to persons holding said lands either by entry or under the pre-emption or homestead laws, and on what terms the adverse holders thereof would relinquish the same to the United States.

"A commission was accordingly appointed by the President, who made their report to Congress. (See Executive Document No. 25, Forty-third Congress.)

"All of these lands were entered as part of the public domain under the pre-emption and homestead laws, the greater number under the former. When they settled upon these lands does not appear; but the dates of filing their applications for entries are given.

"The earliest date of filing is 1862, and the latest in November, 1868. In a portion of the cases patents have issued. As to the lands taken under the pre-emption laws, the settlers have paid the United States $1.25 per acre, in a few cases, $2.50; for those taken under the homestead laws they have paid the fees and commissions only, varying from $7 to $18 a tract, according to the number of acres entered.

"The general law is, and has been since January 12, 1825, that when any tract of land has been sold erroneously by the United States, so that from any cause the sale can not be confirmed, the Secretary of the Interior shall repay to the purchaser, his heirs or legal representatives or assignees, the same amount of money he has paid, without interest. (4 Statutes at Large, page 80.)

"It appears in this case that all the lands in question were withdrawn from market by the Secretary of the Interior, and on October 30, 1851, he approved the selections made by the State north of the Raccoon Fork as inuring to her under the grant made by the act of August 8, 1846. The amount thus certified to the State was 271,572 acres."

Under and pursuant to the contract made by the State with the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company on 9th of June, 1854, the State of Iowa conveyed to this company in 1858 all the lands granted to the State by the act of 1846, a belt eighty miles long above the fork, except 25,438.87, which had been sold by the United States at the Iowa City land office in 1848, as to which latter lands there has never been any question of title.

By repeated decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States all the lands thus certified to Iowa inured to the benefit of this company under the acts of Congress above quoted, of March 2, 1861, and July 12, 1862. This court decided, May 13, 1867, in the Wolcott case (5 Wallace, 681), that the reservation made by the Secretary of the Interior in October, 1851, was made under competent authority vested in the Department. It results that the settlers could found no valid claims upon the land by settlement and cultivation after that withdrawal was made.

The Wolcott decision seems to have been misunderstood by the Secretary of the Interior. He treated the lands in question as restored by force of that decision to the public domain and subject to the pre-emption and homestead laws, and hence the Commissioner of the General Land Office, by an order made May 20, 1868, opened the lands to entry under the pre-emption and homestead laws. In point of fact they belonged to the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company, under the contract and conveyance above specified.

Under such circumstances we hold that no legal or equitable title can be set up by the settlers; they were bound to know as a matter of law that the certification of the list by the Secretary was a valid act, and the lands were no longer liable to entry.

As to the lands entered subsequently to the letter of Mr. Browning of May 9, 1868, and the order of the Commissioner, it appears that the company immediately took steps to enjoin the officers of the local land offices from allowing entries to be made, and accordingly injunctions were issued by the United States circuit court for the district of Iowa. These injunctions the registers and receivers of the land offices at Fort Dodge and Des Moines were ordered by the Commissioner to disregard.

This conflict of opinions resulted in a suit and called for another decision of the Supreme Court at the December term, 1869 (Hannah Riley vs. William B. Welles), when it was definitely ruled that the settlers entered upon the lands without right, and their possession was continued without right, and that the permission of the register to prove up the possession and improvements, and to make the entries under the pre-emption laws, were acts in violation of law, and void, as was also the issuing of patents.

The court says in this case as follows:

"In the present case the defendant claims title under, and in pursuance of, the pre-emption act of September 4, 1841.

"Her husband took possession of the lot in 1855, and she was permitted by the register to prove up her possession and occupation May, 1862. The patent was issued October 15, 1863.

"It will appear from the case of Wolcott vs. The Des Moines Company that the tract of land, of which the lot in question was a part, had been withdrawn from sale and entry on account of a difference of opinion among the officers of the Land Department as to the extent of the original grant by Congress of lands in aid of the improvement of the Des Moines River, from the year 1846 down to the resolution of Congress of March 2, 1861, and the act of July 12, 1862, which acts, we held, confirmed the title in the Des Moines Company. As the husband of the plaintiff entered upon the lot in 1855 without right and the possession was continued without right, the permission of the register to prove up the possession and improvements, and to make the entry under the pre-emption laws, were acts in violation of law, and void, as was also the issuing of the patent.

"'The reasons for this withdrawal of the lands from public sale or private entry are stated at large in the opinion of the case of Wolcott vs. The Des Moines Company, and need not be repeated. The point of reservation was very material in that case, and we have seen nothing in the present one, either in the facts or in the argument, to distinguish it.'

"Since the acts of 1861 and 1862 were passed by Congress the rulings of the Supreme Court have been uniform that all the lands embraced in this controversy belonged to the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company.

"Notwithstanding the opening of the land offices in 1868, by the direction of the Secretary, to the entry of these lands as Government lands, it seems to the committee that the settlers were put upon their guard, not only by the decision of the Wolcott case, but the injunctions granted by the circuit court, that there was a question as to their rights to enter the lands. They chose to take the risk, and the ultimate decision proves they acquired no title. From the very start there was a cloud of doubt. They can not, in the face of these facts, be regarded as innocent purchasers. The intrinsic value of the lands at the time when they made their filings and entries was probably nearly as great as now, aside from the improvements. But the committee understand the fact to be that the lands in controversy were all settled upon while the order was in force withdrawing them from sale, although many applications for entering at the land office appear to have been made since.

"The more recent decisions (Wolsey vs. Chapman, 101 U. S. R., 755, and Litchfield vs. County of Webber, ibid., 773) approve the earlier cases on this subject already cited, and from them all it is clearly to be gathered that this matter has passed beyond the reach of Congress, and whatever rights the settlers seek to show or may wish to establish, they are not within any remedial legislation of Congress; they can not be affected by any act of Congress; in fact, it is a subject over which Congress has no jurisdiction; and the committee ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and recommend it be indefinitely postponed."

That the grantees of the State of Iowa are in fact "bona fide purchasers" for full consideration, actually paid in money expended upon the improvement of the river on the contract by the Navigation Company, is proved by the official certificate of Governor Lowe to President Buchanan, in the words and figures following, namely:

"EXECUTIVE CHAMBER, IOWA, Des Moines, April 28, 1858.

"I, Ralph P. Lowe, governor of the State of Iowa, as required by act of Congress, approved August 8, 1846, 'granting certain lands of the Territory of Iowa to aid in the improvement of the navigation of the Des Moines River, in said Territory,' do hereby certify that there has been expended from time to time, prior to the date hereof, on the improvement of said river, as the work has progressed; and the money has been required under certain contracts made by the State of Iowa with the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company, the sum of $332,644.04, and in consideration of said expenditures on said improvement, and in pursuance of the provisions of the act of Congress approved as aforesaid, there will be conveyed to said Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company 266,107.23 acres of the lands belonging to said grant, and which have been certified and approved to the State of Iowa under said act, for the prosecution of the improvement of said river Des Moines.

"In testimony whereof I, Ralph P. Lowe, governor of the State of Iowa, have caused the great seal of the State of Iowa to be hereunto affixed, together with my signature.

"[SEAL.] RALPH P. LOWE.

"By the governor:

"ELIJAH SELLS, Secretary of State.

"To his excellency JAMES BUCHANAN,

"President of the United States."

The point that they are bona fide purchasers is also considered and distinctly decided by the United States Supreme Court in the case of Wolsey and the State of Iowa vs. Chapman. (101 U. S. Rep., 755.) Also in the Iowa supreme court in the case of Stryker vs. Polk County. (22 Iowa Rep., 131.)

This bill, as amended by the committee, changes a "belief" expressed in the bill, as it was referred to the committee, into an assertion as to the "true intent and meaning" of three statutes, namely, March 2, 1861, 12 Stat., page 251; July 12, 1862, 12 Stat., page 543; and March 3, 1871, 16 Stat., and upon that judicial opinion, now for the first time to be expressed by Congress, it declares certain lands "to be public lands of the United States," and proceeds to give them to certain persons who reside upon or claim homesteads upon them.

These are the identical lands which the United States, by joint resolution of Congress in 1861, "relinquished to the State of Iowa." This relinquishment applied to land "which is now (March 2, 1861) held by bona fide purchasers under the State of Iowa."

Congress can not, either by direct legislation or by the interpretation it may now place on its former enactments, reclaim this land without taking the property of citizens without due process of law.

After the law has been thus declared in the bill, and the rights of the owners of these lands have been thus summarily disposed of by its provisions, the Attorney-General is required to go into the courts, whether State or Federal the bill does not indicate, and take proceedings in the name of the United States, in which suits private claimants may be joined with the United States "to assert and protect the title of the United States to said lands and remove all clouds from its title thereto." If the first section of the act is valid, there can be no clouds on the title to be removed, unless the courts shall find that the words "ratified, confirmed, and made valid," when applied to a grant of lands, or the confirmation of the title, are not sufficient even to remove a cloud from the title.

It is made the duty of the courts in this bill to "protect the title of the United States to said lands." If the United States has title to the lands that may be protected after this bill is enacted into a law, the persons to whom they are "ratified, confirmed, and made valid" have no such title. To give this power to the courts over these lands is to defeat the very titles and claims which the first section "ratifies, confirms, and makes valid."

If the title of these lands is restored to the United States by this bill it carries with it the possession by act of law. It becomes, in every sense, "public lands of the United States," as the bill declares. It is not necessary that Congress should confer the power upon the courts to protect the public lands of the United States. That is the duty of the President. No courts are named in the bill that are to have this new and extraordinary jurisdiction, but, assuming that they can only be the circuit and district courts of the United States, the bill includes any such courts wherever found. The provision allowing private claimants of the land to join the suit with the United States is limited by the Constitution to those persons who reside in the different States, so that only a few persons could take advantage of the act.

The number of suits that may be brought under the provisions of this bill is only measured by the number of claimants to the lands. A broad field of litigation is thus opened, and the Government, with all power and prestige, would go into court alone, or in company with all the claimants mentioned in this act, and would defray all the expenses of the many suits to assist them in the assertion and protection of the titles conferred upon them by this act.

In any case such a course would necessarily be unfair and unjust toward mere private persons of limited means, but in this case it would array the power of the United States to destroy titles acquired in good faith and paid for in full to the State of Iowa, confirmed by the joint resolution of Congress relinquishing the lands to bona fide purchasers and afterward upheld and confirmed in the courts.

Congress had better appropriate any amount of money to compensate the claimants of these lands for the losses they have sustained through the mistaken or improvident procedure of its land officers, than to attempt to avoid such a debt of justice by taking the lands from one bona fide purchaser to give it to another bona fide pre-emptor or homestead claimant.

This strife will continue as long as Congress shall give it encouragement by efforts to remedy the troubles about these lands by transferring titles from one man to another. Such efforts are misleading because they must result in disappointment. It is better, in the opinion of the undersigned, that Congress should at once assume the duty and burden of making just compensation for losses that have been sustained by those who bought these lands from the United States, under the mistaken belief of the land officers that they were open to settlement and disposal as part of the public domain, and have lost the benefits of their purchases.

R. L. GIBSON.
J. D. WALKER.

Mr. LAPHAM. I submit with perfect confidence that there can be no answer to the view of the case thus directly and succinctly presented in the views of the minority. They are more charitable even than the facts of the case would justify, because they arrive at this conclusion, assuming that there are bona fide pre-emptors or homestead claimants to the property. That is not the fact, as I have shown. They have no patents to the land; they have never been able to obtain any. The two who have obtained patents have tried their titles in the Supreme Court, and in both cases they have been beaten. Those men, I repeat, are mere squatters. It is a misnomer to call them persons under homestead or pre-emption entries in good faith. Such is not the fact.

If the settlers had availed themselves of the provisions of the act passed by Congress in 1873 and the investigation made by Messrs. Chubb, Aldrich, and Robinson and had accepted the provision thus made by the Government, their claims would all have been satisfied long before this time. Instead of that they renewed their demands for the recovery of the lands themselves and would have nothing else. In the case of Litchfield vs. Webster County, 101 United States Reports, referred to by the honorable Senator from Arkansas, the court says:

By the joint resolution (March 2, 1861) Congress relinquished all title; the United States then retained to the lands which had before that time been certified by the Department of the Interior as part of the river grant, and which were held by bona fide purchasers under the State. No further conveyance was necessary to complete the transfer, and the description was sufficient to identify the property. The title thus relinquished inured at once to the benefit of the purchasers for whose use the relinquishment was made. All the lands involved in this suit had been certified, and Litchfield, or those under whom he claims, were bona fide purchasers from the State.

The first effort made by these claimants was to procure a repeal of the joint resolution of March, 1861, and the act of 1862. They failed to accomplish anything in that direction. Decisions of the Supreme Court continued to be made from time to time reaffirming the title, until at last the settlers, without any memorials, as I have shown, in their behalf, come into Congress and ask the extraordinary relief proposed by the bill.

I have shown how one hundred and four settlers on these lands view this proposition, and I now desire to call attention briefly to the advice given to the settlers by citizens of Iowa who were familiar with all the questions, and whose opinions were asked in reference to it. Letters were addressed to Hon. George G. Wright, formerly a Senator from that State in this body, Hon. C. C. Carpenter, formerly the governor of the State, and to the Second Comptroller of the United States Treasury, Hon. Galusha Parsons, formerly of Fort Dodge, Iowa, and now a resident of Des Moines. Each of them was asked to give his opinion as to the merits of this movement for the settlers and whether they could obtain any Congressional relief. Those men were all friends of the settlers. Ex-Senator Wright is a distinguished citizen of the State. His letter was written while a Senator here and as their friend. Governor Carpenter and Mr. Parsons occupied the same position. My object in referring to this is to show to the Senate the state of public sentiment on the part of right-minded men in the State of Iowa in regard to this case. Mr. Wright says:

I can not imagine how the repeal of the resolution of March 2, 1861, or of the act of July 12, 1862, could possibly leave the title of the river lands in the settlers. I have thought of this matter not a little, and can not see how, in view of the decisions of the Supreme Court, the action of the Department and of our State authorities, the repeal of these laws could by possibility affect the vested rights of those claiming these lands. I wish it could be done, but to wish a thing to be so and to have it according to your wishes are quite different things.

But, in my judgment, every dollar paid by these settlers to those who put themselves forward as their special friends to lobby and take care of their interests is so much money thrown away. Every member in the House and in the Senate from Iowa is as anxious to do all that can be done for these men as any outsider can be. Of course, we are anxious to have the assistance of all, and will gladly accept the co-operation of these settlers and their friends, wherever found, but I can not but think that every dollar paid by them to agents or those who profess ability to circumvent the decision of the Supreme Court, is but another dollar given without benefit or profit. In this I speak, as I trust, in the interests of the settlers; certainly with no wish to forestall or interfere with any plans which they may esteem to their benefit and interests.

In great haste and with kind regards, I am,
Your friend,

GEO. G. WRIGHT.

It is a long letter and I shall not read the whole of it. I will only add the conclusion. Governor Carpenter in his letter says:

I have your letter of the 26th ultimo—

This was in 1876—

and in reply will say that I fear the river-land settlers will reap no benefit from the measures proposed by Mr. Hodnett. I know nothing of him personally, but presume that he believes the cause he proposes will right the wrongs of those who become his clients. And he no doubt reasons that the same power which passed the joint resolution of 1861 and the act of July 12, 1862, can repeal them. If they were mere ordinary laws, this position could not be denied; but, in my judgment, statutes under which titles have vested, as in this case, are beyond the control of the law-making power. * * * There are many precedents, however, for indemnifying settlers who have been misled by intricate legal questions, which, as in the river-land question, even involved the skillful officers of the Land Department in numerous blunders and contradictions.

To a bill providing for relief to these settlers there should be no objection on the part of anybody. I, as a representative of these purchasers, would gladly support such a measure as that. The State of Iowa recommended such a measure by a joint resolution which was sent here after the time I am now referring to. But the settlers, under the advice of designing men, were unwilling to accede to the proposition. Mr. Parsons in his letter says:

It is unaccountable how anybody can be made to believe that the repeal of a law making a grant will divest the rights of the grantees. It might as well be supposed that the burning up of a deed would operate as a conveyance of the land embraced in it. It is the shallowest of all conceivable impostures. It has been decided times too often to refer to that it is competent for Congress to grant the public lands by legislative act, without the aid of the executive department, and that the effect of such an act is to vest a title, as lawyers call it, in præsenti, without patent. It is just as useless and senseless to talk against this as it would be to maintain that by a Congressional repeal of the act admitting the State of Iowa into the Union, all of the land granted to the State for school or any other purposes would revert to the General Government. After a grant is made and title vested under it, it is no longer subject to legislative control. It has become a matter of judicial conveyance, and the courts have the power (and no power beyond that) simply to construe the grant.

To maintain the contrary shows either a total want of acquaintance with the most elementary of legal principles, or that the party is simply imposing upon his hearers. A great deal has been said about the advice that has been given by lawyers and others to the settlers upon these lands, very much of which is pure misrepresentation. I know of no reputable lawyer who has ever advised them that there has been at any time since what is known as the Wolcott decision any hope for them, so far as the title to the land is concerned, except through a reconsideration by the Supreme Court of the principles of that decision. I tried in the Riley case to procure such reconsideration. It was submitted upon my part upon a very elaborate printed argument, in which every question that has since been made by anybody was fully discussed. Every item of evidence that has since been given in any case as to the general title to these lands is found in the printed record in that case. I had hopes—but never very strong—that the Supreme Court, in view of the great magnitude of the interests involved, and the extreme hardship of the lot of those who had purchased and improved these lands and made homes upon them, would reconsider that decision.

I urged this, as my argument shows, if not ably, certainly very earnestly, but the court declined to re-examine the principles of that decision, which is certainly an end of all controversy as to the title to the lands, if it is possible for the highest judicial tribunal in the country to end it. I regret exceedingly that the settlers upon these lands, for whom I have done a great deal and have tried to do more, are flattering themselves with the hope which is doomed to certain disappointment. They are throwing away their contributions, not in a doubtful case, but in one which is absolutely certain, in which the decision is already against them, and which nothing that they or Congress can do will ever change.

FOREIGN-LABOR CONTRACTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business of yesterday, being the bill (H. R. 2550) to prohibit the importation and migration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia.

Mr. DAWES. I ask that the bill may be informally laid aside, that we may take up the Indian appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the bill be informally laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. Before proceeding with the Indian appropriation bill, the Chair asks to be allowed to lay before the Senate sundry bills from the House of Representatives for reference.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 7081) to amend section 17 of an act approved July 2, 1864, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862," was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill should be referred to the Committee on Railroads, the Chair thinks. The Chair has not read the body of the bill, but according to his observation it does not touch the question of the settlement that the Committee on the Judiciary has had under consideration.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

A bill (H. R. 7077) to remove the disabilities of John K. Mitchell, of Virginia;

A bill (H. R. 7078) to remove the disabilities of John L. Cowardin; and

A bill (H. R. 7230) to remove the disabilities of John Randolph Hamilton, of North Carolina.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. 8090) granting a pension to Albert Harper;
A bill (H. R. 8136) for the relief of Addison M. Copen;

A bill (H. R. 8082) granting a pension to Lina J. Stearns;
A bill (H. R. 8142) granting a pension to Mrs. Lucy Parr;

A bill (H. R. 8091) granting a pension to David Sears;
A bill (H. R. 7810) granting a pension to Rosanna Riley;
A bill (H. R. 2068) granting a pension to James H. Reid; and
A bill (H. R. 7718) restoring John P. Snyder to the pension-roll.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7970) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. DAWES. I ask that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with, and that the bill be read for the consideration of the committee amendments in their order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the amendments recommended by the Committee on Appropriations be considered as the reading of the bill proceeds. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will now proceed.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 118, to insert:

And to insert in lieu thereof:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the following clause, from line 237 to line 244, inclusive:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to pay to C. and F. Huning $13,397.02, and to Fielding Burns $1,000, out of any funds belonging to the Kiowas and the Cheyenne Indians of Indian Territory; the same being claims for damages caused by depredations of said Indians, and examined, approved, and reported to Congress by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. On line 366 the name is not printed right. It should be "Tonacket." There should be a "t" after the "e."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). If there be no objection, the "t" will be added.

Mr. PLUMB. In my bill the "t" is printed. I think there should be an "s" instead of a "t" at the end.

Mr. DAWES. I can not answer the Senator, because a letter from the Secretary has it as it is here; but I am inclined to think that in the statute which created the agreement it is spelled the other way. I will look it up and ask that it be amended if there is a necessity for a correction.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriation for fulfilling treaties with the "Creeks," to strike out lines 401 and 402, as follows:

For assistance in agricultural operations, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 434, to reduce the total amount of appropriations for fulfilling treaties with the "Creeks" from $112,973.30 to $110,973.30.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 437, after the words "pay to the," to strike out "treasury" and insert "treasurer;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States pay to the treasurer of that part of the Cherokees known and denominated "Old Settlers or Western Cherokees" the sum of $660.80, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. In line 439, at the last moment I am informed that there must be an amendment; instead of $660.80 the sum should be $449.30.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the amendment will be noted.

Mr. DAWES. And on the four hundred and fortieth line "the 12th day of June" should be "the 30th day of September."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. These amendments will be considered agreed to if there be no objection.

Mr. DAWES. The year should be "1851" instead of "1838."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will now be read, so that the Senator may see that they are noted correctly.

The amendments were read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for fulfilling treaties with the Iowas, in line 488, to strike out "1884" and insert "1885;" so as to read:

IOWAS.

For interest, in lieu of investment, on $57,500, balance of $157,500, to July 1, 1885, at 5 per cent. per annum, for education or other beneficial purposes, under the direction of the President, per ninth article of treaty of May 17, 1854, $2,875.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriations for fulfilling treaties with the "Kansas Indians," to strike out the following clause, from line 498 to line 529, inclusive:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to apply the net proceeds arising from the sales of Kansas Indian lands, in the State of Kansas, now in the Treasury, and such as shall from time to time be in the Treasury, to the credit of the Kansas tribe of Indians, to the payment of all the present indebtedness of said tribe, principal and interest, represented by the certificates issued in the years 1862 and 1863, and known as Kaw or Kansas Indian scrip; said payment to be made as follows: He shall, ninety days after the approval of this act, apply $67,386.89, being the net proceeds on hand March 27, 1884, together with such sum as may have accrued since said date, in pro rata payment, principal and interest, of all such scrip certificates aforesaid as shall be filed in the Department of the Interior on or before the said ninetieth day after the approval of this act, and of the genuineness of which he shall be satisfied; and thereafter whenever the proceeds, after the deduction of the expenses of the sale of said lands, shall equal the sum of $10,000, the Secretary of the Interior shall pay said sum, together with any excess thereof, upon such certificates as aforesaid as shall be on file at the Department of the Interior on the date of such payment and for thirty days thereto preceding, and shall continue so to pay until the indebtedness of said tribe represented by said scrip certificates, with the interest thereon, shall be fully liquidated, or until the entire net proceeds of the sale of said lands that are now on hand or that may hereafter be acquired shall be exhausted: Provided, That not exceeding 5 per cent. interest per annum shall be allowed on any of such scrip.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not rise to oppose the adoption of the amendment, but I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that in 1882, as I find by looking at the deficiency bill of that year, passed on the 5th day of August, a portion of these claims was provided for, precisely the same character of claims, and with the same and no other evidence of validity than those provided for in this clause. The only difference is that the claims the payment of which was provided for in 1882 were represented by scrip certificates "belonging to any person or persons who actually performed labor in the construction of the works for which they were issued."

I have no interest of any kind or description as representing any one who owns any of these certificates, although the work was done in the State of Kansas; but the fact is that the contractor received these certificates from the Government; they were negotiable, and he transferred them for value to parties in the Eastern States who now hold them, and they are practically an obligation against the Government. They were issued by a former Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Jacob Thompson, and specified the treaty under which they were issued, and in every respect are regular on their face and were issued for value, and were transferred for value.

I simply want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that heretofore we have acted in a manner that substantially accredited these certificates as an outstanding obligation against the Government, and that now we are proposing to go back of them.

Mr. DAWES. It is due to the committee that I should state the reason for their action. The committee examined pretty thoroughly into the justice of this proposition, and I think I speak the opinion of the committee when I say that they all agreed that this should be done, that it was quite time that the United States paid this scrip which had been put upon the market, although not in the name of the United States, yet by the Secretary of the Interior himself, under the provisions of a treaty with the Indians. There was some little irregularity about the issue of some of it. It was issued between the time when the treaty was agreed upon and the time when it was actually ratified here, but there was no question about the honesty of the papers.

There were before the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I think before this committee also, letters from the Secretary of the Interior at the time these certificates were put upon the market, saying to those who proposed to buy them that they were valid. Although the United States technically is not liable, and although there is no proposition to take the money out of the Treasury, but to take it in accordance with a treaty obligation out of funds arising from the sale of lands, yet it is a private claim in an Indian appropriation bill; and that is what controlled the committee. There are a great many such cases, the Senate will observe, in this bill, all of which the Senate Committee on Appropriations propose to strike out, and therefore this had to go with the rest.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in the appropriations for fulfilling treaties with the "Northern Cheyennes and Arapahoes," to strike out the following clause, from line 615 to line 622, inclusive:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to pay to Dennis Sheedy the sum of $4,658, and to B. J. Everett $3,550, for the Northern Cheyenne Indians, to be carried to the surplus fund; the same being claims for damages caused by depredations of said Indians, and examined, approved, and reported to Congress by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for fulfilling treaties with the "Omahas," to strike out the following provisos, from line 637 to line 665, inclusive:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, and with the consent of the Indians, extend the time of payment for land as fixed by section 2 of said act so that one-third of the purchase-money shall become due and payable in two years from the date when the land shall be or has been thrown open to settlement, together with one year's interest on the amount of the first installment, to be paid when entry is made; and the second installment of one-third shall become due and payable in one year, and the remaining one-third in two years from date of first payment, with interest as provided in said act; and in case of default in either of said payments, or the interest thereon, the person thus defaulting for a period of sixty days shall forfeit absolutely his right to the tract which he has purchased, and any payment or payments he may have made: Provided further, That also, with the consent of the Indians, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to cause to be appraised and sold to the highest bidder, under such regulations and upon such terms as to payment as he may deem to be most advantageous to the said Indians, that part or parcel of said reservation described as follows: All that portion of the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 27 and the west half of the northwest quarter of section 26, in township 25, range 6 east, lying east of the Sioux City and Nebraska Railroad, containing about fifty acres, more or less, conditioned, however, that the purchaser thereof shall erect, operate, and maintain a flouring-mill thereon.

Mr. MANDERSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts who has charge of this bill whether the action of the committee in striking out this language is because it is considered that this is an act of injustice or unfairness to these Indians, and to ask him further whether, in his opinion, with the safeguards thrown about this matter as to inspection and payment for these lands, it is not proper legislation. Does it not commend itself to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. DAWES. This matter has been before the Committee on Indian Affairs, and the committee authorized the reporting of a bill containing substantially this provision; but it is independent legislation, which has no more business in an appropriation bill than it has in the Declaration of Independence, so far as being germane is concerned, or so far as the rules of the Senate go, which, like those of the Medes and Persians, are not to be changed. The Committee on Appropriations acted in obedience to the edict—I believe that would be a proper word, but I will say the order of the Senate, which the committee felt bound to obey—that there should hereafter be, with the consent of the Senate, no more legislation in appropriation bills. The Senate will observe how implicitly the committee have in this respect observed the rules of the Senate, and have stripped this bill entirely of anything that looks like legislation.

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator permit me right there to ask him if the Senate did not on the pension appropriation bill, by an affirmative vote, place general legislation?

Mr. DAWES. I was not present when the Senate considered the pension bill, and as the Senator from Kansas participated in whatever error or aberration the Senate indulged in at that time, I think the Senator only calls it to my attention on the idea that if we have committed one sin, it is easier to repeat it. That I admit. I admit the force of the suggestion of the Senator, and I admit that the Senate can reverse its decision at any time if it disregards consistency, and if it disregards the principles upon which the rule was established, but the Senate Committee on Appropriations could not do that, and that is the reason why this clause is stricken out.

Mr. MANDERSON. This proviso has so far commended itself, as I understand, to the Committee on Indian Affairs that if it was in the form of a separate bill it would meet the approbation of the committee. I differ somewhat with the Senator from Massachusetts in charge of this bill. It seems to me that this is a subject-matter that is germane to the bill, and can hardly be considered as general legislation upon an appropriation bill. It is a simple matter of fairness to those who have purchased these lands, and the matter of extension of time of payment as provided herein being within the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, and being necessarily with the consent of the Indians, I think this proviso should be retained. I feel at least like testing the sense of the Senate and asking that this proviso be retained.

Mr. DAWES. Perhaps it is as well for the Senate to determine now whether this bill shall go back to the form in which it came to us. The measure contained in this proviso has some merit in it, but the Senator says he differs with me upon the question whether it is germane and proper in this bill. The object of the bill is to make "appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes." The object of it is indicated in the title. Two years ago we enacted a law under which these lands were sold after an appraisal. They were sold at a very high price and the Indians are entitled to the benefit of that price. They were sold at such a price that the purchasers now find it very hard, after the expenses incurred in making a settlement, to make their first payment at the time agreed upon. The law requires that they shall make it on a certain date. It is proposed in this measure to extend that time. That is of course independent legislation, having nothing whatever to do with the current expenses of the Indian Department, or with the fulfillment of treaties. It is a very proper measure to be considered by the Committees on Indian Affairs of the two Houses, and the committees of the two Houses have considered it. So far as the committee of this body is concerned it has done its duty; it presented the measure of the Senate in the form of a bill.

But to undertake to make the Indian appropriation bill an omnibus bill like a great hay-rick into which is to be piled everything that can be gathered up that has any reference to Indians whatever is to change entirely its character, is to change entirely the duties of the Committee on Appropriations, and is to change entirely the opportunity of the Senate to consider the propriety of these measures in the last ten days of the session.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I understand from the inquiry propounded by the Senator from Kansas to the Senator from Massachusetts that the rule is not inexorable—that the committee themselves sometimes feel at liberty to deviate from it. I refer to the rule that no legislation shall appear on an appropriation bill. Attention has been called to the case of the pension appropriation bill. The provision relating to the lands of the Omahas in Nebraska, referred to by my colleague, and the provision on the next page applying to the Otoes, are not of such a character as my friend would suggest to make an omnibus bill of the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. DAWES. Not those provisions.

Mr. VAN WYCK. These provisions are entirely legitimate; each is a matter in regard to the Indians of the particular tribe, to which the proper committee had given attention and made provision for in this appropriation bill.

Mr. DAWES. I will call my friend's attention to the difference. What the committee have done pertains to the Indians. What the provision that we propose to strike out has reference to is white settlers upon lands which the Indians sold to them.

Mr. VAN WYCK. But the money to be paid by the white settlers goes to the Indians, and therefore it affects the Indians.

Mr. DAWES. And the Indians are content to let it be just as it is.

Mr. VAN WYCK. It affects the Indians. Their acquiescence is required by this provision, so that it is a matter affecting the Indians.

These lands belonging to the Omaha and Otoe Indians were sold by these tribes at unusually large prices. That is conceded. The equity and merit of the case are conceded by the Senator. Now at this particular juncture of affairs it is impossible for the parties to make the payment as the law originally required. The Secretary of the Interior has no authority in regard to it. This matter has been called to his attention and he is not authorized to act.

Mr. DAWES. I will state to the Senator that while the Secretary of the Interior has no authority to make a binding contract of extension, he is not called upon to enforce immediately the obligation, any more than a man holding a mortgage upon another man's real estate is obliged the moment the payment becomes due to enforce his mortgage. Therefore I assume, among other things, that if there is good security for the Indians, being upon interest, the security will be just as good a year hence, and that any fair administration of the Indian Department will furnish to those people the extension which they want us to make obligatory by law.

Mr. VAN WYCK. That is all true. The difference is that the Secretary of the Interior really has no power, as I was suggesting. He would not act affirmatively probably. As to what other combinations might arise by other parties outside of the Indian tribe and outside the persons who have purchased the lands, of course we can have no guarantee.

If the rule be not inexorable in regard to placing legislation on an appropriation bill, and if each appropriation stands on its own particular merit, then I apprehend there is so much merit in this provision that the committee ought to have felt warranted in making this exception, as they sometimes do. As I was stating, the Indians have been benefited by the sale of these lands, particularly the Otoes, whose lands were sold at auction at a much greater rate than that at which the purchasers could have bought land equally as good in that section of the State. So the Indians were benefited by the exceptionally high price of their lands. By reason of the depressed situation of affairs afterward coming upon those people it became impossible for them to make the payment, and as the Indians do not receive the money to make investments themselves, but the Government does that for them, and as there is abundant security and the interest is at a fair rate, there would seem to be no reason why the Committee on Indian Affairs should not assent to this proposition, as I know they feel like protecting the interests of the Indians.

It is true the Committee on Indian Affairs of this body have passed affirmatively and favorably upon the bill introduced for that purpose, and possibly the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House may have done so; but here is a provision, plain, simple in its enactment, of acknowledged merit and propriety, approved by the proper committees probably of both Houses, and which would pass without an opposing vote, perhaps without a suggestion of any opposition.

Mr. MANDERSON. I suggest to my colleague that not only has it that strength, but also that this action is recommended by the Indian Department, by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Yes, sir; it is recommended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and by the Secretary of the Interior. The only difficulty now is that the rules of both Houses are so admirably drawn and so admirably interpreted that a measure which would require no consideration comparatively at the hands of either body can not be allowed to be passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator from Nebraska permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think the Senator from Nebraska seems to be laboring under a wrong impression about the authority of the Committee on Appropriations. I hope we can understand distinctly what right and power that committee has exercised. We have a rule of the Senate which has been interpreted by the presiding officer to mean that no legislation can be ingrafted upon an appropriation bill, that it is not in order, nor can any amendment to general legislation placed upon such a bill by the House be in order in the Senate. We brought before the Senate only a day or two ago that very proposition, and the Senate upon an appeal from the decision of the Chair sustained the interpretation given to that rule by the Chair; and then it turned right around and voted by a yea-and-nay vote to put legislation upon an appropriation bill. The Senate did that.

The Committee on Appropriations, in deference to the standing rule of the Senate and the decision of the Senate as to its interpretation by the presiding officer, has simply recommended the striking out of all the general legislation upon the pending appropriation bill. It is in the power of the Senate to non-concur in the amendments proposed by the Committee on Appropriations. That would bring the question up directly. There are several amendments of the Committee on Appropriations that I am in favor of non-concurring in. If the Senator will simply make the point that this legislation ought to be enacted and is of such a character that it will justify the Senate in setting aside the rule as it did the other day, I believe at the instance of the senior Senator from Kansas, and voting in a general legislative provision, then the whole matter is before the Senate.

The Committee on Appropriations has had nothing to do with it. It is a rule of the Senate entirely, and it is in the power of the Senate now to say that it is proper the provision should be inserted, just as it said the other day that a legislative provision should go on an appropriation bill. The Senate Committee on Appropriations did not decide upon the question of the propriety or impropriety of the legislation which it has proposed to strike out. It so proposed simply in obedience to the rule, leaving it to the Senate to say whether the recommendation of the committee should be concurred in. The Senator can make the point and have a vote taken as to whether this provision shall be stricken out, and that will bring the whole question before the Senate. The Senate has heretofore trampled upon the decision of the presiding officer and the rule of the Senate, and can do it again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Missouri that the pending question before the Senate is, Shall the amendment, striking out the provision, be agreed to? That is the exact question.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand, but I was simply fearing that the Senator from Nebraska was throwing the whole responsibility of its going out upon the Committee on Appropriations when it is upon the Senate. We simply recommended that it be stricken out, in obedience to the rule and the decision of the Senate, and now let the Senate determine the question. The Senate has to confirm all the recommendations of the committee before they become effective. We have simply made that recommendation in obedience to the rule of the Senate and the interpretation of that rule by the presiding officer, and the confirmation of that interpretation by the Senate itself. I want to see the Senate say why in a number of instances it violates the rule, the interpretation of the rule by the presiding officer, and its own decision sustaining that interpretation.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I was endeavoring just at that moment to show—I thank the Senator, however, for his suggestions, because they were in the line of my own idea—the necessity of overriding the action of the Appropriations Committee. I am very glad to know that the Appropriations Committee, cheerfully, of course, defer on such matters to the action of the Senate. Where there is so meritorious a proposition as this, one so germane to the bill, and it is the only mode and manner in which redress can be accomplished, both protecting the Indian and doing justice to the white man, we should not let a technicality stand in the way. This proposition is plainly equitable; it received no opposition in the committee of either House; it has the recommendation of the Indian Department; and yet here in Congress the rules to which my friend has referred, and their construction, are such that this measure can not possibly receive attention and pass into a law. Thus injustice is done to a large class of citizens.

It is on that ground that I desire, and my colleague desires, that the striking out of the provision as to the lands sold for the Omaha Indians and for the Otoes shall not be concurred in as recommended by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I know nothing about the merits of this particular clause which the Senator from Nebraska desires to have remain in the bill; but the action of the committee on this clause brings up the whole question of what the Senate is to do in respect of what is termed general legislation in this Indian appropriation bill. There are a great many clauses in this bill which are called general legislation; but they ought to be passed. There are many claims here which are stricken out by the committee, which are just claims, have been adjudicated by the Interior Department, by the Indian Bureau of the Government, and found to be honest and just, and due to the parties claiming them. I do not see how the Committee on Appropriations could have done otherwise than they have done under the rules of the Senate; but I do think that it would be proper for the Senate to confirm their action in these matters. I do not know how a party who has a valid claim, such as is provided for in this bill, is ever going to get his money unless he gets it upon an Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Why can he not have a bill introduced for his benefit in one House or the other and let it go through regularly as other bills do?

Mr. MILLER, of California. The trouble is that you have a multiplicity of bills and they never get through. The practice of the Senate has been to allow claims of this sort to be paid under an enactment in an Indian appropriation bill. The Senate did so at the last session. There were then about thirty claims similar to these.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. There are probably 5,000 similar claims filed in the Indian Department; and why should these twenty or thirty be selected out from that 5,000 and given the preference which the House appears to have given them by placing them on this bill, simply because those claimants had some particular friends who urged their cases? They are no better than the 10,000 other claims that are pending in the Indian Department.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I do not know about that; I do not know how the Senator knows.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I know it from having examined them.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Have you examined 10,000 claims?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Perhaps the number is a little exaggerated; but I have examined hundreds of them.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I have no doubt it is exaggerated. Nobody has examined all these claims except the Interior Department, and perhaps no claim has found a place in the appropriation bill which has not been gone over very thoroughly and investigated very completely in every phase of it, and where the decision of the Department has not been that a certain amount has been found to be due and should be paid. In the case of the 10,000 claims that the Senator speaks of, they perhaps never have been so thoroughly investigated and adjudicated as these have been. I hope that where there is no question about the justice of a claim it will be allowed to remain on the appropriation bill. It has been the custom of Congress heretofore to do it, and, as I remarked, the Senate committee itself at the last session put on an appropriation bill a large number of these claims and they were adopted by the House. It is unfair to those whose claims have now been put on this bill to have them stricken out merely on a point of order or because there is a rule of the Senate against general legislation. You are breaking that rule constantly. There is no appropriation bill that comes up for the consideration of the Senate where that rule is not violated.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. We keep as close to it as possible.

Mr. MILLER, of California. If you make one exception there is no reason why advantage should be given to the person in whose favor that exception is made over all others. It is unjust and wrong to do it.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. It is equally unjust and wrong that these claimants should have their claims placed on an appropriation bill when there are other claimants equally meritorious and whose claims have been passed upon in the same way by the Secretary of the Interior who are kept off.

Mr. MCMILLAN. And favorably reported by the Senate committee in some instances, and with favorable reports in the House in others.

Mr. HOAR. The precedent of putting this on an appropriation bill is not simply a preference of one over another, but it tends to the result that all the other claims are not considered at all. If this were right to other claimants of their own class, then everybody who had any special interest in claims of this kind would have them taken up and considered together. Now the Committee on Appropriations in the House have an advantage, and everybody else is left out.

Mr. MILLER, of California. There may be some force in that suggestion; but now I happen to know of one claim in this bill for depredations committed in 1861, and the claimant has been at work ever since attempting to get justice, to get his claim through. It was a claim for $30,000. The Department cut it down to $6,000, and now our committee has stricken it out of this bill. I do not know how this man is ever to get his money that everybody concedes is due to him.

Mr. ALLISON. When was that?

Mr. MILLER, of California. In 1861 the depredations were committed, and by this course of action by the Senate and the House in respect to these matters the money due this man has been kept from him and he has not had it. He has not been able to get an item through in an appropriation bill, or in any other way secure the payment of the money. This is unjust; it is wrong. There is no decent and respectable government that can afford to deal in that way with its citizens. We must get at this in some way or other. If we can not do it on an appropriation bill there must be some other method invented.

Mr. ALLISON. We provide for an examination of all these claims.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Yes; but that is nothing more than the re-enactment of the present law. Section 445 of the Revised Statutes requires an examination just as the committee propose here. There is nothing in that. There are reports in the Senate now that I can exhibit to the Senator showing that these claims have been examined and allowed. That is a mere makeshift to put off, to give an excuse for not paying these claimants as the Government ought to pay them. I insist that if these claims are stricken out on the ground that they are general legislation every line of general legislation in the appropriation bill should be stricken out. The committee have put in general legislation in this bill.

Mr. DAWES. Where?

Mr. MILLER, of California. All through it. I shall be able to show it when the details come up, but I do not think the Senate ought to strike out these items when there is no dispute about their justice and correctness. There is no reason for it.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The trouble is right here: these claims get into this general appropriation bill through some sort of favoritism.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I do not know that.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I do know it.

Mr. MILLER, of California. You know more about it than I do; but I do not know that we can jump at the conclusion that it is favoritism. Because there may be twenty claims in this bill and twenty in the bill of last session, I do not see that it follows necessarily that their insertion was due to favoritism. It may be due to vigilance on the part of the claimants. It is certainly no favoritism to pay a man what is due him from the Government.

Mr. MANDERSON. It is admitted by all who have spoken on this question that this is proper legislation. Whether it be general legislation or whether it be legislation germane to this bill, it is conceded that it provides for a righteous act. Now, it seems to me that being such it is proper to place it upon this bill. It can never be wrong to do right; it can not be unjust to do an act of justice.

It is suggested that there is a rule of the Senate that prevents that which we seek to accomplish. The Senate seems to be the victim of its own rule. I submit that although the rule may bind the Committee on Appropriations, it may or may not bind the Senate, and that it may either by direct repeal or change or by indirect action avoid the rule, as it has done it in repeated instances. A few days ago in the pension appropriation bill we are told that general legislation admitted to be fair, right, and just was placed upon that appropriation bill. Now, I submit to the Senate that as this is fair and just the Senate should in this instance follow the latest precedent, and even if it violates the rule do this act of fairness and justice to these parties.

As to the different claimants who are to be relieved by this bill if it shall pass as it came to the Senate, I have simply a word to say in response to the suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin. He says as we can not pay all of these claims, let us pay none. I do not think the Senate would desire to place itself in that position. If there are 5,000 claimants who have just claims against the Indian Bureau or against the different tribes of Indians, let us pay them as we can. If we can not pay them all at one time, pay a few at this session of Congress and take up the other claims at sessions hereafter.

I hope the Senate will refuse to strike out this proviso as recommended by the committee.

Mr. PLUMB. I shall detain the Senate but a moment in stating the theory on which I gave my consent, not only to striking out the legislation which is now under consideration, but also the claims alluded to by the Senator from California.

There is a rule of the Senate that no legislation shall appear upon appropriation bills, and that has been properly construed to mean that the Senate can not amend the House legislation sent to us on such bills, about which we have had abundant discussion recently. The Committee on Appropriations in this condition of things can not exercise their own discretion as to amendments. There is legislation on this bill that the committee would have gladly had remain there with certain amendments which they would have suggested if it had not been for the rule, and therefore that legislation must necessarily go out.

There is other legislation that they did not care to amend; and at the same time there is legislation which the committee itself desired to put on to the bill and legislation which other members of the Senate wanted put on the bill; but if the door were opened by leaving on the House legislation we not only left ourselves in the helpless condition of being required to do precisely what the House sent us without any amendment, but we were constantly confronted with the desire of members of the Senate that legislation in which they were interested should be put on the bill also.

I beg Senators to observe that this is not a very comfortable position to be put in on the part of the committee, to be confronted with legislation sent over from the House which can not be touched, and to be at the same time confronted with legislation which is sought to be put on in the Senate, and by the rule of the Senate also, which provides that there shall be no legislation and no amendment to the House legislation. So the committee said that in view not only of these facts, but of the recent construction of the rule, and of the manifest disposition of the Senate not to be put in the attitude at this late hour of the session of taking from the House legislation which might prove on further examination to be unwise, they would simply strike it all out. When it came to claims, we were confronted by this condition of things, that a cursory examination of the claims put on the bill by the House showed that one of them—it is not necessary to specify it—had been improvidently put on. That is to say, here are claims that in a number of cases were not fully supported by testimony as to amounts at least, and some cases where the amounts were larger than the damages even alleged to have been incurred by the depredations complained of. That made it absolutely necessary, in order that the committee should discharge its duty to the Senate and to itself, that the testimony in every single one of these claims must be carefully and thoroughly examined. How, otherwise, could the committee discharge its duty to the Senate? Were we to take this simply because the House had sent it to us, and especially when a cursory examination of one of the claims disclosed that fact that so glaring an error as the insertion of a wrong amount had occurred.

Then if we were to enter upon the investigation of these claims with the view of letting them remain in the bill and reporting to the Senate that they should remain in the bill with such amendments as to amounts as the testimony might disclose to be proper, we were bound to take up the claims presented by members of the Senate, of which there were a large number before the committee, aggregating some hundreds of thousands of dollars, and give to them similar investigation; and they were accumulating, they were constantly coming in; and the committee could not, if it had been so minded, have given even a cursory examination to these claims inside of a week or ten days. It would have delayed the consideration of this bill until the last days of this session; it might have made necessary an extra session of Congress; and the committee could not, in fairness either to the members of the Senate or in fairness to the public interests, take up items which came from the House without investigation and put those in unless we were ready to do substantially the same thing for amendments proposed by members of the Senate.

We all of us know that in a large number of cases the examination from the very nature of things has only been perfunctory. The statute cited by the Senator from California does contemplate an investigation by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and requires him to transmit his findings to the Speaker of the House of Representatives; but that business is done in connection with a multitude of other business, he having no special fund given to him for the purpose of instituting independent investigations. He can only take such testimony as comes to him, or as is available through the ordinary channels of conducting business in that Department; and necessarily these investigations lack a great deal of giving to the decisions arrived at that verity which ought to exist when money is to be appropriated as a matter of course; and we felt that to enter upon this question now would impose a responsibility of investigation on us, or if not of an investigation then of accepting without investigation and asking the Senate to allow a class of claims among which (whatever might be the merits of others) there was strong reason to believe that there were many of doubtful validity in whole or in part.

The Senator from California speaks with proper indignation of the fact, as he alleges it to be, that a constituent of his has a claim against the General Government for damages by depredations committed by Indians in 1861. That is a long time to wait. I am not in a position to apportion the responsibility, how much to the Government and how much to the claimant himself for not having pressed his claim; but admit that it is all against the Government, and that the Government itself is liable wholly and solely for the delay, it is a hard case; but there are hundreds and thousands of others equally hard; and should it not admonish us all that instead of trying the doubtful chance of getting a claim by some means upon an appropriation bill, where in the very nature of things it can not be investigated as it ought to be, there should be some measure adopted which would take all these claims up and put them in a category where they would go on one bill, or in some way be provided for by appropriations just as certainly as an appropriation is made to carry on the expenses of the Government?

I have been told further that there were some of the claims on this bill which had been reported adversely by the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate; and I see before me a member of that committee, and I will ask him the question whether such is or is not the case?

Mr. JACKSON. If the Senator will permit me, I will say that I think nearly every one of the claims stricken out of this bill was reported adversely by the Committee on Claims at the last session of Congress. Nearly every single one I think was reported adversely.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator mean the items the House put on?

Mr. JACKSON. Yes; very nearly every one of these. I speak of the depredation claims. Nearly every one of these claims for depredations was reported adversely by the Committee on Claims at the last session of Congress. I have run over the list hurriedly, and I think nearly every one has been so reported.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Here is a report from the Secretary of the Interior, Executive Document No. 23, first session Forty-eighth Congress, made December 14, 1883, in which he gives a list of sixty-two claims showing the amounts.

Mr. PLUMB. That enforces what I have said about the improvidence of inserting measures of this kind or claims of this character on an appropriation bill; where they have not undergone such scrutiny no careful person can say whether more or less may not be necessary.

Mr. MANDERSON. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Kansas that I do not understand that the claims rejected by the Committee on Claims, referred to by the Senator from Tennessee, had been rejected because they were considered as fraudulent or wrong, but rather because the attitude of the Senate Committee on Claims has been that no claim resulting from Indian depredations shall be paid by Congress.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not care to go into that. The committee of course can state here the rationale of its own action, but I was going to say that a cursory examination of one of these claims disclosed the fact that the acting Commissioner of Indian Affairs had reported it for a certain sum, and that the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House had taken up the same testimony precisely and reduced the amount nearly 50 per cent. I only speak of that to show that this examination in the Interior Department is necessarily of the most superficial character, and that it will be a most dangerous precedent if any general allowance of these claims upon that investigation shall be entered upon by the Senate or by either branch of Congress.

While I say that, I am as earnest as any one can be in favor of the Government adopting a rule which shall result in the payment of what I regard as justly an obligation against the Government as any other one which it is called upon to respond to. There are millions of dollars, I believe, certainly many hundreds of thousands of dollars, which the Government of the United States owes to claimants all over the country. I have no doubt the case of which the Senator from California speaks is one, to a certain extent at all events; possibly there may be some doubt about the amount; but in all these cases there ought to be a tribunal provided for the ascertainment of the amount due. I introduced a bill years ago, and have reintroduced it, to have an auditing of these claims in order that they might come before Congress not as objects of suspicion, but upon their true footing as genuine existing liabilities against the Government, and having had all the scrutiny that they ought to have preceding their allowance. The Committee on Appropriations, for the purpose of bringing about this result, seized upon an amendment offered to the bill in the House and so reframed it as they believe will result in establishing the validity or invalidity of these claims in such a way that they will not be subject to objection any longer.

Mr. DAWES. Unfortunately two distinct subjects-matter in this bill have been involved in this debate; the first is whether the Senate will go back upon itself in the matter of independent legislation in an appropriation bill; and the next is whether it will turn an appropriation bill into a bill for the payment of private claims. The debate has mixed together those two questions. I have very little to say in reference to them, but what I shall say first is in reference to the question whether this body shall now introduce independent legislation into the bill, and thereupon tie our hands so that we shall take what comes to us without permission to amend or improve it.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] frankly stated his position. There is legislation in the bill which the Senator from Missouri desires to retain, and therefore this innocent and, as I shall show in a moment, entirely unnecessary, independent legislation is put forth to clear the way for more important legislation in the latter part of the bill. I say frankly that there is legislation in the latter part of the bill which to my mind is of the utmost importance and which I have tried to get upon the statute-book for years; but unfortunately there has accidentally crept into it provisions which are unconstitutional and which are in palpable violation of a treaty. Under the rule of the Senate I can not get them out. I can not take the provision as it comes from the House, because it is nullified by a clause which has crept in which is palpably unconstitutional. Much as I desire that legislation, I am bound to stand by the rule of the Senate if it takes it all out, and to stand by the decision of the Committee on Appropriations, following the ruling of the Chair upon the construction of the rules, from which an appeal was taken, and by a large vote the Chair was sustained.

It is true that our friend from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] put forward a very meritorious clause, just as this little innocent clause in reference to the Omahas is put forward, and carried it through, and we can not now call the Senate back to its rule without having that brought up to govern us. If the proposition of the Senator from Nebraska is carried it sweeps away all attempt to keep the bill according to the rules and brings into it legislation which every Senator will say has features in it that the Constitution prohibits, and yet we can not amend it.

As to the legislation involved in the present amendment, I have only to say that it is in and of itself meritorious. It is unnecessary for this reason: The Secretary of the Interior has already stated that these securities are good. He is not obliged to enforce them under a year. These men will obtain without legislation under a fair administration just what they will obtain if they get the measure through. Therefore, although I am in favor of the provision, I do not see any harm to come to these settlers by striking it out. On the other hand, I see great harm to come if it is crowded into the bill and made a precedent.

Now, I wish to say one thing about the private claims that are in this bill. They are what are called depredation claims. They are claims which citizens have made upon Indian tribes, charging that they have destroyed the property of citizens. We passed a law in 1872 providing that wherever we had a treaty obligation with Indians and held their funds, where the Indians had stipulated that they would refund and pay citizens for depredations upon their making application for redress, we would through the Secretary of the Interior examine and ascertain the amount and take it out of their funds. There was a condition in all the treaties that this should be done only when the Indians refused to deliver up for punishment those who committed the depredations. Under that provision there have been filed in the Interior Department thousands of claims against Indians. I have before me a letter of the Secretary of the Interior of date April 9, 1884, in which is one list of 3,143 of these claims and another list of four hundred and odd claims, amounting to about $2,000,000. There are two or three other letters containing other lists, and there are back of them in the Interior Department as many more that have never been brought here, amounting, as the Secretary told us, to between eight and nine million dollars. The basis upon which these claims are made and upon which they have received from time to time approval in the Indian Department is nothing more nor less than affidavits that the claimants have picked up wherever they could and sent on with their claims. The Secretary told us that the rule was to allow no claim that did not have at least two affidavits along with it—a rule promulgated to the entire country that whoever can find in its length and breadth two men to make an affidavit that will go with his claim, his claim shall be allowed.

The money to pay these claims is to be taken out of the funds which we have of the Indians. Many of them are against the Kiowas, and Comanches, and Wichitas. All the fund they have in the world from which to respond is $25,000 a year for twelve years; and yet more than $5,000,000 of claims are now laid away in the Interior Department, of which some dozen or fifteen had friends enough in the House of Representatives to bring them into this bill and upon which the House proposes to pay 15 per cent. You get a dozen or fifteen of those claims through and you swallow up all the funds that there are of the Indians, and then cast the claims of the others upon the Treasury of the United States. Among them all, with one single exception so far as I have examined them, there is not the pretense of any evidence that the Indians have refused to deliver up those who were guilty of the depredation, which is in all the treaties made a condition precedent to making a claim upon their funds. That seems to have been largely overlooked in all these cases.

Instead of committing the United States to the payment of particular claims by paying 15 per cent. upon them and letting all this vast amount remain back waiting for that provision to go through, the Committee on Appropriations have proposed, on page 47 of the bill, this amendment, which I beg leave to read:

For the investigation of certain Indian depredation claims, $10,000; and in expending said sum the Secretary of the Interior shall cause a complete list of all claims heretofore filed in the Interior Department and which have been approved in whole or in part and now remain unpaid, and also all such claims as are pending but not yet examined, on behalf of citizens of the United States on account of depredations committed, chargeable against any tribe of Indians by reason of any treaty between such tribe and the United States, including the name and address of the claimants, the date of the alleged depredations, by what tribe committed, the date of examination and approval, with a reference to the date and clause of the treaty creating the obligation for payment, to be made and presented to Congress at its next regular session; and the Secretary is authorized and empowered, before making such report, to cause such additional investigation to be made and such further testimony to be taken as he may deem necessary to enable him to determine the kind and value of all property damaged or destroyed by reason of the depredations aforesaid, and by what tribe such depredations were committed; and his report shall include his determination upon each claim, together with the names and residences of witnesses and the testimony of each, and also what funds are now existing or to be derived by reason of treaty or other obligation out of which the same should be paid.

Mr. MANDERSON. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. DAWES. Certainly.

Mr. MANDERSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether in his opinion the paragraph he has just read, constituting to a certain extent a tribunal for the investigation of these claims and providing for a finding on them, is not in the nature of general legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. DAWES. My answer to that is this: The tribunal is created by law already. The duty of the Secretary of the Interior in this respect is prescribed by law, and he is only directed to expend $10,000, which we appropriate, in the manner in which we direct. We ask him to do nothing else, but in carrying out existing law we give him $10,000 to expend in a particular way.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if the provision he has read is anything more than a mere amendment to section 445 of the Revised Statutes. Under that section the Secretary of the Interior has been making from year to year precisely such reports as are prescribed in the clause which the Senator has read, except that by the amendment there are a few additions, a few other things that he is to report. One is in what treaty the obligation is contained to pay the money.

Mr. DAWES. Then the Senator differs from the Senator from Nebraska, for he says it is just like what is in the statute.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I say it is general legislation, because it is an amendment to an existing law. It is just like what is in the statute with something more added to it.

Mr. DAWES. "Sufficient for the day is the evil thereof." It will be time enough to jump the stile when we get to it.

Mr. MILLER, of California. We shall get to it surely.

Mr. DAWES. This is what is proposed by the committee instead of embarking upon the boundless and bottomless sea that is suggested by the provisions which we proposed to strike out. What is the Government going to do when a dozen of these claims shall have been by this process passed, and all the funds of the Indians taken to pay them? Then we have got to support the Indians, and we have got to pay out of the Treasury the rest of the claims.

The Secretary of the Interior is required to pass upon these claims. He has passed upon them in the past in the manner which I have suggested. He has not had the money to send anybody into the Territories where it has been alleged that these depredations have been made. He has the power under the statute, but he has not had the money; he has had no men that he could pay for that purpose. Therefore, whenever a man sent his claim up here or referred it to the agent of the tribe, when the agent of the tribe got the affidavits furnished by the claimant and sent them up here, without any hearing or cross-examination whatever, the Secretary of the Interior has written "approved;" and the claims come to Congress, 3,100 of them in a single letter, amounting to more than a million and a half dollars, and a dozen of them were put upon a single page in this bill by the other branch with a stipulation that only 15 per cent. should be paid. Fifteen per cent. of them would take twice as much as the very Indians upon whom they are charged have got in the Treasury; and we are called upon in this bill, independent of that, to appropriate some $25,000 to support and feed these very Indians.

I submit that the safest way is the one proposed by the Committee on Appropriations, and that any other way is unsafe, unfair to other claimants, invidious, unjust, and groundless discrimination in favor of these claims. So as to this and as to all other provisions, the safest way is to follow what the Committee on Appropriations has been obliged to follow, the rule of the Senate.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I wish to say just a word more in regard to this matter. I regret very much that the discussion has drifted so widely from the proposition upon which the vote is to be taken, and I trust there will be no confusion or prejudice by reason of suggestions which have been made against the depredation claims. My friend from Massachusetts makes an earnest appeal to the Senate that they shall refuse absolutely to allow what he chooses to call, and probably it may be so, legislation upon an appropriation bill. He does not feel it safe that the Senate should be trusted or that the committee should be trusted to properly discriminate as to those matters which may be of dispute, as these claims may be, or as to those claims which are without any question. The Senator says that legislation from the House must be accepted as an entirety; that we have no power to strike out or add thereto. Do I understand him correctly?

Mr. DAWES. Under our rules.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Under our rules—not the rules of the House, but under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. DAWES. We do not propose to strike out under the rules of the House; we propose to strike out under our rules.

Mr. VAN WYCK. But would it not be just a little sensible to make our rules in conformity, so that some legislation may be had and some relief granted, as it ought to be? Would not that be a sensible thing to do, rather than to stand stubbornly and refuse to permit the proposed enactment?

Mr. DAWES. But you can not make any amendment to the rules in an appropriation bill.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Precisely; but you wage a war over this thing session after session. We grapple with this matter session after session and relief is denied, justice is refused because there is an antagonism of rules and practice between the two bodies when they are supposed to be bodies working for a result.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator from Massachusetts does not do it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. No; but the body does it, the Senate does it, or at least the committee of which he is a member. There would seem to be no necessity for refusing any discrimination, for making this an iron rule, as the Senator desires it to be, and yet by the action of his own committee he discards the idea, as in the pension bill, that it shall be so because his own committee, as I understand, deviated there from this rule of the Senate. The committee have certainly found some way of striking out and adding the clause which the Senator read in regard to Indian depredation claims where a tribunal is proposed to be established to examine and to investigate. The House made one proposition in regard to that matter. The committee have stricken that out and added that which the Senator read; so that even under the rules of the Senate the committee have found authority to strike out some new legislation and add other new legislation in its place.

That is what has been done by the committee, and yet the Senator appeals to the Senate to vote in obedience to a rule which in the pension appropriation bill was violated, and which the committee have violated in the very bill now before us.

My friend says this is not legislation. It is as much legislation as is what is proposed in the case of the lands sold for the Omaha and Otoe Indians, to extend the time of payment one year. The provision introduced by the committee authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to do certain things. It gives him authority that he may examine witnesses, that he may cause them to testify, that he make his report. That you do in this bill. You give him authority which he does not now by law possess. Will not the Senator from Massachusetts admit that by that amendment he proposes to give the Secretary of the Interior authority which he does not now possess?

Mr. ALLISON. It is under a section of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. DAWES. I did not hear the inquiry.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Let me repeat. By the clause which the Senator read in regard to Indian depredation claims, he proposes to give the Secretary of the Interior authority which he does not now possess.

Mr. DAWES. He has the authority by statute.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I say by the amendment proposed to this bill you give him authority to do things which he is not now authorized to do. You provide how he shall do them. All that is proposed in regard to the Otoe and Omaha Indians is to give the Secretary of the Interior a discretionary power to extend the time of payment for their lands, just as you clothe him with the power and give him the authority to examine witnesses and make reports to this body. That is all that is asked in this case.

I trust the Senate will separate the proposition in regard to the Omaha and Otoe Indians from the depredation claims, and that the former will not be prejudiced, because in that case, as the Senator admits, there is no question as to its merit, no question as to its equity if it could be reached for action in this body and in the other House.

But the Senator says that the settlers are safe in any event. True, I do not believe the Secretary of the Interior would immediately disturb them, but my friend can not be responsible for what may be the opinion of the next Secretary of the Interior who may come in power. There is the difficulty in regard to this matter; and it is due to the men who ought to have this protection that they shall be placed in a position where they will not be harried and tortured for a year to come, not knowing when the Department in Washington may jump down upon them or when other persons may urge and instigate the Department to do it. I submit that it is due to those people that they should have this measure of justice given to them, and it is not such a violation of the rules of this body as should exclude it from the present bill. There is no question as to its propriety and as to its justice, and the rule is not such a one as ought to prevent this body from doing the only thing that can be done to reach the matter proposed. Independent legislation is out of the question at this session; and I was in hopes that my friend would see that it was so eminently just that no question ought to be raised in the committee or in the Senate to its consideration.

Mr. COKE. I think, Mr. President, that a proper measure of justice to the claimants who have suffered from Indian depredations would suggest to the committee and to the Senate that the claims which have been investigated under acts of Congress prescribing the mode and manner of their investigation, which are on file in the Interior Department, and have been reported to Congress by the Secretary of the Interior, approved by him as just and honest claims, should be embraced in this bill, and appropriations made to pay them. The committee propose by their amendment that they shall be reinvestigated. Why reinvestigate claims which have already been fully investigated? We must presume that they have been fully investigated, because the Secretary of the Interior, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the agents and superintendents over the Indians, all had authority to make the investigations, to summon witnesses and take depositions, and upon their investigation, presumably correctly made, the Secretary of the Interior has reported a large number of these claims, belonging chiefly in Kansas, Colorado, and Texas, as just and approved by him.

The committee now propose to reinvestigate those claims after a lapse of from fifteen to twenty years, when all the testimony has gone, possibly when the facts upon which the claims are founded are necessarily obscured from loss of testimony and death of witnesses. There is no justice in such a course.

The people of the frontier States knew that they had no recourse against the Indians, except what Congress gave them, and Congress in the acts to which I have referred prescribed certain methods which they have pursued. They submitted themselves fully to the jurisdiction prescribed; and now, after their claims have been approved by the tribunal appointed by Congress, their witnesses dead or scattered, they are to be called upon to again come forward and resubstantiate the same claims already adjudicated and on file in the Department and reported approved to Congress.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator does not quite comprehend the force of the provision which the committee suggests. Where the Secretary of the Interior is satisfied that the full facts of the case are presented he is not required to reopen any case unless his own judgment suggests it. He is not authorized or required by the provision to reverse any previous judgment, but he is required by it, if he deems the investigation to have been insufficient so that he can determine, to pursue such further investigation as he shall deem just, and then report it all here so that we may see what it is.

Mr. COKE. After a lapse of from fifteen to twenty years the Secretary of the Interior who now holds that office is to review the action of his predecessor before whom all the facts in their freshness were proved. That is the meaning of the amendment.

Mr. MILLER, of California. If the Senator from Texas will allow me, I will read the statute which requires the Secretary of the Interior to make investigation.

Mr. COKE. Certainly. Having been frequently referred to in the debate, I supposed the statutes had been read.

Mr. MILLER, of California. It is section 466 of the Revised Statutes, and reads as follows:

SEC. 466. The Secretary of the Interior shall prepare and cause to be published such regulations as he may deem proper, prescribing the manner of presenting claims arising under laws or treaty stipulations, for compensation for depredations committed by the Indians, and the degree and character of the evidence necessary to support such claims; he shall carefully investigate all such claims as may be presented, subject to the regulations prepared by him; and no payment on account of any such claims shall be made without a specific appropriation therefor by Congress.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the date of that?

Mr. MILLER, of California. May 29, 1872. Section 445 of the Revised Statutes, which was also passed in 1872, reads as follows:

SEC. 445. The Secretary of the Interior shall make annual reports to Congress, as follows:

First. A report showing the nature, character, and amount of all claims presented to him during the preceding year under laws or treaty stipulations for compensation for depredations committed by Indians, whether allowed by him or not, and the evidence upon which his action was based.

Second. A report showing the quantity and kind of the copies of public journals, books, and documents which have been received by him for distribution on behalf of the Government, and showing also the time when, the place where, and the person to whom, any of the same have been distributed and delivered during the preceding year.

The Secretary of the Interior has been making these reports. I have one in my hand, the last one he made.

Mr. COKE. I understand that. I will read in addition section 2157, which provides that—

The superintendents, agents, and subagents within their respective districts are authorized and empowered to take depositions of witnesses touching any depredations, within the purview of the three preceding sections, and to administer oaths to the deponents.

The three preceding sections referred to are 2154, 2155, and 2156, on this subject. Now the committee proposes that the action of the Secretaries of the Interior, with all the testimony and all the facts fresh before them, shall after the lapse of fifteen or twenty years be reviewed when all the testimony is presumably or nearly all of it gone, scattered, and destroyed. I say that is unjust.

I know something about these claims for Indian depredations. I know that the frontier of Texas was at one time driven back seventy-five miles by hostile Indians from the Fort Sill reservation, where they were under the care and control and management and protection of the Government of the United States. The people of Texas dared not go upon that reservation to retaliate. They could have gone there and wiped out the Indians, but the United States Government protected them. Whenever a full moon shone at night they came down upon Texas, drove off cattle and horses, burned houses and killed and scalped men, and carried women and children into captivity. I know that this was the case for five years, and Mr. Francis A. Walker, who was Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in his book upon the Indian problem, speaking of the improvement of the Indians, of their methods, and of their beginning to acquire property, said of the Comanches and Kiowas that they have some 16,000 head of horses and mules, stolen chiefly from Texas. That is a statement in the History of the Indian Problem, by Mr. Francis A. Walker.

I have no doubt that the same experience was realized by all the other frontier States. I have personal knowledge of the fact that until the State of Texas organized a battalion of State troops and sent them to the frontier and protected the settlers against the Indians, the frontier was almost abandoned. I know hundreds and hundreds of men in Texas who had thousands of head of cattle and hundreds of head of horses, who lost every dollar's worth of property they had by the depredations of those Indians. Yet the Senator from Massachusetts would cast an imputation upon the justice of these claims, examined and approved as they have been.

Not one claim in twenty has been filed that could have been filed in the Interior Department from Texas. It is too late to file them now; the parties can not comply with the law; they are excluded. Those which are filed represent a very small proportion of the claims which ought to have been filed by people who lost nearly everything they had by the depredations of Indians. The requirements of the law were so onerous and the people were so hopeless of recovering any of their losses that but few of them ever attempted it. The principal difficulty was to identify the Indians or the tribe to which they belonged, without which the law promised no relief, and which could rarely be done.

Mr. President, I believe that these claims which have been reported to the Interior Department and which have been investigated and have been approved by the tribunal appointed by the Government of the United States are just claims and ought to be paid. I believe the committee should take every one of these claims and put them on this appropriation bill. The Government of the United States is as justly and honestly bound to see those claims paid as it is to see any bond it has ever issued paid. The Indians are the wards of the Government. There has been no time when the people could not have protected themselves had they been permitted to do it, and failing to restrain them the Government made itself responsible for the depredations of the Indians. This responsibility has many times been recognized by the Government, as I propose on another occasion to show.

As the Senate Committee on Appropriations determined that they would not appropriate the money now to pay these claims, that they would not put these claims thus approved and reported upon this bill, then I believe the next best thing for them to do was, as the committee has done, require a full report of all these claims to be made to Congress at the next session, and when this report comes in and we see what they all amount to I shall favor, and I believe that the honor of the Government will require, that Congress shall take steps to liquidate them at once. I do not see why those who have honest claims for Indian depredations should be sneered at. They are the pioneers of the country. They have gone westward until we have no frontier left, blazing the way for settlement and civilization.

Mr. DAWES. If it will not interrupt the Senator too much, I should like to call his attention to this view of the subject: The committee have not said anything against the claims themselves. They have not said that any one of these claimants has not suffered from an unjustifiable depredation on his property. The Senator is aware that it is pretty difficult to ascertain the just amount due for that kind of depredation; but one point I want the Senator to consider. I want to know if he holds "first come, first served" in this matter.

Mr. COKE. I answer the Senator from Massachusetts in this way, that if all the reported and approved claims could not be put on the bill, I believe the next best thing to do was what the committee has done.

Mr. DAWES. Exactly.

Mr. COKE. I believe they ought all to have gone on the bill.

Mr. DAWES. Now, I want to call the Senator's attention to a report of the Secretary made January 9, 1875, of four hundred and fifty claims, amounting to $4,700,179.30, reported in 1875. The three thousand that I called attention to have all occurred since. Another question I should like to have him answer——

Mr. COKE. What question is it that the Senator propounded to me last?

Mr. DAWES. The question is if he holds to "first come, first served?" If so, then I think these that were reported in 1875——

Mr. COKE. I think they all ought to be served together in the same bill.

Mr. DAWES. I think they all ought to be served alike.

Mr. COKE. But if the committee would not do that in this bill, I think it best to adopt the amendment the committee has reported, so that we can have them all before us at the next session of Congress.

Mr. DAWES. I agree with the Senator, and if that is the Senator's argument he is on my side. But I wanted to call his attention to another difficulty which the committee did not see how they could get around, and that was this: The moment the funds were exhausted that the Indians had in the Treasury, what were we to do then? They would be exhausted by the first dozen of these claims, and what are we going to do with the rest?

Mr. COKE. I would pay the last dollar of them out of the Treasury of the United States after exhausting what the Indians have, because, as the testimony taken by the Secretary of the Interior and the Indian agents conclusively proves, these people have lost these amounts by the action of the Indians who were and are under the control and guardianship and protection of the Government of the United States, and I do hold that the circumstances are such as makes it the bounden and honorable duty of the Government of the United States to see these people reimbursed their losses. The Government has repeatedly, as I can show, recognized this liability, and paid millions of dollars in satisfaction of claims for Indian depredations.

These claims have been standing here a long time, ten or fifteen years, and many of them twenty years. There is no interest accruing, for the Government never pays interest. The claims are just and have been adjudicated to be just. I do not believe that technical objection ought to be made to them. The class of people to whom they are due are meritorious people; they are the people who have extended our conquest over the wilderness until the frontier no longer exists and the country is settled behind them. They are entitled to consideration from the Government; certainly to justice.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, I certainly quite agree with the suggestions made by the Senator from Texas in regard to the duty of the Government to pay those who have suffered loss on the frontier of the country by reason of Indian depredations, and I wish to supplement his suggestion as to the claims mentioned in this bill, in that part of the bill which has already been stricken out by the action of the committee, by reading from a report of the Committee on Claims. It was stated by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. JACKSON] that the claims presented in this bill had been reported adversely by the committee. That statement is truthful; but it does not tell all the truth. The inference might follow that these claims were rejected because of lack of merit, for fraud, or because the parties had not suffered the losses they pretended to have suffered; but that is not the finding of the committee. The Committee on Claims, following the action of the Interior Department, reports as to these claims, and I read from the report:

The claimants are all citizens of Texas, generally engaged in agriculture or stock-raising, quietly and peaceably pursuing their avocations, having nothing to do with trade or traffic with the Indians, and in no way connected with any disturbance between whites and Indians there or elsewhere. They were all citizens of the State of Texas, and while engaged in peaceful pursuits were set upon by bands of Indians (who were supposed to be under the restraint and control of the Government, on their reservations), their stock stampeded and driven off, and other property destroyed or carried away, and in many cases their herders killed or wounded. They have, as the evidence shows, at all times refrained from any violation of law by taking the remedy into their own hands and giving blow for blow, but have, in compliance with the laws which Congress has from time to time passed for their protection and indemnity, made out their claims, supported them by ample proof, both as to quantity and value, and have presented them to the officers designated by the Government to examine into their justness and the truthfulness of their statements; and those officers, after having sent the claims to the agents of the different tribes to be presented to the Indians for their statements in regard to them, and after hearing the reports of those agents and making a careful examination of the proofs offered by the claimants, have allowed them the various sums for payment of which the claimants now ask an appropriation by Congress."

So that these claims have not been allowed by the Department of the Interior upon mere ex parte affidavits, but upon full investigation and with a chance to the Indians themselves, through their agents, to be heard.

They are taken up in this report, and although the committee recognizes their merit and the obligation upon the Government to pay this class of claims, it does report adversely to them, as suggested by the Senator from Tennessee, in this language:

As stated in your committee's report upon the claim of Overton and Love, there are a large number of these claims, equally meritorious, on file in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. No good reason can be given for paying the claims under consideration without paying them all. This committee can not recommend the passage of such claims until Congress adopts some general policy of dealing with all these claims.

I admit that the suggestion of the committee is a wise one. All of these claims should be dealt with, but year after year rolls by and they are not paid. In my own State I know of existing claims, as valid and as meritorious as those that are stated in this report, that are nearly a quarter of a century old, for depredations committed by Indians upon frontiersmen who were invited by the Government to go upon Government land, and these men driven from their lands, their homes destroyed, and in frequent instances members of their families killed or treated worse by Indian depredators, remain with their serious losses yet unpaid.

I submit, Mr. President, that it is a crying shame that these claims have not been paid. If we can not pay them as a whole let us pay a part of them. It is but common justice that is asked. But I regret that the inoffensive provision on page 27 of this bill that I desire to retain in it should have been hampered by a discussion with reference to the claims. It is suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts that the committee is pursuing a proper course in making the recommendation that it does upon page 47 of the bill. If there is anything that I have had occasion to admire since I have had the honor of being a member of this body, it is the uniform consistency of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES]; but it does seem to me that he is guilty of rather gross inconsistency when he seeks to strike out the proviso on page 27 of the bill on the ground that it is general legislation coming from the House and placed upon an appropriation bill, and at the same time takes the provision on page 47 that is submitted by the House and changes its character.

Now let us look for a moment at the provision as it comes from the House. It is under the head of "Ute Indians" or "Utes;" but I submit that it does not apply to the Utes any more than it does to any other of the Indian tribes. It is a proposition in this bill which is entitled to provide "appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes." Upon it is this general provision by the House to give to the Secretary of the Interior the power to prepare "a complete and accurate list of all approved and pending claims of citizens on account of depredations of Indians, chargeable against any treaty funds of Indians." The Senator from Massachusetts may suggest that this is properly within this bill because it is proposed to pay the claims thus reported.

Mr. DAWES. It is not necessary for me to aid the Senator in showing my inconsistency, but I can tell him how he can do it better than this, and that would be not by taking this bill, but by showing what there is in this provision that is in conflict with existing law.

Mr. MANDERSON. I submit that it does add to existing law. The provision as it comes from the House provides for the payment of that which may be found due from the treaty funds of the Indians, and I submit that the Committee on Appropriations in reporting this new section under the head of "Indian depredation claims" permits these depredations to be paid not only from the treaty funds, but from any other obligations of the Government to the Indians or any Indian funds in the Treasury.

Mr. DAWES. My inconsistency does not lie in the provision in the bill, but lies in the conflict of this amendment with the existing law, not the existing bill.

Mr. MANDERSON. The Senator from Massachusetts agrees with me as to the result; that is his inconsistency. I do not see that we need quarrel over the paths by which we arrive at the same result.

Mr. DAWES. I was afraid the Senator would fail, and therefore I suggested to him that the better way to show my inconsistency was to take the law in one hand and the amendment in the other, and not take the bill in one hand and the amendment in the other.

Mr. MANDERSON. I appreciate the kindness shown by the Senator from Massachusetts, and will try not to fail in showing the inconsistencies complained of, and will succeed in showing that this proviso to which I am referring and which he says is a most righteous provision in law should be retained in this appropriation bill. I do not wish to be understood as taking issue with the Senator from Massachusetts upon the wisdom of the provision that is reported by the Committee on Appropriations, on page 47, as to constituting a tribunal, or, if you please, extending the power of a tribunal already existing, for the examination and determination of these claims; although I am clearly of the opinion that this is as much general legislation as that which is provided on page 27 in the form of a proviso. I am for retaining it.

In other words, Mr. President, while I am willing to see this Senate rule, that seems to be a stumbling-block in our road, maintained for certain purposes, for other purposes most just and right in their relations and results I am in favor of stretching the rule somewhat. The Senate seems to be of that opinion also; for, as has been repeatedly suggested, appropriation bills come here not only at this session, but at former sessions of the Senate, and notwithstanding the rule, proper and just provisions, constituting general legislation, have been pressed upon such appropriation bills. I hope the Senate will not confound the question now before it with the matter of the allowance of Indian claims or the matter of constituting a tribunal for the trial of claims for Indian depredations.

All that is sought by this provision is to extend the time of payment under the control of the Interior Department and by the consent of the Indians for the back payments upon the lands of the Omaha Indians that have been sold heretofore. The committee agree, the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs admits, that this is a righteous and proper provision, and I hope the Senate will retain it.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, the general plan for efficient and prompt settlement of outstanding claims proposed by the Committee on Appropriations I think is wise; but I submit to that committee and to the Senate whether there is any reason why, because they propose to adopt that plan, the claims which have been allowed by the House and which come to us as approved claims shall be stricken out of the bill. In other words, the law has always favored the vigilant. If gentlemen who have claims have gone to the labor and the expense of gathering up their testimony, of laying it before the Secretary of the Interior, of having their claims examined and approved and recommended to Congress and Congress in its wisdom allows those claims and the bill comes to us with those claims thus allowed, I ask if there is any reason or propriety in striking out all the claims allowed, as found on pages 8, 9, 10, &c., of the bill which comes to us from the House, simply because a provision is made by the Appropriations Committee for a general settlement of all such claims? If the claims which are allowed are just in themselves, and the Senator in charge of this bill does not gainsay that proposition; if they are right why should they be struck out in order to take their place under the general plan of settlement when they have already been examined and approved and allowed by the proper committee of the House as just and proper claims? I can, therefore, see no reason why these claims shall be stricken out, nor do I see any conflict between the claims which are allowed by the House standing as a part of this bill and the proviso which is put in by the Appropriations Committee of the Senate in respect to those claims which are not as yet allowed or have not been sent up by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. President, it is to the interest of the Republic that there be an end of litigation, and if these men have had claims litigated and passed upon and they have been allowed by the House, why should they be stricken out of the bill by the Senate? It is not pretended that they are not just claims. If there was a shadow of suspicion cast on the claims there would be some reason in that, but there is none. They are admitted to be just, they are admitted to be right, but they are simply stricken out because they may conflict with the plan proposed for future settlements. These claims having been already settled, why should they be relegated to the future to be settled then? I can not see any reason for that. It does not seem to me to be a fair proposition.

I happen to know the fact that the Congress of the United States has already allowed many claims of this class by special bill. The Senate passed one on my own motion where Big Tree and other Indians took a train of wagons which were loaded down with supplies for the United States Army under a contract with the Quartermaster-General. The train was attacked, the teamsters were killed, one of them tied to the wheel of a wagon and the wagon destroyed. That on presentation was allowed by an act of Congress. So there has been all along claim after claim that has been allowed.

The men who own the claims provided for in the bill prosecuted them to a final settlement so far as the House is concerned, and the Senate committee gives no reason why they should be stricken out; on the contrary admits that they are just and proper. The provision made by the Senate Appropriations Committee as to claims not yet allowed and approved may be left in full force, and it would be equally effective if these claims were not stricken out. I think the Senate should nonconcur in the action of the committee in striking out the claims already allowed.

Mr. MILLER, of California. The Senator from Massachusetts, as I understood him, threw out a sort of challenge to the Senator from Nebraska to show inconsistency in striking out the matter on page 27, which the Senator from Nebraska contends ought to be left in the bill, and putting in the matter contained on page 47. The Senator from Massachusetts seems to be under the impression that there is no new legislation in the clause which the committee propose to insert on page 47, that it does not differ at all from the existing law. It does, I think, differ from the existing law in two or three particulars. One is that it requires a reinvestigation of certain Indian claims. That is new. In making his report he is required to report many things here which he is not required now by law to report.

Mr. DAWES. There is a standing law that requires him to report to us anything that we ask him to.

Mr. MILLER, of California. But you have not asked him to report the things which you require him to report in this amendment.

Mr. DAWES. Even the Senate, without a law, could require him to do it.

Mr. MILLER, of California. The existing law requires him to report certain things, but you have added in this provision that he shall report not only his determination upon each claim, but the name and residence of the witnesses, and report the testimony of each.

Mr. DAWES. Suppose that was not in the bill, and I should get up and offer a resolution in the Senate directing the Secretary of the Interior to report the names and residences of the witnesses in these claims?

Mr. MILLER, of California. You can do that by resolution, but you can not get it on an appropriation bill under the rule that we are struggling under here.

Mr. DAWES. I have the authority for requiring him to do so, in the law that created his Department.

Mr. INGALLS (to Mr. MILLER, of California). Raise the point of order on it.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I do not want to raise the point of order on that amendment, because I think it is a good provision, but it is no better than other provisions in this bill which are new matter. It is new legislation. There is not so good reason for putting this in as there is for retaining the provision the Senators from Nebraska desire to have retained. There is the inconsistency of the Committee on Appropriations or of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs. He wants to strike out something which he calls new legislation which he does not like, and which the Senators from Nebraska do like, and he wants to put something in which is new legislation which he himself does like, and perhaps which we shall all agree to. That is the state of the case precisely.

Mr. DAWES. You do not do me justice. I like this provision.

Mr. MILLER, of California. The question here ought to be whether the legislation is just and proper.

Mr. MANDERSON. The statement of the Senator from Massachusetts is that he likes this provision and that we all like it. The difficulty is he will not take it.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Let us keep it in. If it is good and just legislation, let not a technical rule of this body stand between the citizen and justice. Let us do right, whether the rules permit it or forbid it.

Now in respect to the depredation claims, the Senator from Massachusetts seems to argue that because we can not pay all these claims now, whether they have been adjudicated or not, we must not pay any, and then he reads off a list of 2,100 claims and complains that the list has grown so large. He objects to it on account of its magnitude. When will there ever be an end to this thing? If you never pay these claims the number will increase constantly from year to year. It is no argument to say that because by the delay of the Government the number of claims has reached an enormous magnitude no claims shall be paid. There is no sense in an argument of that sort.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator forgets that we have declared by law that we will not pay these claims out of the Treasury. We are only to pay them out of certain funds. If the funds are not there, how are we to pay them?

Mr. MILLER, of California. In the great majority of the claims included in this bill there are funds in the hands of the Government belonging to the Indians or which are to be paid to the Indians, out of which the depredation claims can be paid. If there are any cases where there are no such funds, then let the committee discriminate between such claims and strike them out for that reason, if that is proper. But when there are funds out of which they can be paid, the claims having been adjudicated and being just, there is no reason why they should not be paid and no reason why they should not be appropriated for in an appropriation bill.

Mr. MANDERSON. If the Senator from California will allow me, I desire to call his attention to the difference in the language of the section proposed by the Committee on Appropriations and that which is stricken out as it came from the House. In the one the funds from which these depredation claims are to be paid are simply treaty funds in the hands of the Government, but the language of the proposed change is that the Secretary of the Interior shall report also "what funds are now existing or to be derived by reason of treaty or other obligation out of which the same should be paid." I submit that if there are funds in the hands of the Treasury officers derived from the sale of Indian lands, that is an obligation from which these depredations could be paid.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Unquestionably.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Nebraska forgets that in 1874 we passed a law that there should be no more treaties, but that hereafter when we dealt with the Indians it should be by a statute and not by a treaty, thus making an agreement ratified by both Houses of Congress, and that is why we change the phraseology. The Senator shows a difference between the committee amendment and the original text of the bill. The merit of the amendment does not lie in the fact that it is just like the matter to be stricken out; the merit, if anything, is that it is different.

Mr. MANDERSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts one question. Suppose there were funds in the hands of the Government derived from the sale of lands belonging to the Indians, would the obligation on the part of the Government to pay over that money to the Indian tribe be one out of which the Government could pay these depredation claims under this proposed change?

Mr. DAWES. I answer the Senator by saying that I could tell better if he would let that amendment be adopted, and we get a report from the Secretary of the Interior upon the subject.

Mr. MILLER, of California. What I object to is this practice of the Government of the United States, which is unbecoming a great government, interposing technical objections to shilly-shally around and put off payment in the manner of a bankrupt debtor or a man who is not disposed to pay his debts. That is the position in which the Committee on Appropriations to-day are putting the Government of the United States in relation to the citizens who hold these claims. That there is an obligation to pay these claims out of the funds held in trust by the Government belonging to the Indians, there can be no doubt; but the Committee on Appropriations or the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs who has charge of this bill seems to desire to put off the payment continually. It is so year after year. This process has been going on for a great many years, and when we are confronted by the condition of things, then we invent some new scheme, some new plan by which these claims shall be put off; we have not got the report we want, or there is something lacking, and a man who has vigilantly prosecuted his claim and has had it adjudicated, and the amount found due shall not be paid because somebody who has not used the time diligently and whose claim has not been adjudicated is not paid, and that furnishes a reason why the man who has a just claim which has been adjudicated shall not be paid. That seems to me a strange position to take. I can not see why when a claim is adjudicated and found to be due this great Government should desire to put off the day of payment, and to bring up technical and other objections to avoid the payment.

Mr. MAXEY. I wish to suggest to the Senator from California, in the line of his own argument, that each one of these claims stands on its own merits; and if a claim has been properly examined and approved and comes here it would be unjust not to pay it, because the applicant is lying out of the use of his money and it is no fault of his that other men have not got their claims up. You are charging him with the fault or negligence of other people.

Mr. MILLER, of California. That is very true. The Senator from Texas has made a very clear statement of the case. I am in favor of retaining the provision which the Senator from Nebraska desires shall be retained on page 27, because I believe it is right. I am in favor of retaining in this bill every claim which has been adjudicated and upon which there is no dispute, because I believe that is right. I am in favor of the provision which the Committee on Appropriations have put in with regard to the investigation of Indian claims, because I believe that is right; but it is new legislation, a part of it at least, just as much as the matter on page 27 is new and general legislation.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Will the Senator allow me to ask a question? The Senator says that he is in favor of paying all the claims for Indian depredations in this bill——

Mr. MILLER, of California. All that are just.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. If they have been adjudicated by the Interior Department. I ask if he is in favor of including in this bill all other claims for Indian depredations which have been adjudicated by the Interior Department?

Mr. MILLER, of California. If there are funds out of which they can be paid, existing treaty funds or any other funds belonging to the Indians that the Government holds in trust.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Practically it does not make much difference whether we pay them out of treaty funds, as the Senator calls them, belonging to the Indians, or out of the general fund of the United States, because if they are paid out of the treaty funds those funds will be exhausted, and after they are exhausted the Indians will have to be supported out of the general fund belonging to the Government.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I will go further and say that I am in favor of paying all just and adjudicated claims of this class out of the Treasury. I believe it is incumbent on the Government to do it. The law was once that the Government was required to pay such claims. It was afterward amended so that the payment should be made out of funds belonging to the Indians. To refuse to pay these claims, to allow the Indians to commit depredations without their being required to pay or the Government being required to pay the resulting damages to property, is only to encourage Indian depredations and to continue the practice. If a white citizen of the United States commits a depredation on the Indians he must pay double the amount of the damage sustained by the Indians. I want to see Indian depredations stopped, and I do not know any better way than to require payment. The Government is bound to furnish protection to its citizens. I do not want the citizen to be paid more than he has actually suffered. I want the claim to be just; I want it investigated thoroughly and completely and adjudicated in every phase of it before payment is made. I contend in these cases, or in some of them that I have personal knowledge of at any rate, there has been such an investigation and such an adjudication, and there remains no doubt about the bona fides or justice of the claims.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I will ask the Senator the question whether or not he is of the opinion that the Government of the United States is under obligation, legal or equitable or moral, to pay the damages that result to citizens of the United States from Indian depredations, whether there is any treaty stipulation or not?

Mr. MILLER, of California. In certain cases perhaps not, but in the majority of cases yes. The citizen settles upon Government land under our existing land laws.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. But he goes there at his own risk. The Government does not agree to protect him against foreign foes, as the Indians are recognized to be.

Mr. MILLER, of California. The Government is under an obligation as it represents the citizen himself or the citizens in the aggregate to protect them, and it takes upon itself the duty of protection. Then the Government is bound to protect them or pay them if they are damaged by Indian depredations.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. In the case of a foreign war, as with Great Britain for instance, the Government in one sense agrees to protect its citizens; but a British army might invade the State of New York or the State of Michigan and kill citizens of those States and destroy their property, and this Government would not be liable for that damage. It certainly does not agree to indemnify them.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Does the Government in such a case prevent the citizens of the United States from shooting the English?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Neither do they prevent the citizen from shooting the Indian who attacks him.

Mr. MILLER, of California. When he shoots him at the time of the attack; but it refuses the right of reprisal. It will not permit him to pursue the Indian on the reservation; he can not make a counter-attack on the Indian; he must stand and receive the attacks of the Indians and suffer all their depredations without resenting or making any counter-attack upon them.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I would put this case to the Senator from California: If a band of Mexican marauders cross the boundary between Texas and Mexico, kill citizens of Texas and destroy their property, our people can not pursue them upon Mexican soil; they can pursue them to the border, but there they must stop.

Mr. MILLER, of California. It is the duty of our Government to make the Mexican Government pay for that depredation; and if it refuses to pay and will not pay, it is the duty of the United States to make war upon Mexico to compel payment.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Our Government has not done either.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I do not regard the Indians as foreign nations.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. We make treaties with them.

Mr. MILLER, of California. We have stopped that.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Prior to 1874 we did.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Yes; but at the same time they were declared wards of the nation, a part of the nation. It was an anomalous condition they were in; but now the Indians are not separate and distinct and foreign nations from the Government of the United States. They are under the jurisdiction and control and power of the Government of the United States. The case is very different from that which the Senator has put.

I do not wish to prolong this debate. I hope the Senate will not do an injustice, merely in order to follow a technical rule of the body or a decision of the Chair.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I have but a word to say. No one objects to the provision which we have proposed to insert in reference to the depredation claims. The only objection is that gentlemen do not want to have it applied to those claims that are already in the bill. There are two or three of those in the bill that we have knowledge of that we think are just, and among them the one that the Senator himself champions; but the body of them we have looked at so far as to be of opinion that the amount that has been claimed is swollen naturally enough by a claimant to put the highest possible value upon his property, or to count the number of his horses or the like in a way that when you come to examine it afterward you will find it must be cut down. Almost all these cases are so. One or two of those that have come up are for an amount even larger than that allowed at the Interior Department.

We were urged to look into the manner in which they were allowed, and it seemed to us that as to such claims, claims a small percentage of which, if allowed, would exhaust all the Indian funds and throw the balance upon the Treasury, we ought to contrive some way to give a new Secretary of the Interior, when he comes to take the responsibility upon him, the authority and the means by which he can reexamine every one that he is willing to make himself responsible for.

Is it not better for these claims to all take the same course rather than to allow all there are in this bill and carry claims which we are satisfied are too large in order to get through it this time two or three that their friends are satisfied are not too large? Let them be postponed to the next session of Congress, and then we shall have, I have no doubt, from a new Secretary of the Interior, with these means put in his hands, an intelligent report such as will justify our action.

I believe that these claims ought to be disposed of. It is a reproach to the Government that there lie in the Interior Department seven or eight million dollars nominally of claims where the owners of them who have suffered feel as if they were right, and yet they are so large and the funds to meet them so small that we shrink from disposing of them. We ought to make an end of them, but we ought to make a fair one and a just one, and if there is not fund enough for them all, they should be marshaled, and then we should determine the other great question behind, whether the Treasury should respond for the balance, and not take out the few of them that have no other claim to preference than the fact that they have ardent friends who pick them out from the great crowd.

The committee say "we will not condemn any of these claims;" we have not uttered a word in condemnation of a claim, but we say that if the claims are of such a character as is stated here as to a few, if they are as our friends say just and proper, we should embrace them all in some proper provision. I submit that, so far as that branch of this debate is concerned, it is not wise to make an exception of a few. A crowd of claims back of these, tempted by these, lie in the committee-room in the form of amendments proposed here involving a million of dollars or more. After saying to those claimants provided for in those amendments, "We will not consider you at all," we can not stand upon that if these already in the bill are allowed, but we must move to recommit our bill and turn ourselves into a committee on claims and examine those claims also. We said to those who presented the amendments, "This is the way we propose to treat you, and to treat these that have come up." I submit that never was a fairer proposition made, which is undone entirely if you select out a few of them and pay them, and turn the others over.

Mr. MAXEY. I have not been able to see that the argument used by the Senator from Massachusetts is sound as against the universal doctrine of law. The law looks at individuals. If I go into court and have my case thoroughly well prepared and am ready for trial, have done that at my own expense and by my own diligence, why should I be postponed because somebody else has not got his case ready for trial? There is no justice, there is no reason for that; and it is in direct violation of a well-settled maxim of the law that it favors the vigilant.

The gentlemen whose claims are allowed in the bill are conceded by the Senator from Massachusetts to have just claims. He makes no pretense that the claims which are found in the bill are not good claims, but he says that some others have not got their claims there also. Is that a reason? Because I have prepared my claim, because I have used the diligence necessary to comply with the law entirely, and my claim has been examined by the Interior Department, when I have gotten the testimony and have presented it in such a way that the Department felt impelled to approve that claim and it goes to the House and it is there allowed and placed upon the bill, am I then, because other men have not come in, to be stricken out? It seems to me that would be a violation of every principle of justice.

The Senator from Wisconsin asked this question: Would you favor the allowance of other claims which have been examined and investigated by the Interior Department and found to be correct and reported to Congress for allowance? I have not the slightest hesitation in saying to the Senator from Wisconsin that, so far as I am concerned, I do not care how many claims come up, if they are just, if they are honest, if they have been established in the mode and manner prescribed by the laws of our land, I would vote for them, because I believe it would be right to pay them.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Will the Senator from Texas permit me to ask a question?

Mr. MAXEY. Certainly.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. It is stated by the Senator from Massachusetts who has charge of this bill that the amount of the claims for depredations which have been examined and passed upon favorably by the Interior Department and now on file in that Department amount to about $8,000,000. Would the Senator from Texas be in favor of paying under this Indian appropriation bill all those claims?

Mr. MAXEY. I will reply to the Senator from Wisconsin as best I can, and I think to my satisfaction, whether to his or not. The raids perpetrated a few years ago—much more so than now—by the wild Indians on the frontier people, in which women and children were murdered, others carried into captivity, the cabin of the frontiersman burned over his head, his cattle driven off, his horses stolen, I do not regard as injuries committed during an open war between two nations. It is not that kind of a case. We have said that these Indian disturbances were not wars, that Indians were not to be regarded as belligerents. They are wards of the nation. The Government of the United States has assumed to take care of them and to protect the frontier against them by placing them on reservations and under the control of the military; and they have thus invited people to go on the frontier, risk their lives, and risk their property.

The Government has invited them to do that and has placed agents over the Indians; but for all that they break out and they carry with them the torch; they burn, pillage, rob, destroy, murder, and carry into captivity; and when these unfortunate people come to Congress and ask for relief, because every man has not been prepared to bring forward his claim in the mode and manner which is required, all others who have done so are to be relegated to some commission hereafter to be appointed to regulate these things. Sir, that is not just. Let "every tub stand upon its own bottom." If a man has an honest claim let it be brought forward, and if the claims amount to $8,000,000, as the Senator from Wisconsin says, if they are just claims for depredatians committed by these wards of the nation upon the defenseless frontier people in the destruction and robbery of their property, this Government, as an upright and honorable and honest gentleman would do, ought to pay the last dollar of it if the Indians have not enough money of their own to pay that debt. I assume in the broadest form the position that it would be just and right and fair to do it.

I say further, that if the Committee on Appropriations had put every valid claim, which they themselves regard as valid and upright, on this bill as an amendment, I should have voted for that, and if, when it goes back to the House, the House should amend the amendments of the Senate and put on others, I would say that was right. In other words, the amount involved has nothing to do with the honesty of the debt. If the Government honestly owes it, it makes no difference whether it takes $8,000,000 or $8. The amount has nothing to do with the justice or the honesty of it. The principle of the thing is that the Government of the United States has assumed that out of the annuities, out of the moneys which go to these tribes, shall be paid all depredations which they perpetrate upon the property of the people, and these claims have been established as coming within the purview of that law; therefore they should not be stricken out.

While I shall support the provision suggested by the committee for future adjudication and settlement, I can not for the life of me see why you want to readjudicate a thing that is already adjudicated. There ought to be an end to controversy, there ought to be an end to litigation; the claims named in the bill need no adjudication, because they have already been adjudicated. They need no examination or investigation or auditing. All that has already been done. Then why should these poor people out there on the frontier lie out of the use of their money, obtaining no interest, because others who happened to be less vigilant have not prepared their cases.

Mr. President, the Appropriations Committee, in my humble judgment, ought not to have stricken the claims out. While I concur with them in their effort to make a provision for the future, so far as these claims are concerned, they ought not to have stricken them out, and there is no inconsistency in leaving them on the bill and then making a provision such as they have wisely made for the future. I shall vote with them for that provision, and vote against them so far as striking out claims is concerned.

Mr. JACKSON. I wish to call the attention of the Senate very briefly to the fact that this proposed legislation as it comes from the House to the Senate, and which the Senate Committee on Appropriations propose to strike out, ought to be stricken out because it is in direct conflict with the act of July 15, 1870, which provides as follows:

That no part of the moneys appropriated by this act, or which may hereafter be appropriated in any general act or deficiency bill making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, to pay annuities due to or to be used and expended for the care and benefit of any tribe or tribes of Indians named herein, shall be applied to the payment of any claim for depredations that may have been or may be committed by such tribe or tribes, or any member or members thereof.

That is the present law.

Mr. DAWES. And these very Indians have no funds in the Treasury.

Mr. JACKSON. None at all. The whole subject is involved in some confusion by reason of not examining these statutes in connection. The act of 1872 directed the Secretary of the Interior to examine claims that arose under existing law or under a treaty obligation. The Department has examined and adjudicated upon an immense amount of claims which there are no existing laws to cover, and no treaty obligations that cover them.

The first legislation upon this subject was in 1802. That made direct provision as to how depredations should be compensated for after demand had been made upon the Indian tribe of which the party committing the depredation was a member, and that act of 1802 directed that the payments for such depredations should be made out of the annuity that was coming to the tribe. That continued in force until 1834. In 1834 the law was changed so as to allow the payment to be made out of any funds in the Treasury, and repealing that provision of the act of 1802 which required that it should be paid out of the annuities. That act of 1834 continued in force until 1859, when that feature of it was repealed which required the payment out of the Treasury, so that there is no law existing on our statute-books now that makes the Government liable for these depredations, and the provision that compensation should be taken out of the Indian annuities has been repealed by the act of 1870.

The real purpose of the act of 1872 was to ascertain these claims and see if there were any treaty obligations under which they could be paid, but every one of the private cases in this bill was introduced into Congress and asked for appropriations out of the Treasury to pay these depredations; and hence the Committee on Claims reported against them. We have to pass on the question whether this Government will be responsible for all Indian depredations, without regard to treaty obligations. If we assume that obligation we shall have to meet from eight to ten million dollars on claims now pending in the Department.

Mr. MILLER, of California. The act of 1872 required the Secretary of the Interior to investigate depredation claims and find the amount due, the date when the depredation occurred, and all the particulars about them. Now, I ask the Senator what was the object of that if they could not be paid? I understand the Senator to say that there was no existing law requiring them to be paid.

Mr. JACKSON. The language of that act is that the Secretary of the Interior should investigate claims that arise under existing law or under treaty obligation. He was confined to that class of claims and was to report them to Congress, and they were not to be paid except by a specific appropriation by Congress.

Mr. MILLER, of California. But the Senator says there is no existing law under which they can be paid and there is no treaty stipulation which requires their payment. Then what was the object of the act of 1872?

Mr. JACKSON. I can not explain that. There stands the legislation just as I have stated it. It is all the legislation on the subject.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I think that the amendments proposed by the committee are in the interest and for the benefit of the claimants, and I think the friends of these claimants for Indian depredations are standing in their own light when they are opposing the legislation which has been proposed. It is not a question, as my good friend from Texas states, of diligence in law. Here is one claim, on page 26, line 615, of Dennis Sheedy, allowing him a certain amount for a certain Indian depredation, and here is an amendment that I offered myself for constituents of mine, constituents of the Senator from Kansas, and constituents, I believe, of the Senator from Texas, too, in which I proposed to pay a number of gentlemen their claims, and their claims are precisely alike with that of Dennis Sheedy. The depredations were committed at the same time, by the same Indians, and they have been reported just alike. The committee rejected this amendment.

We rejected all amendments, because we had before us reports beginning back in 1871 or 1872, or probably earlier, from the Interior Department. Every year there is a report of Indian depredation claims. Recently there have been half a dozen reports made each session of Congress, or three or four at least. There have been three made at this session. These reports of Indian depredations do not confine the claims to depredations committed by Indians with whom we have treaty stipulations and whose money we can take to pay these claims, but they include all manner of Indian depredations.

It is impossible to have an investigation of all these claims before the Committee on Appropriations. If the Senator from Texas and the Senator from California were on that committee and were called upon to pass on these claims, neither of those Senators would be willing to accept these reports and allow the exact amount that might have been reported by some Indian agent, supported by one or two ex parte affidavits filed in the Department.

It is a matter of absolute necessity that we shall sift these claims, that we shall ascertain those that are properly chargeable against the nations and tribes that have annuities and with whom we have treaty stipulations and whose money we have, so that we can pay the claims. Now, I am for making these Indians pay every solitary dollar due for the actual depredations committed by them, whenever they have any money or whenever they have any lands out of which they can be paid. I want to hold them responsible to the fullest extent of the law; but I only want to pay what is actually due, the real value of the property destroyed or the real injury done to it, and not mere imaginative damages that may have resulted, and which should never be allowed in any court of justice. Therefore we put in the amendment, under the head of "Indian depredation claims," at page 47, requiring a thorough investigation of this whole matter. We appropriate $10,000 for it. The Secretary can take this money and he can have a thorough investigation made; he can report to us all the facts; he can show us the evidence upon which these claims are allowed, and the treaties and the funds. Then we can go to work and settle the cases intelligently and honestly and fairly; but we can not do it until we have that information, and it is idle to undertake to do it. We are simply making fish of one and flesh of another. We are making a favorite of one, and we are doing great injustice and wrong to hundreds of others.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment recommended by the Committee on Appropriations to strike out from line 637 to line 665.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in the appropriations for fulfilling treaties with the "Otoes and Missourias," to strike out the following clause, from line 686 to 698, inclusive:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to make such extension of time for the payment of the purchase-money under the sale made under an act entitled "An act to provide for the sale of the remainder of the reservation of the confederated Otoe and Missouria tribes of Indians, in the States of Nebraska and Kansas, and for other purposes," as he may deem advantageous to said Indians and settlers: Provided, That the interest shall be paid at the rate as now provided by said act; but the time for the payment of the whole of said purchase-money shall not be extended more than two years from the time the said purchase-money became due according to the original terms of sale under said act.

Mr. VAN WYCK. This is one of the provisions to which I called the attention of the Senate. It is similar to the one in regard to the Omahas authorizing the extension of the time of payment in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior. There was evidently a misapprehension in the minds of Senators as to the vote upon the retention of the other clause. I desire some understanding as to this and the previous amendment on page 27. There was a misunderstanding among Senators. This proposition is precisely similar to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on striking out the clause which has been read.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I either desire now to have a yea-and-nay vote or to have it in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator demand the yeas and nays?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Not now.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in the appropriations for fulfilling treaties with the "Pottawatomies," to strike out from line 776 to line 783, inclusive, as follows:

For this amount, to be paid to certain Pottawatomie Indians, their heirs or legal representatives, being the sum found due for depredations committed by others upon their stock, timber, or other property, reported to Congress under the tenth article of above treaty, $48,332.80, payments only to be made to such as sustained actual damage, their heirs or representatives.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 783, to reduce the total amount of the appropriation for fulfilling treaties with the "Pottawatomies" from $68,980.45 to $20,647.65.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the following clause, from line 786 to line 807, inclusive:

That the claim of the Pottawatomie Nation of Indians on account of unfulfilled treaty stipulations and for the difference between coin and the value of the currency paid to said Indians in the years 1863, 1864, 1865, 1866, and 1867, by virtue of the treaty of 1868, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for adjudication; and said case shall have preference and be tried without delay by said court, which shall determine and adjudicate what sums of money are due said Pottawatomie Nation of Indians, and the amount proportionately due each band of said Pottawatomie Nation on any account arising from existing treaties, and whether interest is due, and at what rate, upon said sums, with right of appeal to the Supreme Court, which, in case of an appeal, shall advance said case upon its docket and try the same without delay. But any decision awarding said Indians any sum on account of the difference between gold and currency shall not be held as precedent thereafter for the regulation or decision of any controversy between the Government of the United States and any parties whatsoever.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

For this amount to be paid to the Pottawatomie Indians, or expended for their benefit, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, being the difference between the amount paid to said Indians in currency, in the years 1863, 1864, 1865, 1866, and 1867, and the sum due in coin, under their treaties of 1818 and 1829, as required to be ascertained by article 9 of their treaty proclaimed August 7, 1868, $49,382.80.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriations for fulfilling treaties with the "Quapaws," in line 829, after the word "blacksmith," to strike out "and assistants;" in line 831, before the word "hundred," to strike out "eight" and insert "five;" and in the same line, after the word "thousand," to strike out "eight" and insert "five;" so as to make the clause read:

For blacksmith, and tools, iron, and steel for blacksmith shop, per same article and treaty, $500; in all, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriations for fulfilling treaties with the Shoshones and Bannocks, to strike out the following clause, from line 958 to line 964, inclusive:

For the payment by the Secretary of the Interior to J. M. Hogan, of Stockton, Cal., the sum of $6,600, out of the funds herein appropriated for the Shoshone Indians; the same being a claim for damages caused by depredations of said Indians, and examined and approved, allowed and reported to Congress by the Department of the Interior, $6,600.

Mr. MILLER, of California. That is the case which I spoke of a while ago in the debate. The depredation was committed in 1861. The claim has been adjudicated and found due, not only as to the circumstances of the whole case but as to the amount. It is a claim which ought to have been paid long ago, and it ought to be paid now as it has not been paid heretofore. If the Senator from Massachusetts will consent to let the item stand I shall be very much obliged to him.

Mr. DAWES. I should be very glad to do that, because I know something about the claim, but there is one difficulty about it independent of the fact that to leave it here is treating it differently from the others. It was a depredation made before we had any treaty with those Indians, and they never stipulated to pay for any of the depredations committed before that time. Then all we have in our hands now is the annuity. We are under an obligation to pay the annuity which is appropriated here. If we should take the amount out of the annuity we must take out of the Treasury just as much to keep the Indians alive.

I wish this claim might go with the rest, and the Secretary of the Interior will then report what there is in treaties or other obligations on the part of the Indians by which we can pay this or any other such claim. I will not say a word against the merits of the claim. I happen to know more about this than any other of the claims, but I can not ask the Senate to take it up when they have decided that they would not take up the others.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I shall ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment. If it is desirable to wait until we get the bill in the Senate, I will reserve it until that time and take a vote on it then.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, and others. The Senator had better do that.

Mr. DAWES. Take the vote then, when the others will come up.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I shall then reserve the question until the bill is reported to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in the appropriations for fulfilling treaties with the "Sioux of different tribes, including Santee Sioux of Nebraska," in line 997, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirty-eight" and insert "thirty;" so as to make the clause read:

For sixteenth of thirty installments, to purchase clothing for males over 14 years of age, for flannel, hose, and calico, and domestics required for females over 12 years of age, and for such flannel and cotton goods as may be needed to make suits for boys and girls, per tenth article of treaty of April 29, 1868, $130,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1013, to increase the appropriation "for pay of additional employés at the several agencies for the Sioux in Nebraska and Dakota" from $20,000 to $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1021, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "seventy-five;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That this sum shall include transportation of supplies from the termination of railroad or steamboat transportation; and in this service Indians shall be employed wherever practicable.

So as to make the clause read:

For subsistence of the Sioux, and for purposes of their civilization, as per agreement ratified by act of Congress approved February 28, 1877, $1,275,000: Provided, That this sum shall include transportation of supplies from the termination of railroad or steamboat trasportation; and in this service Indians shall be employed wherever practicable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1028, to increase the total amount of the appropriations for fulfilling treaties with the "Sioux of different tribes, including Santee Sioux of Nebraska," from $1,590,300 to $1,627,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the following clause, from line 1041 to line 1048, inclusive:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to pay, out of the moneys herein appropriated for the Sioux Indians, to Abner Lowry, sr., $2,306.60, to John McCall $70, and to Mrs. John Bohl $25; the same being claims for damages caused by depredations of said Indians, and examined, approved, and reported to Congress by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the following clause from line 1049 to line 1054, inclusive:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to pay, out of the moneys herein appropriated for the Sioux Indians, to George Storrs $840; the same being claims for damages caused by depredations of said Indians, and examined, approved, and reported to Congress by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriations for fulfilling treaties with the "Sioux, Yankton tribe," in line 1060, after the words "civilization of," to insert "and purchase of stock for;" so as to read:

For subsistence and civilization of and purchase of stock for two thousand Yankton Sioux, heretofore provided for in appropriations under "Fulfilling treaty with Sioux of different tribes," $40,000; in all, $65,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the following clause, from line 1114 to line 1131, inclusive:

The Secretary of the Interior shall cause a complete and accurate list of all approved and pending claims of citizens on account of depredations of Indians, chargeable against any treaty funds of Indians, to be made and presented to Congress on or before the first Monday of December, 1885. Said list shall contain the name and address of the claimant, the date of the depredation, the date of examination and approval, by what Indians committed, what funds remain to said Indians out of any treaty stipulation, and reference to the claim of the particular treaty by which the Indians agreed to pay for depredations by them committed; and said Secretary of the Interior shall also report such suggestions looking to the payment of said claims as may seem wise to him, and whether in his judgment a pro rata allowance out of the respective Indian treaty funds to be applied to the payment of said claims can be made, and, if so, to what extent and in what cases.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 1131, to insert:

INDIAN DEPREDATION CLAIMS.

For the investigation of certain Indian depredation claims, $10,000; and in expending said sum the Secretary of the Interior shall cause a complete list of all claims heretofore filed in the Interior Department and which have been approved in whole or in part and now remain unpaid, and also all such claims as are pending but not yet examined, on behalf of citizens of the United States on account of depredations committed, chargeable against any tribe of Indians by reason of any treaty between such tribe and the United States, including the name and address of the claimants, the date of the alleged depredations, by what tribe committed, the date of examination and approval, with a reference to the date and clause of the treaty creating the obligation for payment, to be made and presented to Congress at its next regular session; and the Secretary is authorized and empowered, before making such report, to cause such additional investigation to be made and such further testimony to be taken as he may deem necessary to enable him to determine the kind and value of all property damaged or destroyed by reason of the depredations aforesaid, and by what tribe such depredations were committed; and his report shall include his determination upon each claim, together with the names and residences of witnesses and the testimony of each, and also what funds are now existing or to be derived by reason of treaty or other obligation out of which the same should be paid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in the appropriations for "miscellaneous supports," before the word "thousand," in line 1165, to strike out "ninety" and insert "seventy-five;" so as to make the clause read:

MISCELLANEOUS SUPPORTS.

For subsistence and civilization of the Arapahoes, Cheyennes, Apaches, Kiowas, Comanches, and Wichitas who have been collected upon the reservations set apart for their use and occupation, $375,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill, and read the following clause:

For subsistence and civilization of the Assinaboines in Montana, including pay of employés, $30,000.

Mr. VEST. I suppose it is too late to change that appropriation, and I am to be blamed for not having submitted an amendment. I know something personally about the condition of those Indians. I regret that the appropriation is as small as it is. I understand that the estimate is fifty-odd thousand dollars over and above this amount, and I see that this includes the payment of employés.

Mr. DAWES rose.

Mr. VEST. I wish to make a statement to the Senate in regard to this matter, if the Senator from Massachusetts will permit me.

Summer before last I visited this tribe of Indians and held a council with them at Fort Assinaboine. At that time there were about 1,100 persons—men, women, and children—in the tribe. Fort Assinaboine is on the edge of the British possessions, and is the most northern of our line of forts. I was there in September. It is the bleakest, most inhospitable country and climate that I have ever seen. Agriculture is simply impossible. The summer season there (they call it summer; I call it very fair winter weather) lasts about one month. They raise a few potatoes, a very few stunted vegetables, and that is all.

The Assinaboines, a portion of the Gros Ventres, the Blackfeet, Bloods, and Piegans, all subsist upon the buffalo. If I had a map accessible I could show the Senate what is called the buffalo country, extending through a portion of Northern Montana into the Canadian territory, over one hundred and forty-nine miles of which I traveled in an ambulance with a military escort, from Fort Assinaboine to Maple River on the Canadian Pacific, and I state here now that I did not see in those one hundred and forty-nine miles one living thing. There were the bones of the buffalo, the wallows of the buffalo, a leaden sky, and a moaning wind, and those Indians are expected to subsist upon that, together with the meager rations that the United States Government gives to them.

In the council that I held with them one of the chiefs, White Calf, rose in the council and said to me through the interpreter that one of his children (for they call the members of the tribe their children) was then dying from starvation. Mr. President, it was the truth. I saw that poor emaciated creature dying for the want of food in sight of the United States flag. I am no sentimentalist; I am a Western man; but this is the truth. It is a shame to this Government, to the civilization and the Christianity of this age. I went to the agent, who lived thirty miles from there. He had no food. I then appealed to the military officer in command, and he issued rations.

I hurried back as soon as I could get to the railroad, for that was my last council. I made my way to Washington city; I went to the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and appealed to them for relief for those Indians. That was in September. Said I, "The winter is coming on; that whole tribe will be exterminated; they will die for want of food." Mr. Price, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, said, "I have no funds out of which to give those people anything; my rations will be exhausted in the course of six weeks." Said I, "Mr. Commissioner, exhaust them. Congress will meet inside of a month, and I pledge myself as a Senator of the United States that the Senate, and I believe the House, will make ample appropriations immediately upon the meeting of Congress." The rations were doubled, and notwithstanding that, the commandant of the post informed me, for he is now here upon the Swaim court-martial, that with all he could do during the winter, taking the rations of the soldiers, who, to their honor and humanity, gave them up voluntarily to those poor Indians, from three hundred to five hundred of them died right there upon our territory in a land bursting with plenty.

It is a shame, an outrage, sir. And now I see that those creatures are given $30,000. I wanted to move to make the amount $50,000, and to increase the succeeding appropriation $20,000.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, Mr. FRYE, and others. Move it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will entertain the motion by unanimous consent.

Mr. VEST. I make a motion to increase the appropriation $20,000. I suppose unanimous consent will be required.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent to move, as in order, to increase the appropriation in line 1177 from $30,000 to $50,000. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The proposed amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. In line 1177, after the word "employés," it is proposed to strike out "thirty" and insert "fifty;" so as to read:

For subsistence and civilization of the Assinaboines in Montana, including pay of employés, $50,000.

Mr. DAWES. I shall make a statement and then leave the matter to the Senate.

Mr. HAWLEY. If the Senator will allow me, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to another point of the same question, or perhaps the same point the Senator from Missouri has referred to. Was it the Blackfeet Indians alone that he spoke of, or was he speaking of four or five tribes?

Mr. VEST. I spoke of the Assinaboines.

Mr. HAWLEY. I understood, but I may have been misinformed, that there is a somewhat similar condition of affairs among the Blackfeet Indians.

Mr. VEST. They are all together; the Assinaboines, the Blackfeet, the Bloods, and the Piegans live together and have the same reservation, and they were all starving when I was there.

Mr. HAWLEY. Now, if the Senator from Massachusetts can give some correct historical statement in regard to those Indians and some assurance of the future I should be glad to hear him. I am very glad to see that on another page of the bill, page 54, there is a contingent fund provided for. I wish it were larger.

Mr. VEST. Yes; it ought to be doubled.

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator from Missouri would reserve his amendment for that point, perhaps it would be wiser. The Senator proposes to raise the amount of appropriation as to the Assinaboines from $30,000 to $50,000. The Department has only estimated for the Assinaboines $35,000. The appropriations for the present year for all of the Indians of Montana, embracing these Indians, are $52,000 less than the estimates. That includes the Assinaboines, the Blackfeets, the Bloods, the Piegans, and the Crows. It was the year before last that the Senator was there. I was also in the neighborhood, although I did not see those Indians that he has spoken of.

When the attention of the Department last year was called to the distressed condition of those Indians—the Assinaboines, the Blackfeet, the Bloods, and the Piegans—they ordered all the rations which were provided for for the year ending next July to be expended before the last of March of this year, which was deemed by those on the ground to be sufficient to supply their wants up to March of this year, so that they would not be starving. Then there was appropriated $50,000 for an emergency deficiency in January of this year, the purpose of which was to take the place of those supplies from March through to July which were anticipated by the order of the Department. The Department now believes, according to all its information from those Indians, that with this fifty thousand dollars' worth they will get through by March enough to supply their wants till July. Whether the Department is correctly informed I do not know; but having anticipated in the manner I have said an expenditure to March, and then supplying that by the $50,000 emergency appropriation which was made in January, the Department believes they have met the exigency so far as food is concerned.

The difficulty with these Indians is twofold. The first is that described by the Senator from Missouri, that their game is gone; and another is that they are lodged in the mountains of that cold region of country and their habits are such that it is next to impossible to make them look for any support except from the chase. They know no other way to get their living but from the chase, and they stay in the mountains while there is food at the agency, and hunt and hunt and starve and die, although there is food within reach of them.

Notwithstanding what I have said in relation to the efforts and appropriations made on the part of the Department and of Congress to meet their distress, there is a lamentable condition of things among some of them which is perfectly heart-rending. Whether it could be remedied by more food or not is a question. I have received to-day, since this bill came up, a letter to a friend from the agent of the Blackfeet Indians, accompanied by the death-roll of the Blackfeet, a part of these Indians, kept as they keep it. I have it here before me [exhibiting], the death-roll for nine months ending in January, kept as they keep it, by notches upon sticks. Here are the identical sticks kept by the chiefs of the bands. Every notch indicates a death in the tribe. I have a letter of the agent in my pocket in which they are all reckoned up. I will read it. It is dated the 4th of February:

DEAR SIR: By this mail I send you a number of sticks in which are cut notches representing the number of deaths in various bands of the Indians at this agency. These sticks were prepared by the leaders of the bands, and they state that infants who had not reached the period at which children notice the objects about them are not included in the count. The period covered is from early fall, 1883, to the summer of 1884. The following is the list—

Making a total in that time of 482 out of a tribe of Indians that numbered from 1,800 to 2,200. About one-fourth of the whole tribe have fallen in that time from some cause or other, depleted partly, perhaps, by the want of food, partly by the weakness that the climate has brought upon them, and from various sources. This is the condition of things at the Blackfeet agency. It demands, it seems to me, a very thorough investigation on the part of the Indian Department.

I ought to say in this connection that the Senate passed a few days ago a bill which, if it gets through the House, will place all these Indians upon new reservations marked out upon a vast region of country believed by those who have personally examined the ground to be the best part of the whole country on the rivers, and the most valuable land. The Indians desire to go upon that land, and give a release of all their claim and right to the rest of the land. In that bill it is provided that for a certain number of years—I think thirty—the United States stipulates to pay $75,000 a year to each of the three tribes of Indians constituting this agency. I think, if that bill should get through the House, those Indians will be in a better condition than they have been since the game has fled from the country and they have been upon that reservation.

I am unable to tell the Senate what is the real cause of the horrible and awful mortality among those Indians. I know the Department is of opinion that it has furnished all the appropriation, including the $50,000 which Congress appropriated in January, that is necessary, but the mortality has arisen from past suffering and past neglect.

I think, if the Senator will reserve his amendment and increase what we have created in the bill called an emergency fund, it will meet whatever in the future may appear to the Department to be necessary.

Mr. VEST. I will withdraw the amendment then.

Mr. PLUMB. Before the amendment is withdrawn I wish to call the attention of the Senate to some statistics in regard to these tribes of Indians as I find them stated in the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and to make some comments on them.

According to the last report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, that for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884, there are a thousand of these Assinaboine Indians at the Fort Belknap agency and 1,150 of the Gros Ventres. According to the statistics furnished by the agent the number of deaths during the last fiscal year was twenty-six. The agent also reports in regard to the employment of the Indians, and the results of their labor and so on, that there were 250 acres cultivated by the tribes at that agency, that there were 300 acres under fence, that there were 300 bushels of corn raised, 250 bushels of oats and barley, 15 bushels of beans, 725 bushels of vegetables, 25 tons of hay cut, and so on, and that the tribes had 1,200 horses. I find by reading the report of the agent, found on page 114 of the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, that "the number of Indians," quoting now from the report, "remains substantially the same as at the date of my last report, with probably a small increase of births over deaths;" so that if any one is indulging in the hope that we shall be getting rid of these Indians, and therefore of the necessity of appropriating for them, he will have to consult some other authority than that which I hold in my hand. He says the morals of the people are not very good.

In sanitary matters the agency physician reports the average number of Indians entitled to treatment at 1,850, the number that have in some manner been treated as 995; of this number 14 have died, 12 of which died from chronic incurable diseases.

So that the lump number of persons who have died on account of lack of food was very small.

Both tribes suffer severely from venereal diseases contracted some years ago, and now appearing as a constitutional disease, affecting the lungs and throat especially, and this is and will continue to be the cause of a large majority of the deaths among this people. The general health of these Indians is good, and improves from year to year, and in time I believe this people will outgrow their present tainted condition and become a fairly healthy race.

Mr. VEST. For what year is that?

Mr. PLUMB. That is for the fiscal year ending last June. The agent further says:

The supplies furnished them the past year were not sufficient for their needs, and but for the additional amount furnished later in the year much suffering would have most certainly ensued; and as the appropriation for the current year is, I suppose, about the same, it is apparent that the same state of things will exist as came to pass last year.

* * * * * * *

I am happily able to say that none of my Indians have starved to death, but it has been only by the most rigid economy—

Which of course ought to be an offense to an Indian agent, I think—and by keeping them on short rations that such a calamity has been averted.

In another paragraph of the report the agent states as follows:

But, fortunately, by their labors they have produced sufficient to supply their immediate wants; as far as potatoes, corn, turnips, &c., are concerned, they will have plenty.

That was, a few years ago, considered a pretty fair bill of fare for a white man.

The Indians have worked diligently and well on their farms, those that have them, and the result is a fine crop. But unfortunately many of them have no farms, and hence no crop. And while upon this subject I wish to reiterate former statements in regard to the breaking of land. My Indians could just as well have tilled 600 to 800 acres of land as well as the 300 acres they have cultivated. The white employés have broken every spring all they could, but it was but a tithe of what was needed. It would seem to be a wise scheme to break up for them all the land they can till, as that is directly in the line of our efforts toward making them self-supporting.

On the whole, a careful survey of the field indicates rapid advancement in certain directions, more clearly in respect to agriculture, and I assert that in a few years, with such assistance as the Government should most certainly afford them, these Indians will become largely self-sustaining.

That would not seem to indicate that the condition of things up there had been very serious. Of course I am not questioning in the slightest degree the statement made by the Senator from Missouri as to that which passed under his observation; but I have had some little experience on the frontier, and I know that Indians sometimes lie, and it might be possible that there should be circumstances which would induce some Indians to say they had been at the point of starvation, and yet the statement might not be quite true. I would not accept a statement of that kind as being necessarily the exact truth unless I were able to verify it from some other source.

But I was going to say specially that if that reservation is of the kind which the Senator from Missouri estimates it to be, and if the outlook there is of that hopeless character he represents, we ought not to be appropriating money simply to keep those people in that inhospitable climate and on that barren soil and in that condition where under no possible circumstances can they ever be otherwise than beggars, but instead of appropriating for emergencies and for food, which is only charity at the best, we ought to be making appropriations that would take them somewhere else and put them under conditions in which they may within some reasonable time become self-supporting. We are doing the vain thing, the idle thing, the wicked thing, because it is wicked to collect money from the people of the United States year after year to pay to Indians or anybody else whom we keep in a condition where they never can become self-supporting and must be always objects of charity notwithstanding the fact that they are physically able under proper circumstances to labor sufficiently to support themselves.

I think the attention of the Senate ought to be directed to this matter, not for the purpose of specially enlarging this appropriation, but of seeing in this case, upon which we have this information, if we can not do something at once to avoid the necessity of an indefinite continuation of these appropriations, and, what is more, of constantly being reproached everywhere for lack of humanity which comes by reason of our lack of appropriations to keep these people in that locality where they can never be of any service to themselves.

I shall now read from the report of the agent of these Indians for the preceding year.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator kindly distinguish between these different tribes? He has been talking about the Assinaboines and I am at this moment reading a letter from the agent of the Blackfeet.

Mr. PLUMB. I was addressing myself to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator will permit me, when I was at the agency of the Assinaboines, the Gros Ventres, the Bloods, the Piegans, the Blackfeet, and the Assinaboines were all upon that reservation. These Indians pass backward and forward from the British possessions into Montana. The buffalo country extends from Fort Assinaboine up to Maple Creek, on what is now the Canadian Pacific, and that was their hunting-ground. These tribes have intermarried and have lived together. It is impossible for anybody to say that starvation existed only in one tribe.

Mr. BLAIR. May I ask the Senator a question? He spoke of the number of those whom he found there as being eleven hundred. Does that include all of these tribes?

Mr. VEST. Oh, no, sir. It is impossible to obtain any accurate information about the number of Indians in these tribes. As far as I could ascertain from the chiefs and from the agents, there were about eleven hundred Assinaboines and a thousand of the Gros Ventres, though I see the agents state——

Mr. BLAIR. Of what tribe were those who died from want?

Mr. VEST. They were Blackfeet, Assinaboines, and Piegans.

Mr. BLAIR. Not all of a single tribe?

Mr. VEST. Not of a single tribe; but they all live together.

Mr. DAWES. The communication which I read was from the Blackfeet agency only, and is of recent date, February 4. I read a letter from the agent himself. The Blackfeet agency is distinct from that which includes the Assinaboines, which is at Fort Belknap.

Mr. VEST. But the Piegans and Blackfeet are at Fort Shaw. What I stated in regard to the condition of these Indians last winter I ascertained from the commanding officer at Fort Shaw.

Mr. DAWES. I want to add, as I ought in regard to the appropriations of this year, that they are $17,000 larger than the appropriations last year, including the $50,000 deficiency. So the Department is determined to meet the case. If it fails it will be from lack of information.

Mr. PLUMB. I find by looking at the report of the Commissioner for the year 1883 that the number of Assinaboine Indians at Fort Belknap agency that year was 750, 250 less than now, and the number of Gros Ventres there was 950, 250 less than there are at this time. From that I do not mean to assume at all that the tribe has increased. I have no doubt the Senator from Missouri has furnished the explanation somewhat of the condition of things that existed at Fort Belknap agency at the time he was there.

These Indians go backward and forward, first to one agency and then the other; being affiliated by blood and marriage, they naturally regard themselves as of the same family, and wherever they happen to be they take whatever rations are available; and if it should happen that all the Indians at one agency should go to the other suddenly, they might exhaust the rations there. I suppose the only way to even that up would be to have the Indians who had thus been cleaned out go to the other agency and employ the same tactics there for the purpose of recouping what they had lost.

That is a difficulty which it will be almost impossible to provide against wholly. There ought to be a totality among all the agencies enough to supply them, and I think not a very great abundance for the purpose of encouraging them to refrain from agriculture, unless it be literally true that agriculture is there impossible. If it is, then they ought to be taken to some more hospitable clime. Every day we keep them there is not only an expense which is unnecessary, because it takes more to transport supplies to that locality than it does to some nearer point where they should be located, but we are losing the chance also of doing anything for them in the way of making them self-supporting.

I want to say now, repeating what I have said heretofore at some length and which I thought I never would say again, that I do not think the chief end of an Indian ought to be to live off the Government, and I do not think the chief end of the Government ought to be to encourage the Indian with the belief that he can always live off the Government, nor to permit him always to live off the Government. I believe that under a proper system of management nine-tenths of the Indians of the United States at least—men, women, and children—could become self-supporting. Their wants are simple, or at least they were originally. We have cultivated them somewhat by giving them extravagant articles of food, &c., and we have shielded them because they have come to believe to a very large extent that the Government was rich enough and big enough, not to give them a farm but to enable them to live without a farm or without doing anything. That grows, like other vices, by what it feeds upon; and this constant giving without stint, and the understanding that always whenever there is a lack the Government is ready to make it up, and that therefore individual effort can be remitted or abandoned entirely, has produced, I think, largely that condition of things which we find now existing.

I do not propose to attack it now by means of this appropriation bill, but I want to say that what the Senator from Missouri said ought to be a warning that we are proceeding in the wrong direction, that we are schooling children in things which can never be of any use to them, and that we are keeping people in enforced idleness at places where they can never do better than they are doing now, and thus laying the foundation for the continuation of this charity until the end of time. While I may not seem very soft-hearted, I believe I have never failed to respond to demands for more food when it was said somebody was starving, and I have voted for all these emergency bills, and they have been numerous; but it is improper that we permit that condition of things to exist which will confront us with these emergencies and with these appeals which we can not disregard, and yet in that way we produce this condition of things. We are doing a great wrong, not only to these Indians but to the people of the United States, whom we tax for their support.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator not allow the regular order to be laid before the Senate?

Mr. DAWES. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I said that I withdrew the amendment. Did the Chair declare the amendment withdrawn?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not hear the Senator.

Mr. VEST. I moved the amendment with the consent of the Senate, and I wish it to remain that I may see what is best to be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill stands on the matter of asking unanimous consent to offer this amendment for consideration. That will be the pending question when the bill is again resumed.

The report was concurred in.

EUGENE O'SULLIVAN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1365) granting an increase of pension to Eugene O'Sullivan, late a sergeant of Company K, Eighteenth Missouri Volunteer Infantry, which was, in lines 7 and 8, to strike out the words "$18 per month" and insert "pension allowed in cases of amputation of the leg above the knee."

Mr. INGALLS. I introduced that bill, and will take the liberty of moving that the Senate concur in the amendment made by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

JAMES M'CALLEN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1571) granting a pension to James McCallen, which was, in line 3, to strike out all after the word "laws" down to and including the word "pension," in line 4; and in line 6, strike out all after the word "Infantry" down to and including the word "pension," in line 8.

Mr. WILSON. I move concurrence in the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

ISABELLA HIGGINS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2549) granting a pension to Isabella Higgins, which was, in lines 2 and 3, to strike out the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws" and insert "at the rate of $20 per month."

Mr. WILSON. I move concurrence in the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENTS TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. DOLPH and Mr. GEORGE submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the river and harbor bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

FOREIGN-LABOR CONTRACTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire has called for the regular order. The unfinished business will be laid before the Senate, being the bill (H. R. 2550) to prohibit the importation and migration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Massachusetts, I believe, indicated his willingness to withdraw his motion to adjourn so that I may move for an executive session of a few minutes. I do not want a long one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to adjourn was withdrawn, and the Chair laid before the Senate messages from the House. The Senator from Kentucky is now recognized.

Mr. BECK. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BLAIR. Does the interposition now of a motion to go into executive session again make it necessary that I should call for the regular order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does not.

Mr. BLAIR. Is there no point of order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill the Senator has in charge is before the Senate for action at this moment; but the Senator from Kentucky moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. The question is on that motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 44 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting resolutions of the New York Chamber of Commerce, urging the establishment in the principal seaports of the United States of stations for the determination of the errors of compasses in iron and steel ships, with report of Commodore J. G. Walker, Chief of Bureau Navigation, thereon, and recommending an appropriation therefor. If there be no objection, the letter of the Secretary, with the report of Commodore Walker, will be printed, and they, with the accompanying memorial, will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of the Legislative Assembly of Arizona Territory, praying that certain coal fields within the White Mountain Indian reservation, in that Territory, be segregated from the reservation, and that the rights thereto of the discoverers thereof be respected; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. PALMER. I present a joint resolution of the Legislature of Michigan, relative to the importation of laborers under foreign contracts. I ask that it be laid on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator that the paper sent to the desk does not appear to be an original joint resolution of the Legislature of Michigan, but only what appears to be a copy. The paper will be laid on the table. The Chair only inquired with reference to its being read, the rule being to read original joint resolutions of Legislatures of the States. This does not appear to be an original paper. It will be received, however, if there be no objection, and laid on the table.

Mr. PALMER presented a concurrent resolution of the senate and house of representatives of the State of Michigan; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

Preamble and concurrent resolution adopted by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Michigan.

Whereas the Senate of the United States did pass a resolution of the date of April 22, A. D. 1884, instructing the honorable Secretary of War to cause an inquiry to be made as to the cost of construction of the Lake Superior Ship Canal and the Portage Lake Improvement Company Canal, and also to inquire upon what terms said canals might be purchased by the United States, and make free water ways to the commerce of the great lakes; and

Whereas the honorable Secretary of War did designate Col. O. M. Poe, of the United States Army, to make such examination and report, in conformity to said resolution; and

Whereas the honorable Secretary of War did report on or about January 5, A. D. 1885, that Colonel Poe had made such examination, and on whose report did recommend that Congress take steps to purchase the same, and make them free water ways to the commerce of the lakes; and

Whereas the tolls collected by these canals are a serious burden to numerous people and a very large industry embraced inside the limits of the territory supplied by these canals; and

Whereas these water ways should be made free channels to the great traffic that is now springing up with Minnesota, Iowa, and the country along the Northern Pacific Railroad, that passes through Lake Superior, finding an outlet to the east and seaboard; and

Whereas the dangers of the navigation of Lake Superior may be greatly lessened by the improvement of this water way, and make a safe shelter at a point where the dangers of this lake are the greatest and most serious disasters have occurred: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the senate of the State of Michigan (the house concurring), That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be, and they are hereby, requested to use their best endeavors to secure such legislation by Congress as will result in the United States acquiring, upon fair and reasonable terms, title to and ownership of the Portage Lake and River Improvement Company and Portage Lake and Lake Superior Ship Canal and Railway Company, connecting the waters of Keweenaw Bay through Portage River, Portage Lake, and the Portage Lake and Lake Superior Ship Canal and Railway Company with the waters of Lake Superior, for the purpose of making them free to the commerce of the lakes, and securing a commodious harbor of refuge for that commerce at a point on Lake Superior most dangerous to it.

Resolved, That the secretary of the senate be, and he is hereby, instructed to forward a copy of this resolution to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

ARCHIBALD BUTLER,
President of the Senate.
LEWIS M. MILLER,
Secretary of the Senate.
NEWCOMB CLARK,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
D. E. CROSSMAN,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

LANSING, January 29, 1885.

Mr. PALMER presented a resolution of the Detroit (Mich.) Board of Trade, favoring the purchase by the United States of certain water ways connecting Keweenaw Bay with Lake Superior; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. INGALLS. I present a petition, numerously signed by members of the Legislature of the State of Kansas and many other citizens of that State, praying for an appropriation of $100,000 for the construction of a wagon-road from Caldwell, Kans., through the Indian Territory, to Wichita Falls, in Texas. The petitioners represent that that country is now under the control of the Government of the United States, and a road would be of great importance to the military establishment, the Indian agencies in the Indian Territory, to traders, and to the transit of the mails. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PENDLETON. I present a memorial from publishing houses that represent themselves to be all of those in the city of Springfield, in the State of Ohio, protesting against the passage of a clause in the Post-Office appropriation bill that distinguishes between newspapers of certain classes—I suppose those which are sent to regular subscribers and those which are sent to persons whom the publisher may select or as sample copies. I move the reference of the memorial to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PENDLETON presented memorials of the Cortland Gazette, of Cortland Ohio; the Lebanon Daily Star, of Lebanon, Ohio; the Coshocton Wochenblatt, of Coshocton, Ohio; of the Bee and Times, of Ripley, Ohio; and the Ohio Democrat, of New Philadelphia, praying for the reduction of postage on second-class mail matter; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. PLUMB. I present a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Kansas, praying for the establishment of a wagon-road in the Indian Territory, which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). It will be so referred.

Mr. PLUMB. On the suggestion of my colleague [Mr. INGALLS], I ask that the reference of the petition be changed to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DAWES. I inquire of the Senator why the question of a wagon-road through the Indian Territory should be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Kansas to desire the change of reference of the petition?

Mr. PLUMB. If I had time to read the very lucid explanation that is stated in the petition I think I could satisfy the Senator from Massachusetts, although as I know he is very hard to satisfy usually. I think even his critical judgment would be satisfied if I should read that statement. It relates to a road for the transportation of military supplies from station to station in that section of the country.

Mr. DAWES. Who petitions for it?

Mr. PLUMB. There are various persons who subscribe their names to the petition.

Mr. DAWES. Is it the military authorities who are so anxious to have a military road or is it citizens?

Mr. PLUMB. There is no way I can conceive of to satisfy the Senator from Massachusetts except to put him in personal possession of the petition, and I shall request the clerks to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas ask that the petition shall be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs or the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. PLUMB. The Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That reference will be made if there be no objection.

Mr. PLUMB presented a resolution of the senate of Kansas, favoring the passage of the bill increasing the pensions of widows of deceased soldiers; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a resolution of the senate of Kansas, favoring an appropriation for the improvement of the military road from Caldwell, Kans., across the Indian Territory to Wichita Falls, in the State of Texas; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a petition of honorably discharged officers, soldiers, and sailors, who served in the United States Army and Navy during the late war, praying that they be given a land-warrant for one hundred and sixty acres of land each; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, presented a petition of E. S. Jaffrey & Co., Tiffany & Co., Robert Davis & Co., Bates, Reed & Cooley, and 150 other importers of the city of New York, praying for the passage of the House bill to allow certain oaths to be administered by notaries public; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of William M. Thomson and 28 other citizens of Alexandria Bay, N. Y., praying that the United States acquire title to the two canals connecting Portage Lake, in the State of Michigan, with Lake Superior on the east and west and make said canals free of tolls to the public; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I present a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of California, relative to a signal-service station on Tamalpais Mountain, which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California asks leave at this time to present a copy of a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of California. It will be received, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BLAIR. I present the memorial of John C. Welch, making a proposition to sell to the United States an abstract or calendar of the census which he has prepared. I have taken the liberty to make this indorsement after an examination of it.

> This calendar is a remarkable condensation and bird's-eye statement or exhibition of the essential facts ascertained by the Tenth Census. It is very convenient for reference, and I can not conceive of any method by which, for so little money, so much valuable information can be distributed among the people.

Signed by myself. I move that this be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, with which committee is to be found some matter bearing upon the question.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAMPTON presented a petition of citizens of Georgetown County, South Carolina, praying for the establishment of signal stations in that county; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORRILL. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 483) for the erection of a public building at Keokuk, Iowa, to report it favorably and without amendment. As it will take perhaps less time now than at any time hereafter, at the request of the Senators from Iowa I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks unanimous consent that the bill be now considered. Is there objection?

Mr. INGALLS. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. GARLAND. The Committee on the Judiciary have had under consideration the bill (H. R. 4705) in relation to courts and judicial proceedings in the Territories, and have instructed me to report it adversely. I have no objection to the bill going on the Calendar, as some Senators desire it to be placed there.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to say in regard to that bill one word. While I think that in some of the Territories—I believe that is the general opinion of all Senators who have examined the question—there is a very great and crying necessity for some relief, especially in the Territory of Washington and also to some extent in Dakota, I am not aware whether all the Territories are so situated as to require the general relief provided by the bill, and I believe there is a special bill now pending to cover the Territories of Washington and Dakota.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was passed at the last session.

Mr. HOAR. It was passed by the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was passed by both Houses.

Mr. HOAR. Very well, then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar at the request of the Senator from Arkansas.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF FISH AND FISHERIES.

Mr. LAPHAM, from the Committee on Fisheries, reported the following concurrent resolution; which was refered to the Committee on Printing:

> Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the year 1885 be printed, and that there be printed 11,000 extra copies, of which 3,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 6,000 for the House, 1,500 for the use of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, and 500 for sale by the Public Printer under such regulations as the Joint Committee on Printing may prescribe at a price equal to the additional cost of publication and 10 per cent. thereto thereon added, the illustrations to be obtained by the Public Printer under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HILL introduced a bill (S. 2643) to relinquish to the city of Denver title to certain lots of land for the purposes of a public library; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. ALLISON introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 125) to provide for the expenses of the inauguration ceremonies on the 4th day of March, 1885; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 2644) in relation to evidence to quiet titles; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. SEWELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the resolution of the Senate for the printing of the official report of Lieut. Frederick Schwatka, United States Army, of his military reconnaissance.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 8138) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 8138) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

DES MOINES RIVER LANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no "concurrent or other resolutions" that order is closed. The Chair lays before the Senate the Calendar under Rule VIII, the pending bill being Order of Business 396, the title of which will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (S. 1886) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The question is, Shall the bill be indefinitely postponed? on which the Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SHERMAN. With the leave of the Senator from New York I desire to make a motion; but before doing so I wish to state the reason why I make the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Ohio for the purpose indicated by the latter Senator?

Mr. LAPHAM. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is perfectly manifest that in the present state of the public business a long discussion upon such a proposition as that now pending before the Senate, the Des Moines River bill, however meritorious it may be and whatever considerations may be urged in its favor, stands in the way of all the morning business, all the appropriation bills, and all the business which is to come before this Congress and must be acted upon. In view of that fact, and also in view of the further fact that it is a Senate bill and must go the House, and we know as practical legislators that our action upon it even if it should be ever so favorable will not dispose of the bill and will not accomplish the desire of the Senators from Iowa, and in order that it may not stand in the way of appropriation bills which ought to be taken up this morning and proceeded with, I move to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion for one moment, in order that I may say that this is as important public business as there is before the Senate, and I hope the motion will not prevail.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope it will be decided.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask the Senator from Ohio to withdraw the motion until I may say one word.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly; I withdraw it.

Mr. PLUMB. To vote——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas will suspend. Does the Senator from Ohio move at this time to lay the bill on the table or does he simply give notice of his intention to do so at a later hour?

Mr. SHERMAN. I did move it, but I withdraw it for a moment to hear the Senator from Kansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio withdraws the motion. The Senator from Kansas.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to say that it will take no longer to vote upon the passage of the bill, or upon the motion to indefinitely postpone it, which is not a dilatory motion, but is one going to the merits of the case, than it will take to vote on the motion of the Senator from Ohio. The only thing that can be said in favor of one proceeding as against the other is that a motion to lie on the table not being debatable, the Senator from New York will be prevented from concluding his very interesting remarks on this subject. The Senator from Ohio may possibly have that result in mind; but it does seem to me that the bill ought to be voted upon on its merits one way or the other. If the Senate shall vote to lay the bill on the table in this way, we shall be confronted with the necessity next year just as actively as now of doing something about it, and shall be pressed to take some action which shall disclose the view of the Senate upon the merits of the controversy. If, however, this bill shall be voted down, the Senate will thereby solemnly record its judgment that the relief sought by the bill is not proper relief to be granted by Congress, and then of course these people will seek relief somewhere else, or at all events they will not be here probably as they have been for many years, year after year and session after session since I have been here, for the purpose of getting what they believe to be their due, to wit, the right to have the case decided in the courts of the United States. It seems to me, therefore, that we ought not to lay the bill on the table and have the matter go off at this time upon a dilatory motion which decides nothing.

Mr. SHERMAN. I renew my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio moves that the bill do lie on the table.

Mr. LAPHAM. I ask the Senator from Ohio to allow me to make one suggestion.

Mr. SHERMAN. My object was to cut off debate, but I can not refuse the Senator from New York under the circumstances.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio withdraws the motion?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; for a moment.

Mr. LAPHAM. The Senator from Kansas says that the bill should be considered and the Senate should decide if it is proper legislation in order to satisfy those settlers. Precisely that was done four years ago by the unanimous report of the Judiciary Committee of this body, and there is not a single fact now existing that was not known to the Senate at that time.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now renew my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio moves that the bill do lie on the table.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). Upon this question I am paired with my colleague [Mr. VOORHEES].

Mr. WALKER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I was paired on this bill with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GROOME]. I, however, had authority to transfer my pair. I have transferred it to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN]. If the Senator from Colorado were present, he would vote against laying the bill on the table and the Senator from Maryland would vote in favor of laying it on the table.

Mr. FRYE. I am paired with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON], who is detained from the Senate by sickness in his family.

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—17.

Beck,	Jackson,	Miller of N. Y.,	Vance,
Edmunds,	Jonas,	Morgan,	Vest.
Garland,	Lamar,	Pike,
Hampton,	Lapham,	Sherman,
Harris,	McMillan,	Slater,

NAYS—23.

Allison,	Dawes,	Ingalls,	Pendleton,
Blair,	George,	Jones of Nevada,	Plumb,
Call,	Hale,	Manderson,	Sewell,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hawley,	Miller of Cal.,	Van Wyck,
Coke,	Hill,	Morrill,	Wilson.
Cullom,	Hoar,	Palmer,

ABSENT—36.

Aldrich,	Colquitt,	Harrison,	Pugh,
Bayard,	Conger,	Jones of Florida,	Ransom,
Bowen,	Dolph,	Kenna,	Riddleberger,
Brown,	Fair,	Logan,	Sabin,
Butler,	Farley,	McPherson,	Saulsbury,
Camden,	Frye,	Mahone,	Sawyer,
Cameron of Pa.,	Gibson,	Maxey,	Voorhees,
Chace,	Gorman,	Mitchell,	Walker,
Cockrell,	Groome,	Platt,	Williams.

So the motion to lay the bill on the table was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion to indefinitely postpone the bill, on which the Senator from New York is entitled to the floor.

Mr. DAWES. I ask that the bill may be informally laid aside that we may take up the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before that is done, I ask if the Des Moines bill will come up again in the morning hour to-morrow, and so whenever the morning hour recurs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the order of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then no business can be done in the Senate except the appropriation bills and the Des Moines River bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Until the bill is disposed of.

Mr. SHERMAN. Until the bill is disposed of. If that is the case we may as well give up, because we might as well disappear and take it leisurely for the remainder of the session. I do not think it is fair play in legislation. I desire to make that statement now.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] has the floor with the permission of the Senator from New York, the Chair understands.

Mr. DAWES. I ask leave, with the permission of the Senator from New York, to have the Des Moines bill laid aside informally that we may take up the Indian appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the pending order be informally laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7970, the title of which will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (H. R. 7970) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. PLUMB. Is the bill now before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not; the Chair is calling for objection. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts who has charge of the Indian appropriation bill to yield to me until I present the conference report on the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas is entitled to present a conference report when he gets the floor as a matter of right.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PLUMB submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. P. B. PLUMB,
H. L. DAWES,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
JOHN F. FOLLETT,
J. G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask my colleague to let the report lie on the table for the present. I should like to examine one of those amendments.

Mr. PLUMB. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the report of the committee of conference will be laid on the table and taken up later.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2246) to provide for the purchase of additional land for the uses of the public building in the city of New Bedford, State of Massachusetts.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8120) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. W. H. FORNEY of Alabama, Mr. R. W. TOWNSHEND of Illinois, and Mr. J. WARREN KEIFER of Ohio managers at the conference on its part.

The message further announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. 221) to amend sections 2474 and 2475 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, setting apart a certain tract of land lying near the headwaters of the Yellowstone River as a public park, disagreed to by the Senate, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. LUKE PRYOR of Alabama, Mr. W. D. HILL of Ohio, and Mr. J. WARREN KEIFER of Ohio managers at the conference on its part.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 870) to provide for the erection of a public building at Aberdeen, Miss., for use as a post-office, United States court, and for United States internal-revenue officials, and for other Government purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 1365) granting an increase of pension to Eugene O'Sullivan, late a sergeant of Company K, Eighteenth Missouri Volunteer Infantry; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7970) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is, Will the Senate grant unanimous consent to the request of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] to amend the bill on page 49, line 1177, by striking out "thirty" and inserting "fifty" before the word "thousand," so as to read:

For subsistence and civilization of the Assinaboines in Montana, including pay of employés, $50,000.

Is there objection to the amendment offered on Saturday last by the Senator from Missouri? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. DAWES. I inquire of the Senator from Missouri if he has examined the matter sufficiently so that he will not consent to have his amendment proposed in the place suggested on Saturday? The Senator on Saturday inquired for a map showing that region. I will send him a map.

Mr. VEST. I have the map now.

I wish to say a very few words in reply to the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], and then I propose to withdraw the amendment, and to move to double what may be called the contingent fund when we reach that part of the bill. Without entering into any elaborate discussion on the Indian question, I wish to refer briefly to the report of the agent of the Assinaboines and Gros Ventres, which was read late Saturday afternoon by the Senator from Kansas.

As a matter of course the report is not conclusive, as the Indian agent makes his report to show the best condition of affairs possible upon his reservation; but I know personally that the report is incorrect. The statement that the Assinaboines and Gros Ventres are engaged to any extent in agricultural pursuits is not true. I know that it is not true from my own personal observation. They are raising no crops. I did not see one single acre in cultivation in that whole reservation, and the two hundred and fifty bushels of corn, the immense crop which the agent says was raised there, was raised upon the Government farm, not by the Indians. Recollect that the two hundred and fifty bushels of corn, according to the agent, is the entire crop for the consumption of nearly 4,000 Indians, and you can imagine the amount of distress that will exist in the reservation after that immense harvest has been taken away. I undertake to say, and my colleagues upon the Committee on Indian Affairs will justify the statement, that in traveling two hundred miles, from Fort Shaw up to Fort Assinaboine, by ambulance we saw not one solitary acre in cultivation. The Indians are huddled around the forts; they live on rations from the Government; the game is entirely gone, and unless they are fed by the Government as a matter of course they must die literally from starvation.

Since the debate on Saturday I have refreshed my memory in regard to it by reading the report which was made by the committee on our return. Referring to the Blackfeet and Piegans, who were at the agency sixty-five miles north of Fort Shaw, and which agency was visited by us immediately before going to Fort Assinaboine, the committee says:

The tribes upon it are the Blackfeet, Piegans, Gross Ventres, Bloods, and River Crows, numbering in all 1,500. They are in a wretched condition, and their future almost hopeless. The game is fast disappearing, especially the buffalo, and the Indians dependent on rations issued by the Government. Mr. Young, the agent, has about one hundred and seventy-five head of cattle in his herd, and issues rations of beef every Saturday, but the Indians are so nearly famished when the meat is given them that they eat it up in two days, and then starve until the next issue. We were there on ration day (Saturday), and it was pitiable to see the eagerness in the hungry eyes of the waiting crowd as the beef was being distributed. Heretofore the beef has been issued once a week, the amount on hand at each agency being divided into fifty-two equal parts. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs, upon being informed of the deplorable condition of the Indians and the imminent danger of their starving during the coming winter, has humanely ordered the agents in Northern Montana to increase the amount of rations until May 1, so as to prevent suffering among the Indians, relying upon Congress to make adequate appropriations during this session for the Indian Bureau. That this will be done we can not for a moment doubt, as humanity and justice alike demand such action.

I read from the message of the governor of Montana, who says that notwithstanding the temporary relief afforded the northern Indians by an increase of supplies to the amount of half a ration daily to last them until March 1, "their condition from exposure, destitution, and starvation experienced during the past two years is utterly astounding and deplorable, and I have great fears that many will die through the coming winter." The simple fact remains to be stated now in the Congress of the United States that over four hundred of those people did die from starvation.

Again I might read the report of the committee in regard to the Assinaboines and Gros Ventres, which is to the same effect. The buffalo have disappeared. It is useless for gentlemen to say, "Let those Indians go to work." You might as well say to a child in the cradle, "Go to work." They have never had an agricultural implement in their hand; they have never engaged in any other pursuit but the chase, and to take a people after centuries of barbarism and hurl them into the terrible struggle with civilization and tell them to work or die is simply to say die.

The problem is on our hands. I am no sentimentalist; far from it. I went to those Indian reservations with the opinion—I confess it; it was the result probably of defective education—that the best Indian was a dead Indian. I came away with the impression, which I state here to-day, that the great wrongs which have been inflicted upon this continent and upon those people in their condition to-day are a stain upon our management of the Indians. I do not want to exhaust the patience of the Senate by saying what ought to be done. In my judgment they ought to be taken away from that inhospitable climate and put farther south, with farmers placed among them, and gradually led to become self-supporting; but it it will take years and years to solve this problem. In the mean time the only thing for us to do, as a humane Christian people, to say no more of it, is to feed them, and to see that they do not starve under our flag and at our own door.

As I said to a Christian minister in this city not long ago, who came to me and asked that I should attend a meeting for the advancement of foreign missions, "My dear sir, you have at your own door hundreds of heathen who never heard of the name of Christ, who have no idea of the Deity, who have never had a missionary among them, and those people have been robbed by us and by our fathers for a whole century. We owe them something. I am not aware that we have robbed the heathen in the middle of Asia and Africa, and I prefer to attend to the heathen at our own doors." In the first place let us feed them, and then let us Christianize them, because, be it reverently said, no starving human being was ever yet brought to a realizing sense of the Christian religion.

When we reach the proper part of the bill I shall move to double what may be called the contingent fund, so that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs may not be in the condition in which I found him on my return from Montana, when he said that he had no money in his hands to give to those people; that Congress had left him without any contingent fund at all. I propose to put into his hands $50,000, so that if a severe winter like the one now upon us should come upon those Indians he may double or treble the rations if necessary; and that, in my judgment, is the appropriate way to reach the case.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, I have no design of opposing the appropriation of any sum of money which may be proposed here for this or for any other purpose connected with this subject at present. The easiest way to get rid of our responsibility is to give some money out of the Treasury where we are popularly supposed to have a great deal more than we ought to have, and I am not surprised in view of what has been said about this question that the American people come to us for money for personal purposes and purposes of a more trivial character on the assumption that we have so much there that we do not know what to do with it.

I have no doubt that the Indians at this agency eat up their supplies in a few days. The Senator from Missouri read that paragraph from the agent's report with a good deal of unction, as though that was something that was singular. Mr. President, I venture to say that in nine out of ten of all the agencies of the United States precisely that thing occurs, and would inevitably occur even if we gave them ten times more than we do now. Such a thing as providence an Indian knows nothing about. That statement proves nothing. There is no Indian who ever lived—I refer to an Indian in a comparative state of barbarism—that would not, if he had nothing to do but eat his rations, as none of them have anything else to do, eat up his rations in one-third of the time that they would ordinarily be eaten up by a white person, no matter how ample they are; and if they were doubled or trebled or quadrupled, the result would be precisely the same.

I agree with the Senator from Missouri that we have acted badly with these Indians and with all the Indians, except that I do not think our action has been bad in the respect that he does especially; but I think the special crime we have committed against the Indians is that we have not prepared them for the inevitable, and that we have not taught them or constrained them to labor in order that they may live.

I do not subscribe at all to the Senator's statement that these people are like children in reference to the question of manual labor or being not in a condition to earn their living by manual labor. The Senator's ancestors and mine two centuries ago perhaps were as much barbarians as these people are, and yet they had no beneficent government to support them; but they delved and fished and hunted and did various things of that kind necessary to enable them to live, and did live, and out of that labor they have evolved and there has come the condition of things we see now in our civilization. But we have made the mistake of taking the Indians accustomed to the ways of barbarism and giving them the luxuries of civilized life.

In that same report from which the Senator read is a statement that stoves have been issued to these Indians, and he says that they are so enamored of stoves that they bring them into small quarters and gather around them, and have the stoves at such a heat as would make a white man sick. If we could have an administration of Indian affairs which would refrain from giving stoves to people who have no more use for a stove than a wagon has for five wheels, and would give them something they could use in the cultivation of the soil, and instruct them in the use of agricultural implements which the Senator says they never had in their hands, they would not be a charge on the people of the United States to-day, and not only a charge, but one which is bound to continue according to the present condition of things as long as they live. There has not been the first effective step taken to enable these people to be in any reasonable sense self-supporting; but as fast as these emergencies occur and the complaint comes about we absolve ourselves of all responsibility by running our hands into the Treasury of the United States and taking out the money necessary to meet the existing emergency and then let things go just as they were before.

I think that so far as the appropriation of money is concerned the United States have appropriated money enough and more than money enough to do everything that they ought to have done for these people. They have done it unwisely and will continue to do so until we in some way have a radical change of our whole system. Think of a people who are perishing for bread, think of a people who are starving under the eyes of civilized people, put it just as strong as the Senator from Missouri wishes, and yet we are appropriating thousands of dollars to educate a lot of children in order that they may starve more in accordance with civilization! If instead of that we had given them food, the money that has gone to supply them with schools would have kept breath in their bodies at least, although I would hesitate to subscribe to the statement made by the Senator from Missouri (and he makes it on his own personal knowledge) that four hundred of them or any other number of them have actually starved to death.

Mr. VEST. There is no doubt of it.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator says there is no doubt of it, and of course that takes the subject out of controversy; but, as I said, I would hesitate a long time before believing in such a statement, although I have no doubt they are driven to straits on account of their improvidence. They have never had inculcated any idea of economy in anything, and they eat up in two or three days the food that was intended for a week, and they go backward and forward to different agencies, and sometimes the number of people at an agency is too great for the food, the number of Indians being beyond the usual number.

In addition to that we take a people who have heretofore lived upon meat alone and we give them coffee and tea and sugar and a dozen different articles of food going to make up substantially an army ration. Of course these things do not sustain life as hardy articles of food do. We do not give them corn-meal. Corn-meal is almost unknown in the Indian establishment, but we give them the best flour we can buy. So we have cultivated in these men a desire for something which is not a part of their lot necessary or in any way essential, and which makes the job of feeding them a great deal more expensive and does them no corresponding good.

But, as I said, like anybody else I can discharge my responsibility by voting money. It is what we are doing in that cowardly way which is evidenced by our unwillingness to take this problem as we ought, reorganize the Indian service, and apply to this business the rules of common sense; but it is money, money, and everything apparently is more money all the time and without any regard to what will come of it or what result is to be obtained. These Indians are poor to-day, and to-morrow will be poorer, and next year will be poorer; for every year the cry will come up give, give, give; the money we collect from the people of the United States is used to keep these people who are not only in poverty but in idleness and vice.

Mr. VEST. If there is one subject that I am more reluctant to speak upon than another, it is the Indian question. The view I have to express does not chime in or coincide with the popular sentiment of the West. The man who thinks the Indians ought not to be permitted to starve is considered a sentimentalist, as actuated by mere philanthropy, a lecturing statesman. I speak very earnestly because I feel very earnestly on this question. I know, without reflecting on the Senator from Kansas, that his statements are incorrect. I know the Government has not issued enough rations to feed these people.

Mr. PLUMB. I want right here and now to enter a disclaimer so far as the people of the West whom I represent are concerned having that feeling toward the Indians. The Senator from Missouri may speak of Missouri, but let him not speak generally of the West in that matter.

Mr. VEST. I have not attacked the philanthropic character of the State of Kansas. God forbid that I should do that; but I am not speaking so much for the people of Missouri, because they care very little about this question; but I do assert as a fact that in the Territories where these reservations are, and where the Indians are, there is a feeling that they are a burden and a nuisance, and that they ought to be got rid of. I heard nothing else in all my tour throughout the West than "Get rid of the Indians; drive them away;" and whenever anything was said about giving them more rations, "Cut off their rations; let them work or die." I repeat here deliberately, you might as well say to the baby in the cradle, "Work or die," as to say that to Blackfeet, Assinaboines, Bloods, Piegans, and Gros Ventres, who lived for years on the chase; Indians who lived on the buffalo until white men came in through greed and avarice and destroyed the buffalo.

I saw myself several years ago in going to Colorado hundreds and hundreds of buffalo hides piled up at the depots for shipment to the East, and it was found out when brought here that they were absolutely useless. One of the buffalo hunters like Buffalo Bill would go on the prairies with a splendid horse and repeating gun and shoot down three hundred or four hundred buffaloes in a day, and his skilled mates would come in and pick up the hides and send them East, and they were found to be absolutely worthless. But the buffalo has disappeared. Summer before last there were 15,000 buffalo out of the immense herd that once roamed over the vast prairies of the West. The result is that these people are left without food. Take a blanket Indian who never had a plow in his hands, or hoe, or a spade, and tell him to dig. I repeat, you might as well tell a baby in the cradle to do it. And yet these people are anxious to know how to work. I did not find one of the chiefs who did not say to me, "Teach my people to work; give us a chance;" and upon the Flathead reservation to-day there are found Indians at work, and all this has been the result of what has been done by the Jesuits. I am a Protestant, but I am here to speak the truth. The Jesuits have done more for the Indians on this continent than every other agency put together. They have understood the Indian character, been at work for long years, and the only ray of hope, the only gleam of light I saw in all my trip among the tribes that I visited came from the Jesuits.

But I now want to come to a fact. I am making no issue with the Senator from Kansas; I do not know but that we agree largely as to the Indian schools; but I want to come to the subject of rations. When I was at Fort Assinaboine the head chief of the Gros Ventres made this statement:

> One of my children will probably die to-day of starvation.

The agent, Mr. W. L. Lincoln, was there, the very gentleman from whose report the Senator from Kansas read on Saturday; and I asked him the amount of rations on the ground, and whether this terrible statement was true. Here is the reply to it:

> Mr. W. L. Lincoln, United States Indian agent, Fort Belknap agency—
> Thirty miles off—
> made the following statement:
> "I wish to state that Congress has appropriated—

I ask the attention of my friend from Kansas, who is a humane man, a just man, to this statement. He ridicules the idea of an Indian having a stove. It is the most essential article that I found in September in that climate, and I venture to assert that if my friend from Kansas was to-day in a temperature fifty degrees below zero he would say, "Give me a stove," and he would hover over it and stay with it and keep around it until the last syllable of recorded time.

Mr. PLUMB. We did not take stoves away from these people. We took the buffalo from them.

Mr. VEST. But I want to say that these people were left without sufficient food during that terrible year. The summer lasts in that climate six weeks, and that is fair winter weather. I was there in September wearing an immense overcoat and hugging the fire at every opportunity, and they call that summer weather. What must it be now with the thermometer from forty to sixty degrees below zero? And then talk about an Indian not wanting a stove! You might take the most unadulterated Saxon that was ever brought into this country, and I think he would want a stove. What must be the condition of that people, with nothing but a few ragged blankets, with no clothes to talk about, and yet with no rations of beef issued to them, and the buffalo gone, not a coyote to be had for game? Here is Mr. Lincoln's account of the rations; I take it this is pretty authentic:

I wish to state that Congress has appropriated only sufficient money to pay for the following subsistence:—

For these whole tribes of Gros Ventres and Assinaboines, amounting together to 2,400 people—

150,000 pounds of flour and 25,000 pounds wheat—this will be equal to thirty weeks' rations; 180,000 pounds of beef (in gross)—

That is on foot—

it takes 30,000 pounds each week in the winter months when feeding beef—this would be just six weeks' rations—

Just six weeks' rations of beef for a winter of seven months, with the thermometer always down to about zero, and a large portion of the time thirty, or thirty-five, or forty degrees below it. What would be the condition of any human being under such circumstances? It is no wonder that the governor of Montana sent message after message to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that these Indians were dying. It is no wonder that the commanding officer at Fort Shaw, who is now in this city and with whom I conversed two days ago, said to me that he took his own headquarter wagons and his own rations and took them up to the Blackfeets and Piegans when starving to death; and notwithstanding all this four hundred and more died from exposure and starvation. Six weeks' beef rations!—

about 5,000 pounds of bacon, which they would eat up in four weeks. About 6,000 pounds coffee have been furnished. I have always carried some over, not deeming it necessary to be issued. Heretofore there has been plenty of game, and I have forced the Indians to subsist during the summer by hunting, except in the cases of the old and infirm. By this course I have always had enough to enable them to come through the winter in good shape; as to coffee, sugar, and tobacco, the issue of these has been prohibited by the Secretary of the Interior, except work enough has been performed to pay for it.

That is the work done upon the Government farm; there is where the two hundred and fifty bushels of corn were raised and the three hundred or four hundred bushels of wheat, but there is not a farm in that reservation, except one under the shadow of Fort Belknap, and that is under the control of white men; and when an Indian will go and do two or three days' work there, he will get half a pound of coffee, or two pounds of sugar, or something like that; and those are the rations, sugar and coffee, to which my friend from Kansas has alluded in his address. But this agent goes on and says his rations are insufficient, but he was doing his best to carry these Indians through the winter without starvation. I make no accusation against Mr. Lincoln; I suppose he has attempted to do the best he could with the instrumentalities in his hands; and I repeat I am not here in the interest of any sentimentality; I am here simply discharging my duty to a people without representation upon this floor, and speaking alone as I understand the dictates of humanity to suggest.

Mr. HAWLEY. In a certain sense I can agree with both the Senators who have spoken, the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Kansas. I have no question whatever of the suffering and death among these people during this last winter. My information is such that I absolutely believe it in addition to that the Senator from Missouri has laid before the Senate. I agree also with the Senator from Kansas that we ought to arrive at some permanent solution of this question to maintain these Indians otherwise than by doling out pittances from the Government every year. I believe that can be done, and is in the way of being done. But the Senator from Missouri is right again in saying that these Indians are going through a certain transition state. The buffalo, on which they have been accustomed to rely are passing out of existence. There are not enough left of them to be an essential element in providing for the use of these Indian tribes. I am informed also, by an authority which I have no doubt is correct, the authority, if the Senator from Kansas please, of one of the sentimentalists, but a Yankee of sound head and good sense, who has been over that ground himself and looked at it carefully, and he is the man who says:

Is it not time that we should make a wise and persistent effort not to perpetuate but to solve the Indian problem?

Precisely in the line of the remarks of the Senator from Kansas.

These people have abundant means to pay all the expense of their civilization, if it were not suffered to lie unused, a temptation to the white man's greed—

He says also, precisely in the line of the remarks of the Senator from Kansas—

So long as we furnish the means and almost necessitate the conditions of a shiftless life, it will be continued. If, on the other hand, we would but furnish the conditions and lay upon these people the necessity of a better life and teach them how to attain it, we would at least test the question whether or not they are capable of it.

But just between is this present condition of affairs. It is of very little use to argue, as our friend from Kansas does, that these people ought to starve in a different way; the question is whether they ought to starve in the present way or not. We may next year or by the second year get them so that they can live on these lands. This present year they can not do it; this present winter they have not been doing it. By piecing out the appropriations for them from the remnants of other appropriations, by, I believe, a bill giving an extra appropriation here, they will possibly get through the present winter; but the bill now before us concerns the year 1885–'86. The appropriation for all the Montana Indians in their various classifications is $54,500 less than the estimate of the Indian Department. It is $3,000 more than the amount given by Congress for the current year, to be sure, but that amount given for the current year was increased about $10,000, which under the provisions of the last bill was diverted from other points and given to them. It is $7,000 less than those Indians received this year, including the extra donation that was given to them. I submit that it will not be enough.

I want to enter upon the course pointed out by my friend from Kansas, but for the present I want to save them from starvation. What sort of a country do they live in? I accept the testimony of the Senator from Missouri in regard to a portion of it as true without any doubt whatever, for he has been over it and it concurs with the testimony of others. But if I understand aright—the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs can inform me—a bill is pending, which has passed the Senate, perhaps, which somewhat shifts the location of these tribes, the Assinaboines included, and will put them upon lands where they can live.

As to the agency for the squads referred to in line 1178, immediately following the paragraph this gentleman is speaking of, the Blackfeet, Bloods, and Piegans, that land raises excellent potatoes, excellent oats, and excellent barley. As I understand from the reports read here there is some wheat, but that is not considered good. The land is good for potatoes, for barley, and for oats, and is an excellent grazing country, and that shows a door wide open through which these bands of Indians can be led to a comparative degree of civilization, at any rate led to a condition in which they can support themselves. They go naturally from the buffalo hunt to herding, as we have seen exemplified in the case of various tribes and squads of tribes.

I agree with the Senator from Missouri in insisting that we must not let them die this year or next; and I agree entirely with the Senator from Kansas that we must just as soon as possible divert them from the old buffalo chase—indeed they are diverted from it, for there are no buffaloes—over to the herding to which they naturally adapt themselves, and I believe they can be made within three years self-supporting substantially; but at the same time I concur with anybody's request for an addition to that appropriation, and I will vote with anybody to increase the discretionary amount provided for on a subsequent page of the bill.

Mr. PLUMB. I expressly stated that I was not opposing the appropriation of this extra amount proposed by the Senator from Missouri. The cheapest way to rid ourselves of responsibility is to give money, because the money is in the Treasury and will come forth on our demand. But I was saying that this was only another step in continuation of that policy which has brought so little result and against which I was protesting, not against the particular appropriation. I never have opposed any appropriation to give food wherever it was supposed to be necessary, but I have said, and I say now, that only that necessity which has compelled the white race, the Anglo-Saxon race if you please, to put forth the exertion which has brought about the condition of things by which it is surrounded and which has accompanied its march, can ever do anything for the Indian; that unless you do bring upon him the necessity of labor he never will labor.

You of course have got to teach him, but after all his teaching has got to be the result of his necessity, and I do not think it is wise, notwithstanding what the Senator from Missouri says, to take an Indian and simply because we have robbed him, as he said, of his food that we should turn around and give him stoves, and thereby bring him into a condition of things in which other necessities arise which before he had been free from. I think that was a useless expenditure of money. He could live out of doors just as well as he ever could. I am not objecting to that particularly, but I refer to it to show that the money we do appropriate is not used as it ought to be used.

The Secretary says they only had six weeks' provisions provided for them. It is not because we had not appropriated the money. There is $110,000 in this bill for food—that is, which must be used for food, the whole of it—and an army ration, according to the estimate of the Commissary-General, costs for all the purposes connected with it, including shelter and care and wastage in transportation and all that, only 20 cents. Practically it is only about 17 cents.

Mr. HAWLEY. It would cost more than that by the time it got to Montana. It can be purchased about Leavenworth for 14 or 16 cents.

Mr. PLUMB. There is besides the expense of storehouses, the expense of clerks, &c., but including everything of that kind 20 cents, or perhaps 15 cents, or 12 cents, will take a good wholesome ration to these Indians from any quarter of the United States, all they can eat of good and wholesome food; but I do not think we are under any obligation to support these people as we do our own employés, to give to them the rations we give to the Army. I do not think we are under obligation to do that, and there is where I draw the line. I say give them plenty of wholesome food, but do not give them the luxuries of life as they have been getting, I do not care whether little or much.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator from Kansas tell me what was the appropriation for the last fiscal year for the Gros Ventres and Assinaboines?

Mr. PLUMB. For the Blackfeet?

Mr. VEST. I do not mean the Blackfeet and Piegans. They are at Fort Shaw.

Mr. PLUMB. I think we gave them last year $25,000.

Mr. VEST. The Assinaboines and Gros Ventres?

Mr. PLUMB. Yes.

Mr. VEST. I call the honorable Senator's attention to the fact that the agent——

Mr. DAWES. The appropriation for the Assinaboines was $25,000 and the Gros Ventres $23,000.

Mr. PLUMB. That was $48,000.

Mr. DAWES. Then in addition to that was the $50,000 which was spread over the whole. How much the Assinaboines had of that, and how much the Gros Ventres, does not appear.

Mr. VEST. This agent estimated when I was there that he could not get along for the next fiscal year with less than $50,000. That is exclusive of the pay of employés and improvement of the buildings on the reservation.

Mr. PLUMB. As I said, the difference is not in regard to the amount to be appropriated this year; but I wished simply to enter my protest against the method of expending this money. I do not speak of that by way of complaining of any one who has administered it; it is part of the vice of the system that the administration is transitory. No Secretary of the Interior going in for a possible four years only of service feels like taking a system of this kind, which has been indurated by years and years of existence, and tearing it up by the roots and substituting something in place of it. It would take a man not only with great courage but one certainly backed by the President of the United States and by Congress to do it. We must have the co-operation of all the branches of the Government in a reform of policy in order to make it effective, but some way ought to be devised whereby somebody will correct this service, and be certain of being retained in office until he has accomplished something, and not be liable to be swept out by the breath of political favor or otherwise while only a part of his work is done.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I differ with the Senator from Connecticut in this matter. I think both the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Kansas have been unjust, not intentionally, of course, in the statements which they have made, unjust to the point to which they have expressed themselves. The Senator from Missouri is giving the impression to the Senate from what he saw in 1883 that the present condition of the Indians in that Territory is one of starving and suffering and perishing. The description which the Senator gave of the lack of provision in 1883 was what grew out of the appropriation bill which passed in 1882, and the moment it came to the knowledge of the Department that the sudden disappearance of game in that quarter had brought that condition of things upon those Indians it did what was in its power to relieve them; it fell far short of the necessity of the case, and great suffering ensued. Then came the appropriation bill of 1883, under which these Indians lived till July, 1884, last year; and when it came to the knowledge of the Department that in the winter of 1883-'84 they were likely to starve if the whole provision was divided into fifty-two parts and only one-fifty-second part delivered each week, the order went to the agent to take the whole of it and distribute it by the last of March. Then Congress upon the meeting of the two Houses immediately after the holidays passed a bill appropriating $50,000 to provide for the interval from that time to the 1st of July, when this bill is to take effect.

Now, sir, so far as I know, so far as the information has reached the Department, this exigency has been met, and the Indians now are provided, as far as food is concerned, with sufficient, so that their suffering in that respect is comparatively small. The Government is not in my opinion open to criticism in this respect. It was not the Interior Department that proposed the cutting down of the appropriation in 1882 and 1883, nor was it this body. If a committee of conference was forced to meet half way a disposition to cut down all the appropriations for the Indians, that committee from this body was compelled to do it in order to get anything for the Indians.

To my certain knowledge they resisted the reduction. In the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate they sought to put up the appropriation to the highest point, and in committee of conference they held to that to their utmost ability. When the Interior Department found that that was not enough, dealing with Indians four thousand miles it may be from here, in the inclemency of midwinter shut out from us by snows and by the blocking up of all avenues of communication, they met it as best they could, and they have now in my opinion done as well as they could be called upon to do to meet that phase of this question. So while it may be true, and I do not controvert it, that the condition of things in 1883 was lamentable, and should have brought reproach upon those who insisted upon cutting down the appropriations then, to-day the Department in my opinion meets its duty in that respect. Something else is wanting and more than food for these Indians at this time. There is where I think the Senator from Missouri does injustice to this case. The Senator from Kansas also does injustice to the case in saying that the policy now pursued does not tend to bring about the very result which he says ought to be brought about, that of making the Indian self-reliant and self-supporting.

Sir, the very policy sought to be pursued by the Department, and in which Congress is called upon to sustain the Department, and comes limping and halting after with a scanty and hesitating and grudging support, is the policy that tends to make him self-reliant and self-supporting. I believe that the bureau in its present disposition, if left alone and if white men now would take their hands off from the Indian and the Indian's possessions, would make the Indian to-day well-nigh self-supporting. The Department has to contend not only with the savage Indian's proclivities, habits, and tendencies, but it has more to contend with the white man upon its track and upon its back, and everywhere wherever an Indian reservation is found in which the Indian has been taught and has learned how to support himself upon the soil and to make his reservation productive, like Naboth's vineyard, the white man is after it.

The Senator from Kansas says the Indian has done nothing toward supporting himself. Sir, take the Northern Cheyennes who burst away from the bonds put upon them down in the Indian Territory, wild Indians who went up through Western Kansas committing outrages and depredations and fled thence to Tongue River, seven hundred of them, and of their own accord and in their own way and by their own impulses set themselves up and started themselves without the care of the white man, and when they were found there cultivating the land and supporting themselves without help, white men set upon them and came here and demanded that country to be taken away from them. The cowboy goes there and tries experiments seeing how near he can come to the head of an Indian with a minie-ball and not touch it; and when the Indian in retaliation goes and burns down the habitation of this cowboy he comes here and makes complaint in the form of depredation, and the very case I have cited goes into the number of depredation claims that were here on Saturday, where without the slightest provocation the cowboy, because the Tongue River Indians were in his way taking care of themselves upon the public land, shoots them in broad daylight, and when the Indian goes and retaliates upon that cowboy, the cowboy's loss goes to swell the depredation claims!

Take the Navajo Indians, wild Indians ten years ago, now rich, supporting themselves, with millions of sheep and goats and horses, and with productions of blankets and other matters that they sell in the market, rich and self-supporting as they are because the white man has let them alone. Take the wild Indians that General Crook brought in from Mexico two years ago. They have of their own accord, because the white man has been kept off from them by the Army, turned to habits of industry, and General Crook reports that they are taking care of themselves. Take the Indians at the Pine Ridge agency in Dakota, five years ago among the wildest of all the Indians, now well-nigh self-supporting Indians under the wise administration of an agent who has gone there for the purpose of developing in the Indian capacity and reliance.

Sir, take all of a million and more of dollars in this bill devoted to the education of the Indians; take what is proposed, what has been done these last few years, and at the same time take the hand of the white man off from the Indians, and they will work out the problem of self-support themselves. They will not be indebted to the schools; they will be indebted more to the inspiration of their own instincts and their own opportunities, and they will show us that they are capable of doing what we have vainly tried in our slipshod halting way to do these many years with one hand while with the other hand we have been stripping the Indian of his possessions and blocking up his opportunities.

Why, let me tell you, Mr. President, of a single reservation of 102,000 acres set up in 1873. Ninety-five thousand acres of that reservation are to-day, and have been for the last twelve years, in absolute, exclusive possession of half a dozen white men who are herding 50,000 sheep upon it, and the residue of that reservation—7,000 acres—is all that is left for the Indians themselves, whose agent is compelled to purchase beef for their support of the very men who possess and occupy the reservation itself, and which beef is fattened upon the reservation. Take them off and the Indians of that reservation will not only support themselves, but the testimony of their own agent and of those around there is that they could herd 5,000 head of cattle, 1,000 head of which would support them, and 4,000 head of cattle every year would be a source of revenue.

A single reservation capable of maintaining all the Indians in the State of California is appropriated by white men, with knowledge brought home to the Indian Department and to this Congress of the fact that five or six white men, without title or color of title, are occupying it without paying one penny's rent or tax or other compensation for this vast territory of land. And yet the Senator from Kansas complains that the Indian is a constant charge upon us.

Why, sir, let the Indian alone, cease to rob him, cease to march down upon his territory with an army strong with banners defying the President of the United States and the laws of the United States; see to it that they withdraw within your own borders and upon your own heritage, if you have any, and let the Indian have his; and if you can not afford to educate his children in schools let him educate them himself, as he will, as the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] suggests, on the land that belongs to him. Cease to steal from him, cease to rob him, cease to murder him and his children, and let him alone. If you can not help him after you have gathered in all that is rich and valuable of his heritage to yourselves; if you can not afford to educate the children of only 250,000 whose possessions you have and whose revenues you have appropriated, at least cease to plunder and destroy him, and let him, if you will not help him, work out this problem himself.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, just a word. I agree with the general remarks of my friend from Massachusetts, but I wish to come down to some details. I understand that the appropriation for these people for this current year ending June 30, 1885, was lamentably insufficient. That is correct, I believe.

Mr. DAWES. It was until we added $50,000.

Mr. HAWLEY. I understand the regular appropriation was lamentably deficient. It was supplemented by a hasty deficiency appropriation made here in January. If that gets to them by the 1st of April they can live through until the next appropriation. I understand I am correct so far. Now, does the appropriation for the next fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, amount to the sum of those two appropriations?

Mr. DAWES. It not only amounts to the sum of those two appropriations, but is $17,000 larger; and I want to say in that connection, which I ought to have said before, that the colored part of the map before me [exhibiting], bordering upon the British Possessions, is the vast domain over which they roam in the mountains and in the valleys, and the bill which we passed last week gathers all these Indians into three reservations—one here, one in the center, and one at the end [indicating]. Those are in the valleys and the best part of the land, and if the Indians are brought in there they will have the opportunity, if the white man will let them alone—and that is about all they want now—of doing all that can be done toward self-support in that region of country. They can not be induced to go down where the Crows are at the bottom of this map where it is warmer. They prefer to live up there. It is not the policy of the Government now, whatever it may have been in the past, to drive the Indian at the point of the bayonet from place to place, but to consult his instincts and his love of home and his love of the place where the bones of his fathers rest, and, it being originally the land that belonged to him, to let him stay there if possible; and with that disposition, after two years of examination and postponement of the bill of last year because it did not quite conform to what was supposed to be for the best interests of the Indian, the lines have been established according to this map, and a bill has passed the Senate, and I hope will become a law, by which they will be established there [indicating], and will have this opportunity, and will have a right, which they have never had before, on each one of these reservations to $75,000 a year for thirty years.

Mr. HAWLEY. My information does not agree with that given us by the Senator from Massachusetts. I am informed that the appropriation offered in this bill is $7,000 less than the aggregate of what has been collected for them in various ways for the current year. But I do not stop to argue about that difference. There may be some mistake in the book-keeping in some way.

As to the appropriation for the current year for these people, who are in exceptional and, we believe, temporary circumstances of distress, that appropriation is not only for feeding, but it is to a great extent for clothing them. As to its sufficiency in clothing them I give just these figures, and I have done:

The goods sent in for the present year, allowing the number of the Indians to be 2,000 (the agent says 2,200 and the Army inspector of goods says 1,800), allows, for instance, to each person as follows: 1-10 yard blue flannel, 1-20 yard red flannel, one yard brown sheeting, one-quarter yard bed ticking, one-half yard calico, 6-20 pair women's wool hose, 6-100 woolen mittens, 3-20 pair blankets, one-eighth quilt, 3-200 pair men's shoes, 1-40 boys' shoes, 3-20 men's hose, 6-100 children's hose, 9-50 youths' hose, 161-2000 hats, 1-10 flannel shirt, 1-40 boys' flannel shirt, 1-10 hickory shirt, one-half fish-hook, 6-100 fish-line, 1-40 women's shoes, 1-40 misses' shoes, 1-40 boys' suits, 1-80 boys' blouse, 1-40 boys' suit, one-half yard gingham. These are all the goods for clothing these people.

Mr. DAWES. I will state just what was done last year, what was estimated last year, and what is in this bill.

For the Assinaboines the estimate this year is $35,000. The bill appropriates $30,000. Last year there was $25,000 appropriated. For the Blackfeet, Bloods, and Piegans the estimate this year is $100,000; last year there was $50,000 appropriated, and for 1886, in the present bill, the appropriation is $80,000. As to the Crows the estimate for this year is $90,000. There was appropriated last year $65,000, and there is in this bill $80,000. For the Flatheads the estimate this year is $13,000; for 1885 there was appropriated $11,000; for 1886 $11,000 is appropriated in this bill. For the Indians at Fort Peck agency the estimate is $100,000. There was appropriated last year $80,000, and there is in this bill for 1886 $96,000. For the Gros Ventres the estimate is $35,000. Last year there was $23,000 appropriated, and in this bill $30,000 is appropriated.

The aggregate of the estimates for this year for these tribes is $373,000; the aggregate of the appropriations for last year was $254,000, and in this bill the appropriation is $321,000. Now add the deficiency to last year's appropriation, and it makes $304,000 appropriated last year to $321,000 in the present bill; a difference of $17,000 more than in last year's bill, and $52,000 less than the estimate for all the Montana Indians, including the Crows.

Mr. HAWLEY. Does the Senator count in the $304,000 the $50,000 extra?

Mr. DAWES. I add to the $254,000 the deficiency of 1885, $50,000, making it $304,000.

There is not a member of the committee which I represent on this bill who will hesitate one moment in making an appropriation that shall be ample and full for these Indians for the coming year; there is nobody at the Department but who is anxious to make full and complete provision for these Indians; but we can not meet the case with food alone. The Indian has wasted and weakened and is now unable to resist the inclemency of the weather and the attacks of disease from past treatment. He can only be taken care of by bringing him out of the mountains and down upon the valleys and about the rivers and taken care of and fed then, and if the white men who are claimants for his possessions will let him alone, by degrees he will gather strength and courage and self-reliance, and instinct will prompt him to do something toward taking care of himself.

The proposition of the Senator from Missouri as now modified to increase the emergency fund every member of the committee will be in favor of, because no matter how large a sum is placed in the hands of the President to meet exigencies they have confidence that the President will not expend it unless the needs of the Indians shall require it, and I hope he will have ample means in his hands. He will report to Congress what he has done with it, and I am quite willing to trust him and his Department with ample money; and I give him my assurance that so far as I am concerned and as the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate and the Committee on Appropriations are concerned, they will go as far as the furthest in upholding the hands of a new administration that shall carry out the idea of the present in making the individual Indian learn how to stand upon his feet, to walk and to talk, and to so arm him in and of himself that he can meet as well as he may on equal terms the rapacious selfish greed of the white man.

Mr. VEST. I ask leave to withdraw the amendment I offered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has the right to withdraw it. It was only an application for unanimous consent. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1186, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twelve" and insert "ten;" so as to make the clause read:

Support of Chippewas of Lake Superior: For support and civilization of the Chippewas of Lake Superior, to be expended for agriculture and educational purposes, pay of clerk and necessary employés, purchase of goods and provisions, and for such other purposes as may be deemed for the best interests of said Indians, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1190, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twelve" and insert "ten;" so as to make the clause read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, it becomes the duty of the Chair to place before the Senate the unfinished business of Saturday's sitting, being the bill (H. R. 2550) to prohibit the importation and migration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia. The pending question is on agreeing to the motion to strike out sections 3 and 4, which has been divided, so that the first question is on striking out section 3.

Mr. DAWES. I ask unanimous consent that that bill may be informally laid aside that we may continue with the Indian appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the bill be informally laid aside, and that the Senate continue the Indian appropriation bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 7586) to amend section 5 of the act entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," approved June 10, 1880, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. ALLISON, Mr. PLUMB, and Mr. RANSOM were appointed.

The next amendment was, in line 1410, to increase the total amount of the appropriations for "telegraphing and making purchases of Indian supplies" from $35,000 to $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to offer the following amendment, to come in after line 1431:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay the expenses of a visit to Washington of certain Turtle Mountain Indians $500, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out the following clause, from line 1432 to line 1442, inclusive:

That the sum of $4,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury to the credit of the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians, for the purpose of paying the services and expenses of former delegates of said Eastern Band of Cherokees who have visited the city of Washington on business of the band, and to pay debts of the band: Provided, That no portion of said appropriation shall be paid for the debts of said band, expenses of delegates, until the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior have approved the same.

Mr. VANCE. I hope the Senate will not concur in this amendment. There are some debts contracted by the Eastern Band of Cherokees with all the formalities and solemnities with which they are capable of contracting, and by their council they have authorized them to be paid out of this fund, and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has given his sanction to the justice and propriety of the claim. I hope that this clause will not be stricken out by the Senate.

Mr. DAWES. The Committee on Appropriations propose to strike out this clause for this reason: There has grown up a habit of going among the Indians and getting appointed agents or delegates to represent the Indians here at Washington, until there is quite a crowd of them in this city representing different bands and different tribes of Indians, and they meet in council and give directions from time to time to this body and the other as is proper. They then come and ask us to take out of the funds of the Indians that we are trustee for money enough to pay them. That is not all; they employ able attorneys in the city to aid them when they have important claims before the various committees, until it has got to be a system which in the opinion of the Committee on Indian Affairs and the Committee on Appropriations it is high time to break up. Ever since I can remember (and that is not a very great while) we have had just such a proposition as this in every Indian appropriation bill. It is not always $4,000; but the poor Indians down in North Carolina get fleeced worse than almost any of them.

There were last year two or three conflicting delegations here each claiming to be the agents of these Indians, and if you will turn over to line 1455 you will see a novel way of settling the conflicting claims of antagonizing attorneys. I do not think I ever saw anything that would quite equal what there is on the one thousand four hundred and fifty-fifth line. It has reference to these poor Indians down in North Carolina:

That in hearing and determining the suit of the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians, numbered 13828—

That is the number of the suit—

the Court of Claims is hereby authorized and directed to hear and consider the alleged claim of Belva A. Lockwood for alleged professional and other services rendered and expenses alleged to have been incurred by her in aiding the said Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians in prosecuting their rights involved in said suit, and to determine whether said Belva A. Lockwood was employed by said Indians, and, if so, what amount, if any, is justly due to her on account of such services and expenditures, and to make and enter of record in the cause an order that the amount, if any be proved to be due her, shall be paid to her out of such sum or sums as may be found and determined to be due to the said Eastern Band of Indians from any funds held by the United States in trust for the Cherokee Nation of Indians.

Belva Lockwood was a constant and assiduous prosecutor of one view of the rights of these Indians; there was a gentleman whose name I do not see here who prosecuted another view of their rights, and then there was another delegation that had a different view; and now the sum of $4,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary—I do not think that had better remain in because it is surplus, all the money will be taken—is appropriated out of any money in the Treasury to the credit of the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians for the purpose of paying for the services and expenses of the former delegates. The Eastern Band of Cherokees have a fund in the Treasury which the United States has pledged itself to hold there for the purposes of education, and for those purposes only. That is the pledge by which the United States took it, and in the light of that just listen to this clause:

That the sum of $4,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury to the credit of the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians, for the purpose of paying the services and expenses of former delegates of said Eastern Band of Cherokees who have visited the city of Washington on business of the band and to pay debts of the band.

That is what this $4,000 is to be used for. How "former" they were I do not know, or how far back it would go. I venture to say that there rise up quite a number who will have the impression that they have visited Washington in former times on business of this band. I have no doubt of it from my own knowledge of the desire of Indians to come to Washington. The Indian Committee were instructed to investigate certain matters down in the Indian Territory, where it was necessary to have witnesses here this winter, and you would be amazed, Mr. President, at the anxiety and desire of Indians to visit Washington under the auspices of that committee, and they had more difficulty to keep the Indians back from Washington than they had to get them here to testify before the committee.

Now, anybody whose ignorance will permit him to set up the claim that in former times he has visited Washington on business of this band can have his share out of the fund pledged to education only. I think this clause ought to go out of the bill.

Mr. VANCE. The objection made by the Senator from Massachusetts to the clause as it came from the House I do not think is affected by his argument against the provision in a subsequent clause for paying for the services of a late distinguished candidate for the Presidency. I do not think that necessarily has anything to do with the desire that I have to retain the first clause on page 59 as it came from the House.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to ask my friend if she would not come exactly under the provisions of that clause he is advocating now? I think she has visited Washington in former times. There is no doubt of that, and I have no doubt she is perfectly satisfied that she did it on business of this band.

Mr. VANCE. I do not think she would come under this clause of which we are speaking. There is $4,000 appropriated by it, and by far the greater portion of that is claimed as the expenses of and as payment for the services of previous delegations of that band who have attended here upon business for them. The proviso in the latter part of the clause reads thus:

Provided, That no portion of said appropriation shall be paid for the debts of said band, expenses of delegates, until the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior have approved the same.

If it is not possible for the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to protect the Government and the Indian tribe against the claims of improper or surplus or unauthorized agents, it seems to me that there is no possible way to protect them. I can not see why we should refuse to pay the delegates already appointed whose services have been rendered and whose services and whose appointments have been recognized by the council of the tribe, and whose payment has been ordered out of their own funds by the council of the tribe, for fear some delegate might impose upon the Government and get money for services that he did not render. Lest we should possibly do wrong, we are certain to do wrong if we refuse to pay the expenses that have already been justly and legally incurred.

So far as the general principle of preventing the attendance of numerous agents at the city of Washington on the pretense of doing business for the tribes is concerned, I admit the justice and propriety of what the Senator from Massachusetts has said; but it seems to me that where an expense has already been incurred and properly incurred and legally incurred, we should not do wrong by refusing to recognize that for fear of imposition upon the tribes.

Mr. DAWES. The Government is bound to expend this money for educational purposes. What right have the tribe, if they have done it, to contract with men to come here to Washington to take their pay out of the fund devoted to educational purposes, much less to pay their debts? The tribe itself is under guardianship. The United States has assumed to take care of its funds and expend those funds in what to the United States and to them at the time the fund was created seemed to be the best way, and the United States holds it for that purpose; and it is a violation of the trust to pervert it to the payment of persons whom the tribe want to have come to Washington, much less to pay their ordinary debts. Upon what claim or what ground can it be justified to take a fund set apart for educational purposes to pay the ordinary debts of that band?

Mr. VANCE. If the Senator will allow me I will tell him the ground that I understand it is placed upon. These services were rendered for the preservation of this very fund and not their ordinary debts. It was the service of their agents sent here to procure this fund and to have it set apart for them for educational purposes.

Mr. DAWES. If they had let it alone it would have been a great deal larger now than it is.

Mr. VANCE. That may be.

Mr. DAWES. They have been nibbling at it for many years and getting it to pay this man and that man, and now they propose to pay other debts with it. If the Eastern Band of Cherokees mentioned here could be only encouraged by those about them to look upon the fertile lands of North Carolina and make them to bloom and blossom like the rose they would be living like the white people of North Carolina in abundance and in luxury, and we should have nothing to do but to expend this money for the higher education of those people. But instead, they have been encouraged by white people—not white people belonging to North Carolina; I do not mean to say that, but white people out of employment, who feel an anxious desire to serve the Indians here in Washington, and who come from distant parts and ingratiate themselves with the Indians, and carry the idea that they can accomplish some great thing here in behalf of the Indian, and then go back, and through an interpreter magnify their services till the Indian has come to believe that he can accomplish nothing here unless he has some hired agent to dog the heels of those who have the charge of these matters.

It is high time, sir, that it should be discouraged, and the most efficient way to discourage it is to let them realize that if they hire anybody to come here they must pay him as other people do, and not take it out of a fund sacredly consecrated to the beneficent purpose of educating the Indians.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations to strike out the paragraph which has been read from line 1432 to 1440, inclusive.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the following clause from line 1443 to line 1448, inclusive:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to pay to Franz and Charles Huning, out of any funds belonging to the Navajo Indians, $6,000; the same being a claim for damages caused by depredations of said Indians, and examined, approved, and reported to Congress by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the following clause from line 1449 to line 1454, inclusive:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to pay, out of any funds belonging to or that may belong to the Cherokee Indians, to George H. Pettigrew $2,000; the same being a claim for damages caused by depredations of said Indians, and examined, approved, and reported to Congress by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. WALKER. I hope the amendment proposed by the committee will not be agreed to. This is rather a peculiar claim. It is not for a depredation made by semi-barbarians, but made by intelligent men in a civilized tribe of Indians, men worth a considerable amount of property and against whom no process of law can issue. There is no court that has jurisdiction of this claim. If there was a court in which the parties who committed this depredation, some of whom are immensely wealthy, could be sued, a judgment had, and execution issued, the Government of the United States would not be troubled.

This is for a depredation committed by intelligent persons upon a hotel erected upon a railroad right of way through the Cherokee country, a property which was worth at least the sum of $2,500.

The parties who committed the trespass were afterward indicted and convicted in the United States court for the western district of Arkansas, not for the trespass, but for stealing the materials composing the hotel several days after it was torn down. They were indicted, convicted, and punished; but that does not do the parties who put up the hotel any good. If the guilty persons could be sued the money could be made from them. If the money should be taken from the fund belonging to the Cherokee people they would have the right to go upon those parties, who are amply able to satisfy the claim. I hope the clause will be permitted to remain in the bill. It is a peculiar case.

Mr. DAWES. I do not care to debate with the Senator from Arkansas the merits of the case. The ground upon which the committee recommends the striking out of the clause was set forth in the debate on Saturday, which led them to strike out all claims for depredations, not on their merits but for lack of information as to the merits. This case has been before the Committee on Indian Affairs. I do not know but that the Senator so stated. I was engaged and did not fully hear the Senator's remarks.

Mr. WALKER. It has been before that committee.

Mr. DAWES. There has been a good deal of trouble about this case and a pretty narrow squeak, if I may use that unsenatorial word, but it was not on that ground that the committee proposed to strike it out. They propose to treat all these depredation claims alike, and under the provision which has been adopted to have them brought before Congress in a different way at the next session, and I would hardly think it fair to single this one out and adopt it.

Mr. WALKER. This is different somewhat from the ordinary claims presented here. It is not, as I remarked, a claim against Indians who are not intelligent; it is a claim against the Cherokee people, who claim to be as much civilized as the people of any of the States. They have their lawyers, their schools, their property, their public affairs, and they are intelligent; but among those intelligent Indians this infamous outrage upon the property of a white man was encouraged to be perpetrated, and the parties were protected by the authorities of the nation just so far as they could protect them.

The case stands differently from the other claims in the bill. If the party could go into the courts I should not stand here and argue that the claim should be paid, but I say that in this case there should be an exception. It does not stand like a case against the Cheyennes or Arapahoes or other wild bands of Indians.

I hope the Senate will vote down the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. I remember something of this claim last year. I believe it was on the Indian appropriation bill last year as it came from the House, and the delegates of the Cherokees appeared before the committee and claimed that the gentleman here named did not own the property, and they protested against the claim being paid. I think the Senator from Arkansas had better let this go with the other claims to be investigated hereafter, and if this gentleman has a proper claim and owned the property I think there will be no trouble in his getting the money.

Mr. WALKER. There is no question in regard to the title of the party. There is no proof to the contrary.

Mr. ALLISON. I am only speaking of what the delegates said of the proof stated to the committee last year.

Mr. WALKER. I can imagine that the delegates would say almost anything against a claim of this character; it is their custom to do so.

Mr. MAXEY. It seems to me there is great force in the position taken by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. WALKER]. Here this man evidently has a right. At all events we are bound to assume that he has a right, because the claim has been examined and approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. Under the universal doctrine that everything done by an officer intrusted with the performance of a duty is presumed to have been done rightly and properly, that would make it a good claim. Notwithstanding what may have been said outside by somebody else, the presumption of law is, when the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has examined and approved the claim, that the claim is good, and it stands as good until overturned by better evidence.

It is clear that we can not carry those people into any court that I know anything about. If there be no remedy at law and these violators of the law were protected in their depredations on private citizens by the authorities, as stated by the Senator from Arkansas, then I say it is but right and proper that this claim should be allowed and charged to the Cherokee fund. That is the way it strikes me.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Texas on Saturday urged upon the Senate that they should take several claims that have already been stricken out and pass those in the bill, but finally acquiesced in the action of the Senate in striking them out for the purpose of bringing them before Congress in another shape. I should like to ask the Senator——

Mr. MAXEY. If the Senator will pardon me one moment I can explain, as I think, the difference. I did concur precisely in the course pursued, and why? Because the claims as to the others were for depredations committed by wild Indians who were under the entire and exclusive police power and control of the United States Government, and they had been placed on reservations and guarded in those reservations. I hold that in cases like that, if men break over and destroy the property of the people, the Government of the United States would be as responsible, provided the Indians had not the funds themselves, as where the people of Allegheny County, in Pennsylvania, who were intrusted with the police power were held responsible for the destruction of a vast amount of property a few years ago belonging to railroad companies. I put it on the same ground. But that does not apply here. This is a different case. This is the case of a civilized tribe, which has the entire control under our intercourse law of all their matters as between themselves. They have their courts and they attend to all their affairs. There is a certain class of cases of crimes committed against the white men or by white men that may be brought in the Federal courts at Fort Smith, but this is a civil case; it would be a civil action for damages if the party had any court to go to.

The courts there can not try it because a white man is one of the parties and the Indian courts have no jurisdiction in a case of that kind. The Government has never intrusted a case ex contractu or ex delictu to the Federal courts under such circumstances. If we believe the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who examined and approved the claim, as the bill says he did, we must I think presume that that must be true; for I never heard of setting aside on the mere outside statement of anybody the solemn official declaration of an officer under oath in respect to a matter intrusted to him.

So I take it this claim has been examined and approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and is therefore a good claim, and it is unlike the case of the Indians who are corralled on reservations. It is a case in a civilized tribe; and it seems to me that when the right exists the remedy ought to be somewhere. I apprehend the Senator from Arkansas states the case from knowledge, as he lives right close by. If the depredators were protected by the Indian tribe, the Cherokee Nation, they should be held responsible for the wrong perpetrated by their own people and upheld by their own authorities.

Mr. DAWES. The object of the amendment adopted Saturday was to more thoroughly examine the cases that are on file in the Interior Department on the ground that the Secretary of the Interior had not been furnished heretofore with the means of a thorough examination. He had no fund to expend in that behalf; he was not able to send anybody upon the ground; he was not able to examine a single witness; he was not able to probe or investigate or in any manner sift the evidence which a claimant sent to him. It came to the knowledge of the committee through the Department itself that although he had approved of these claims from time to time he was not satisfied with his own approval; he became convinced that as to the great majority of these cases they demanded a more thorough sifting and reconsideration.

Now, this is one of those cases. As the Senator from Iowa has said, a delegation of the Cherokees appeared before the committee and maintained stoutly that this man had not any title.

Mr. MAXEY. I should like to ask the Senator, for I did not quite understand the idea that he designed to convey, if the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in this case says that he is not satisfied with the ruling of the Department?

Mr. DAWES. No, not in this particular case; I am speaking of the claims as a whole. He sent up here, as I read on Saturday, a list numbering 3,100. The great majority had written across the back "approved," and yet about them the Commissioner and the Secretary would make precisely the same statement I have made to-day. This particular one failed to get through the Committee on Indian Affairs once on the ground of doubt whether the man had any title. I have omitted to say a word on the merits of the claim, because I thought that the proper ground to stand upon was to say that all of these cases had better go back and go through with that same process.

Mr. WALKER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question? Was there any proof contrary to the title of the Pettigrew claim before the committee, or has the Senator seen any proof whatever against his title, or was it merely the suggestion of the Indian delegation?

Mr. DAWES. I should say that the evidence on the one side was about of the same character as the evidence on the other, and that if I were a juror I should be obliged to follow the burden of proof in the matter. If either side had a burden of proof to make out I should rather think he had lost his case.

Mr. WALKER. Was there not sworn testimony on behalf of the claimant?

Mr. DAWES. Yes; it was sworn testimony, I know.

Mr. WALKER. And there was merely a suggestion on the other side and no sworn statement.

Mr. DAWES. There were delegates from the Indian Territory here very anxious to be sworn. Without condemning the claim at all, I submit to the Senate that this case should not be singled out, that it should go with the rest; and if the Secretary of the Interior should be satisfied with the proof in his Department as to this case it will come here stronger next session than it ever came, I assure the Senator. If, on the other hand, the Secretary feels that he ought to reinvestigate it and then reapproves it, there can not be any ground for opposition to it.

Mr. WALKER. Will the Senator allow me to say that the Federal court for the western district of Arkansas passed upon the question and the parties were indicted and convicted for stealing the property of the claimant and this whole matter came up. I think that should be satisfactory, the case having been passed upon by a court of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations to strike out the clause which has been read. [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. WALKER. I call for the yeas and nays. ["No!" "No!"]

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WALKER. I ask leave to withdraw the call.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas asks leave to withdraw the call for the yeas and nays. If there be no objection the call will be withdrawn. The ayes have it, and the clause is stricken out.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, to strike out the clause from line 1455 to line 1471, inclusive, as follows:

That in hearing and determining the suit of the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians, numbered 13828, the Court of Claims is hereby authorized and directed to hear and consider the alleged claim of Belva A. Lockwood for alleged professional and other services rendered and expenses alleged to have been incurred by her in aiding the said Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians in prosecuting their rights involved in said suit, and to determine whether said Belva A. Lockwood was employed by said Indians; and, if so, what amount, if any, is justly due to her on account of such services and expenditures, and to make and enter of record in the cause an order that the amount, if any be proved to be due her, shall be paid to her out of such sum or sums as may be found and determined to be due to the said Eastern Band of Indians from any funds held by the United States in trust for the Cherokee Nation of Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations "for support of schools," in line 1475, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "thirty-five;" in the same line, after the word "dollars," to strike out "and of this amount not exceeding $10,000 shall be used for the establishment of a boarding-school at or near the center of the Pottawatomie reservation, in the Indian Territory;" in line 1480, after the word "dollars," to insert "to be immediately available;" and in line 1482, after the word "all," to strike out "five hundred and seventy-five" and insert "six hundred;" so as to read:

For support of Indian day and industrial schools, and for other educational purposes not hereinafter provided for, $535,000; for construction and repair of school buildings, $40,000, to be immediately available; and for purchase of horses, cattle, and sheep, goats, and swine for schools, $25,000; in all $600,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will suggest that in line 1481, after the word "swine," there should be a comma and the word "and."

Mr. DAWES. I hope that correction will be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, that correction will be made. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

Mr. VEST. I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator having charge of the bill. How much of this $600,000 is to go to the day schools and how much to the boarding-schools?

Mr. DAWES. I am unable to answer that question exactly; but it is to be distributed. The Interior Department maintains day schools on all the reservations where the conditions are such as to justify them and where the treaties are such as to require them to the extent of the appropriation. There are treaty stipulations which are very far from being fulfilled in reference to day schools; for instance, on the Sioux reservation, where we took all the lands the Sioux had some fourteen years ago and in exchange gave them a vast rich territory in Dakota, and covenanted to maintain a day school for every thirty scholars on the whole of that reservation. There are others like it; so that there are unfulfilled obligations of treaties. If a treaty is a debt, if having covenanted with a people to pay them a sum of money or to do a particular act creates a debt or obligation, we are debtors to these Indians to-day to the amount of between three and four million dollars for unfulfilled obligations in relation to schools, nearly all of which are day schools.

There are those who think that the day school is not a wise expenditure of money. There are those who think that the day school is the best, and that the boarding-school is not a wise expenditure of money. There are those who think that industrial schools at a distance from the reservations are an unwise expenditure of money, and there are those who think they are the wisest of all expenditures. There is a good deal of difference of opinion. In some places a day school is a waste of money. I do not think a day school, except perhaps under that rigid system that one particular religious denomination is able to maintain in its schools, would be a wise thing among those northern Indians.

I heartily agree with what the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] said not long since in relation to the efficiency and the usefulness of the schools maintained by a certain religious denomination. They are not the ordinary day schools. But in other parts of the Indian country, speaking in the general term, there is no school so useful as the day school. There have been improvements introduced within the last two or three years since Congress wisely made a superintendent of Indian schools, who has them in charge and systematizes the whole thing, and who brings to his work great enthusiasm as well as wisdom and discretion. They have sought to introduce into each day school some particular attraction that will bring the Indian scholars there and induce them to come to these schools. I think that they are a very wise feature of Indian education; while at the same time I would not differ much with the Senator from Missouri when he gets up to tell us about an Indian day school he saw in Northern Montana. I hope he will excuse me for anticipating what he is going to say, for I have had experience very much like his, but I would not have him make war upon the system because of its defects.

Mr. VEST. I only regret that the bill does not show in this appropriation how much of this money is to go to the day schools and how much to the boarding-school. I have had personal experience about the matter, but I suppose I was very unfortunate in that respect, as I did not see a day school where the money was not actually thrown away. You may as well pitch it into the middle of the Pacific Ocean; it does no earthly good. There will be five hundred in attendance on ration day and fifty the rest of the time. We can not educate Indians in that way. If I were able to discriminate here I should certainly vote a definite appropriation to the boarding-schools, but the bill is so framed that no distinction can be shown; and I suppose it will have to go as it is. I only wanted to express my opinion about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1488, before the word "hundred," to strike out "six" and insert "eight;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That the entire cost of any boarding-school building to be built from the moneys appropriated hereby, including furniture, shall not exceed $10,000; and the entire cost of any day school building to be so built shall not exceed $800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "dollars," in line 1488, to insert the following proviso:

And provided further, That the school year of each pupil in the Indian schools herein appropriated for shall be held to include all usual and necessary vacations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the words "Arkansas City," in line 1494, to strike out "twenty-six thousand five hundred" and insert "thirty thousand six hundred and twenty-five;" after the word "all," in line 1502, to strike out "thirty thousand" and insert "thirty-four thousand one hundred and twenty-five;" and in line 1504, after the word "dollars," to insert "and pupils from any Indian tribe, other than the five civilized tribes of the Indian Territory, may be admitted to this school;" so as to make the clause read:

For support of the industrial school near Arkansas City, $30,625; and said sum shall be disbursed upon the basis of an allowance of $175 for the support and education of each pupil; for purchase of material and erection of shops, barns, and other necessary outbuildings, and for repairs of same, $2,000; pay of superintendent of said school, $1,500; in all, $34,125; and pupils from any Indian tribe, other than the five civilized tribes of the Indian Territory, may be admitted to this school.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1509, after the word "school," to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "eighty;" and after the word "all," in line 1518, to strike out "seventy-six" and insert "eighty-one;" so as to make the clause read:

For support of Indian industrial school at Carlisle, Pa., and for transportation of Indian pupils to and from said school, $80,000; and said sum shall be disbursed upon the basis of an allowance not exceeding $175, exclusive of transportation, for the support and education of each pupil actually maintained in and supported and educated at said school, but actual cost of transportation and other expenses of such pupils as are sent out of said school among farmers for support and education may be disbursed from said funds; for annual allowance to Capt. R. H. Pratt, in charge of said Indian industrial school, $1,000; in all, $81,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1520, after the word "hundred," to insert "and fifty;" in line 1522, after the word "hundred," to insert "and fifty;" and in the same line, after the word "each," to strike out "ten thousand" and insert "twenty-two thousand five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For support of one hundred and fifty Indian pupils at the Saint Ignatius mission school, Montana, at $150 each, $22,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1524, to strike out "for support of Indian industrial school at Forest Grove, Oreg.," and insert "for support of the Forest Grove Indian industrial school at Forest Grove, or such other place in Oregon as the same may hereafter be located;" after the word "dollars," in line 1532, to insert "heating apparatus, fixtures, and furniture for school buildings, $10,000;" and in line 1334, after the word "all," to strike out "forty-one" and insert "fifty-one;" so as to make the clause read:

For support of the Forest Grove Indian industrial school at Forest Grove, or such other place in Oregon as the same may hereafter be located: Two hundred Indian pupils, at $175 per annum each, $35,000; pay of superintendent, $1,500; completion of school-building and necessary outbuildings, and repairs and fencing, $5,000; heating apparatus, fixtures, and furniture for school buildings, $10,000; in all, $51,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1539, after the word "dollars," to insert "of which $1,500 shall be immediately available to pay indebtedness for 1885;" so as to read:

For support of one hundred and fifty Indian pupils, at $175 per annum each, at the industrial school for Indians at Genoa, Nebr., $26,250, of which $1,500 shall be immediately available to pay indebtedness for 1885; pay of superintendent, $1,500; purchase of material and erection of necessary outbuildings, and necessary repairs, $2,000; in all, $29,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1545, after the word "and," to strike out "children" and insert "pupils;" so as to read:

And pupils from any Indian tribes, except the five civilized tribes in the Indian Territory, may be admitted to this school.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "school," in line 1548, to insert:

And the limitation imposed upon the appropriation for this school for the fiscal year 1885 in the act approved July 4, 1884, is hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1553, after "Virginia," to strike out "twenty thousand and forty" and insert "twenty-one thousand;" and in line 1554, after the word "dollars," to insert "transportation of pupils to and from said school, $3,000; in all, $24,000;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of one hundred and twenty Indian pupils at the school at Hampton, Va., $21,000; transportation of pupils to and from said school, $3,000; in all, $24,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the clause from line 1557 to line 1560, inclusive, as follows:

For the purpose of establishing an industrial school for the education of Indian youths, and the erection of the necessary buildings, at Santa Fé, N. Mex., $25,000.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I am opposed to the adoption of the amendment. This is a proposed appropriation of $25,000 to assist in the establishment of an Indian industrial school at Santa Fé, N. Mex., the capital of the Territory. There are in the Territory of New Mexico about 40,000 Indians, I am told. In the vicinity of Santa Fé and northerly there are about 20,000, I think. There is already established an Indian school at Albuquerque, some eighty miles southerly, which is in a flourishing condition, having not far from two hundred pupils. It is a good school; it is answering the purpose for which it was established. There are about 20,000 Indians in that portion of the Territory, and the school is supplied almost wholly, as I am informed, from those 20,000 Indians.

There is a great necessity for the establishment of a school at Santa Fé. Santa Fé, as all Senators are undoubtedly aware, is the educational center of the Territory. It is an old place. The Catholic Church has been established there for some hundreds of years, and it has exerted a most excellent educational and other good effect upon the Indians and the people of the Territory. But there is at the present time in Santa Fé, as I understand, no Indian industrial school, and I think no Indian school whatever; at least there is none that to any considerable extent supplies the great necessity that exists for such an institution. The city has about 8,000 inhabitants. About 1,500 of those inhabitants are Americans proper, and most of the rest are Indians or of Indian descent. The town is as well situated as any place in the Territory, or as any place anywhere possibly could be, for the purpose for which this appropriation is designed.

Four or five years since a gentleman who for a time resided in my own State, Professor Ladd, who had charge as principal of our normal school which was located in the town where I then resided, and who is in every way a most competent and able Christian, and is an active, vigorous gentleman in whatever he undertakes, moved with his family to New Mexico and devoted himself there to the cause of education. He located at Santa Fé. He has built up a strong institution, the university of the Territory, the only chartered and, in fact, the only university or institution of any kind answering collegiate purposes there. It has become quite flourishing. He is an enthusiast in his work and has become greatly interested in the Indians and their education. He has already, by means of contributions from benevolent individuals in different parts of the country, raised nearly $25,000, and that is devoted to the establishment of this proposed industrial Indian school. Nearly $25,000 have thus been raised by his personal exertions and contributed by the benevolent of the country. The citizens of Santa Fé have given one hundred acres of land, consecrated to this purpose, valued at something like $12,000. It is situated a little out of the city, in a very convenient and proper location.

Professor Ladd has already established an Indian school in connection with the university, where, by a contract with the Indian Department now existing, there are some fifty Indian pupils being educated. The contract runs for the term of six months and compensation is given to him for the education of the Indian children at the rate of $120 per annum each. I notice all through the bill that the ordinary compensation is $175 per pupil. In one instance it is $150, and I think in one instance, I am not quite sure that I am accurate, it is more than $175, perhaps $200 per pupil; but $175 seems to be about the average compensation. This gentleman is educating these children at that point by contract with the Indian Department for $120 apiece. He needs assistance in the enlargement of the capacity of the school, and he asks for this appropriation of $25,000, which, as Senators will see, is really very trifling as compared with other appropriations which are made in the bill, and as compared with appropriations made for the purpose of education. It is a very liberal bill in that regard.

It does seem to me as though this $25,000 which were placed in the bill by the House—and we do not ordinarily look there for instruction or encouragement or stimulus in the direction of educational efforts, at least this body does not—it does seem to me, I say, as though this small appropriation of $25,000 ought to be given. The 20,000 Indian population has no other school whatever. There is but one such school in the Territory for the whole 40,000 Indians, and at that school, as I stated before, there are only about two hundred pupils. The others, the fifty I have spoken of, are being educated or are to be educated the remainder of the six months at the institution founded by this gentleman. When the appropriation which he has relied upon shall be given, if it shall be given by Congress, and the new buildings erected upon the one hundred acres, the land given by the citizens, he proposes to convert the location now occupied for this purpose, where the fifty are to be educated, into a like institution for the education of Indian girls, so that if this appropriation is given there will be an institution upon the five and a half acres and also another and a larger permanent institution upon the one hundred acres.

I hope the committee will not insist upon the amendment, and that they will give us this trivial sum and let this really great enterprise go on. There is no Territory, there is no portion of the whole United States, that needs educational influences to the extent that the Territory of New Mexico does. The illiteracy in New Mexico—that is, the proportion of those over 10 years of age who can not read and write—is 40 per cent. of the whole population. It is also very largely an Indian population, as we know, and it is a very difficult population to reach. With, as I understand, only one school in that whole Territory for the benefit of the Indian population, it seems almost trifling with our obligations to those people not to give them another school.

Mr. VEST. I sincerely hope that the amendment of the committee striking out the appropriation will not be agreed to. What I say is always in general accord with the committee, for this is a very liberal bill, and has my entire approbation with one or two exceptions.

There are, as I happen to know, some twenty pueblos, as they are called, in New Mexico, with a population of between 12,000 and 20,000 Indians. As the Senator from New Hampshire has said—and he has not overdrawn the picture—extraordinary exertions have been made for the education of those Indians, and the enterprise is succeeding very rapidly. It has one feature which commends itself especially to my approbation, and that is it is now proposed to add to the male school the education of females. If there is any one fact well established—absolutely—it is that where you educate an Indian boy and send him back to his tribe he lapses into barbarism; he can not resist the pressure of ridicule, which with the Indians is the most potent weapon in the world, and then he out-Herods Herod and becomes the most barbarous Indian in the whole tribe.

The Jesuits solved this question. They started with a female school at Saint Ignatius, Montana; they educated the girls, taught them how to sew, how to keep house; taught them music, reading, writing, and arithmetic. An Indian girl would go back and marry a full-blood Indian, or a half-breed, who is generally worse than a full-blood, and in three months, under the ridicule of the tribe, that educated Indian girl would become the worst of the tribe. She would have to show by unusual barbarism that she was not imitating the white people. The Jesuits after years of experiment found out that they must establish a male school in connection with the female school, and now they have, or had when I was there summer before last, fifty boys and fifty girls in that school. They have five sisters and five brothers educating the girls and boys, and when the Indians graduate they marry, and then the Jesuits, with the assistance of the Indian agent, build up a little house, break up some land, and that couple becomes a nucleus of civilization and Christianity for the neighborhood. So you may go now to the Flathead reservation. The Jesuits first went there from Saint Louis in 1850 at the request of the Indians, and to-day you will find log houses and school-houses built by the Indians. The North Pacific Railroad goes through, and you would think in looking from the windows of a car that the train was running through a white settlement if you did not see the Indians upon each side of you. This is the result of a wise and judicious adaptation of the instrumentalities of Indian education and Indian nature to Indian circumstances.

Twenty-five thousand dollars! What does it amount to in this great experiment of trying to save those people, if possible, from absolute annihilation? I know my friend from Massachusetts will not stand upon this paltry amount of money when individuals have gone there and when the people of Santa Fé are putting in $12,000 toward building the school, and there are between 12,000 and 20,000 human beings whose destiny depends upon it.

I sincerely hope there will not be a vote in the Senate against retaining the appropriation. Let us put it back; I only wish it was $50,000 instead of $25,000.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I wish to join in the appeal which is made to the Senator in charge of the bill to permit this item to stand. I can not add anything to what has been said, because the whole case has been presented, but everybody who knows anything about Indian affairs knows that the industrial schools are doing more good than any other agency. They are doing more to elevate the Indian, to civilize him, than any other means that are employed. The great difficulty is to prevent the Indians under our Indian system from becoming roving vagabonds. These schools, in the manner in which the Senator from Missouri has described, have exerted a most powerful influence to prevent vagabondage and to fix them in homes, giving them a taste for agriculture and for civilization. We can not expend the public money any better than in the mode prescribed in the bill for these industrial schools. That is my opinion about it, and I think it is the opinion of every one who has investigated the subject.

I hope that the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. DAWES. It is highly gratifying to hear from Senators the commendations of the subject of Indian education to those who have been early in the field and constantly fighting for it. It is especially gratifying to hear Senators express their gratification at the result and their conviction of the wisdom of the policy.

All that has been said meets my hearty concurrence, and it may seem a little ungracious that I should advocate the adoption of the amendment striking out this $25,000 for the erection of a school at Santa Fé. As to the benefit of industrial schools and as to the wisdom of the education of the sexes, advocated by the Senator from Missouri, there can be no doubt. The Senator first saw it, and I fear that he only saw it, among the schools of the Jesuits of Northern Montana. I only wish the Senator would go about among the industrial schools which have been established by the United States, and at which large sums of money are expended every year and are appropriated in this bill.

There he would see the two sexes educated together in precisely the way that has commended itself to him, and he would see something further. If he would go to Carlisle or Hampton, if not to any other of the industrial schools, he would see young married couples brought there and taught to set themselves up in housekeeping and to make for themselves a habitation, to furnish it, and to keep it under instructions—taught how to live like civilized people, and ready, after they have got the other education, to carry along with it this.

One of the most beneficent features of the education of the Indians is the bringing of young married couples there and teaching them, and at the same time taking the male and female pupils who go out belonging to the same tribe and seeing that they are either married before they go back to their tribes or that they form such marriage relations as will prevent their falling back in the manner the Senator expresses apprehension for.

I wish the Senator would extend his observations and not concentrate them. I think he would be a hearty supporter of the whole system as it is now, under the benefit of the experience of such great teachers of the Indians as Captain Pratt and General Armstrong, and under such wise supervision as the superintendent of Indian education, Mr. Haworth, exerts over the whole system. He would see that it is becoming more and more practical, and he would see that safeguards of the future of the educated Indian are being thrown around him, and avenues are being opened in which he or she can maintain himself and herself.

The problem, to my mind, is almost solved. I see in the new administration just breaking in upon us here the light of a realization of the hopes and expectations of those people, because I expect that the new administration not only will carry on this policy, but will enlarge upon it and improve upon it, and will have the credit itself of accomplishing what those people have been laboring for many years to accomplish; for that administration in which a thing is accomplished will always have all the credit of it.

Now, why do we propose to strike out this appropriation for New Mexico? It was not estimated for. The Department in making their estimates for educational purposes looked the ground all over, and calculating upon how far they could induce Congress to make appropriations for this purpose, calculated where they would do the most good. There was an effort to get one of these schools in Montana by the Great Falls of the Missouri, where ultimately there will be a great town. There is a fund belonging to the Utes in the Treasury—$20,000 a year. We have obligated ourselves to pay them, and the President of the United States is at liberty to use it just as he pleases. It is proposed to take $18,000 of that $20,000 from the Utes and put an industrial school down close by their reservation in Colorado and not put one in Montana.

There is a school of very large proportions at Albuquerque, only eighty miles from Santa Fé by railroad. The railroad runs between the two towns, which are eighty miles apart. That school has now two hundred scholars; it has a capacity for five hundred. It is proposed to enlarge that, to erect a new one between that and the school in Colorado, and then by increased appropriations to enlarge the facilities of all the schools. That was as far as the Department felt that they could ask Congress to go, because that was as far as they could assure Congress that they would make every dollar count.

There were some reasons presented before the committee by those responsible for the expenditure of this money why it was not wise to put a school, certainly at present, at Santa Fé, besides its proximity to Albuquerque. Albuquerque can take all the children who can be gathered as well from New Mexico as from Arizona for two or three years to come.

There is another reason. There is a Catholic school at Santa Fé, where quite a large number of Indian pupils of both sexes are educated; a school of remarkable progress and promise. It is conducted on a different plan from what it is possible for us to establish a school there. If the United States establishes a school there its pupils must be mingling with all the people there. They can not be kept from contact with the people of Santa Fé as the Catholic school is; and that is one reason why the Catholic school is so flourishing. According to their system the pupils are kept from contact with the people of Santa Fé.

I do not care to say anything disparaging of the people of Santa Fé. I shall content myself by being the organ of the committee in this regard and communicating to the Senate the reasons which induced the committee, and those were reasons coming to the committee from those responsible for the expenditure of this money, that Santa Fé was not a good place for the establishment of the school, in addition to the fact that there is one so near it and that we propose to put another one on the Ute reservation where we can utilize $20,000 that will be otherwise distributed per capita, and decline to put one in Montana.

I was greatly impressed by the fidelity and conscientious labor of the gentleman to whom allusion has been made. I have had frequent talks with him as well as with a gentleman who represented himself to be the bishop of New Mexico, all in the interest of a school at Santa Fé. If it is an improper place for a school, as has been represented to the committee, I think at least it might as well be postponed. I will say that this is the first time I ever have been found opposing any appropriation for the erection of a school for Indians.

Mr. VEST. Before the Senator from Massachusetts takes his seat I wish to call his attention to the fact that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs wrote a letter to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House recommending the establishment of this very school. I simply call attention to that fact to show that there is nothing in the appropriation as it came from the House which is at all antagonistic to the views of the Interior Department or of the Indian Bureau. They think the school ought to be established.

Mr. DAWES. It is true that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs did at one time advocate the establishment of the school, and I have nothing to show that he does not do so at this time. I do not know but that he does. I have no reason to doubt it; but the Secretary of the Interior appeared before the committee and gave his views in reference to the wisdom of erecting the school, as did the superintendent of Indian schools and others. I represent the committee in what I have said.

Mr. BLAIR. I admit that I had hoped the Senator from Massachusetts would represent himself, his own impulses, in reference to this matter, and that he would not have said anything whatever against the effort to disagree to the amendment. I think I am representing the matter correctly when I say that if he and the committee have proceeded in their action in striking out the appropriation upon the ground he has stated they are misinformed and that they misapprehend the situation.

The substantial objection, the only objection really that the Senator has suggested, as it seems to my mind, is that Santa Fé is not a fit place, and that for some reason it is not a proper location; that there is something about the quality of the city and its inhabitants which would be likely to result in a deterioration of the Indian if he is brought in contact with them. The truth about that is (and I have taken some little pains to reinform myself since I learned that that suggestion had been made about Santa Fé), that it is quite the equal of any New England city of the same population in the matter of morality. I am told that it is a city of as large religious facilities, that the average of moral status is as high as in the white cities of the North or of the South, and that so far as drinking saloons and other places of an objectionable character are concerned, there are no more of them there than are averaged in cities of like population in other portions of the country, and that it is an act of defamation to stigmatize the city of Santa Fé as inferior to other cities of the country in that regard.

Santa Fé has a population of some 8,000 at the present time. Albuquerque, eighty miles distant southerly, with its surrounding population of nearly 20,000 Indians, and having all facilities for the education of two hundred Indians, or at least educating that number now, is a still larger city and has no better moral status whatever. I do not undertake to say that it is inferior, for I know nothing of the kind, but I presume that both cities are of such a character that it will not hurt the Indians to associate with the people there. Upon this very point I hold in my hand the statement of the governor of the Territory, Mr. Sheldon, known to most Senators present, I have no doubt. He makes a formal recommendation for the establishment of an Indian industrial school at Santa Fé. He says:

There can be no better place at which to establish an Indian school than Santa Fé. It is celebrated for its agreeable and healthy climate, and it is convenient to all the pueblos in the Territory, and the Navajoes, and Mescalero and Jicarilla Apaches.

I recommend that the necessary appropriations be made and that other steps be taken to establish the school in accordance with the views expressed in the within letter.

L. A. SHELDON,
Governor of New Mexico.

I might almost say that members of the Appropriations Committee, in fact some I know, have heartily agreed in this recommendation of the governor indorsing this specific recommendation for the establishment of the school.

Now, as to whether there is need of such a school, can it be possible to raise that question when with 40,000 Indians in that Territory there is now existing but a single school, the one in Albuquerque. What if they have facilities; they can be enlarged by the expenditure of more money, and certainly as much as it is proposed to appropriate will be required to assist in the establishment of the school at Santa Fé. What if the school could be enlarged so as to accommodate five hundred; suppose you had accommodations for the education of five hundred Indian children; what is that among so many? You must work the old miracle again if these accommodations are to answer for a population of 40,000.

We have nobody to rely upon but ourselves and the benevolence of the country for the original stimulus or motive for education, the disposition to be educated. That has got to be created in this class of people. The very germ of civilization and improvement has to be planted. It is by no manner of means as it is with a community that has learned the value of education when once it has come to taste the heavenly gift and take care of itself. But we are responsible for the missionary effort among these people to give them the inclination to be educated, for they know nothing as to the benefits of education.

I hope that the school at Albuquerque will be enlarged, and that it will be furnished with accommodations not for five hundred but for a thousand children, if necessary. Why not also establish a school at this other point, eighty miles distant, at the political, the educational, the religious center of the Territory? It is a point which for two hundred years at least has been that way, where the white and Indian populations have come generally in contact, for it has been the center of the Territory all these years. Before the white man was known Santa Fé was the point of rendezvous for the Indians in that part of the continent. When others have furnished 50 per cent. of all that is required, when benevolent private individuals have contributed so much, why not give this little paltry contribution of $25,000, which can certainly go there as well as anywhere else on the continent? It will be in the way of nobody. While enlarging the contribution for other schools in other portions $100,000, as the bill came from the House, I do not know why this particular appropriation, which has been hit in the head by some sidelong and I believe malicious movement in some other direction, God knows where this blow came from, I do not see, this little contribution, sanctioned by the House, recommended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, recommended by the governor of the Territory, and indorsed by other strong recommendations, is to be stricken out. Everywhere else the committee has increased the appropriations.

The committee talk about the application for the establishment of another school in Montana, and the manager of the bill certainly left the impression on my mind that they had done nothing in response; but what do we find in the bill?

For support of one hundred Indian pupils at the Saint Ignatius mission school, Montana, at $100 each, $10,000.

That is the bill as it comes from the House with reference to Montana, and our committee add an amendment making the number of pupils one hundred and fifty instead of one hundred, and they add to the compensation for the education of those children $50 each, making it cost the Government $150 apiece to educate these children, instead of $100 each as the bill stood, and they increase the total appropriation for the Montana school $12,500, merely for the running expenses of the school already there. That is all right. Montana ought to have more, I doubt not. So I might go through the bill. Here is another increase of $10,000 at one point, $5,000, $4,000, $4,000 again, $25,000 in one place, $15,000 in another, all to aid the cause of education. I see an increase of about $100,000 in the bill as it came from the House.

I hope that the committee adding to its already high reputation as a liberal committee, especially in the direction of education, will not insist upon striking out this little paltry contribution for the establishment of a new and a very important school.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected; there being on a division—ayes 22, noes 25.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1560, to insert:

For the purpose of erecting a dormitory and such other buildings as may be necessary for the Indian school at Albuquerque, N. Mex., $10,000.

Mr. DAWES. I offer an amendment to the amendment, to add after the word "dollars," at the end of line 1563, the words:

Of which sum $2,200 shall be immediately available.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1563, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to erect buildings for a school for the Indians near Grand Junction, Colo., $15,000, to be paid from any money due the confederated bands of Ute Indians; and in addition thereto he is authorized to use the sum of $8,000 out of any money available for that purpose heretofore appropriated: Provided, That before such school shall be established there shall be donated to the Government for the purpose of said school not less than one hundred and sixty acres of land, together with a sufficient amount of water for the cultivation thereof, on which land the said school buildings shall be erected; to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1613, before the word "Indian," to strike out "five hundred;" and in line 1616, after the word "States," to strike out "or Territories;" so as to make the clause read:

For care, support, and education of Indian pupils at industrial, agricultural, mechanical, or other schools, other than those herein provided for, in any of the States of the United States, at a rate not to exceed $167 for each pupil, $83,500. And wherever the word "children" or "child" occurs in that part of the act making appropriations for the Indian service for the fiscal year 1885, approved July 4, 1884, under the heading "Support of schools," it shall be construed to include all Indians of whatever age that may have been or are pupils in any of the institutions therein provided for.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, before the word "thousand," in line 1634, to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twenty-eight;" in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert "of which amount $3,000 shall be immediately available;" so as to read:

For transportation of pupils to and from Indian schools, and also for the transportation of Indian pupils from all the Indian schools and placing of them, with the consent of their parents, under the care and control of such suitable white families as may in all respects be qualified to give such pupils moral, industrial, and educational training, under arrangements in which their proper care, support, and education shall be in exchange for the labor, $28,000; of which amount $3,000 shall be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "available," in line 1635, to strike out "Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior be authorized and directed to report to" and insert "The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to report to;" in line 1641, after the word "amount," to insert "if any;" and in line 1642, after the word "money," to insert "alleged to have been;" so as to read:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to report to Congress, on or before December 6, 1885, the amount, if any, due the Miami Indians of Indiana and Kansas for money alleged to have been improperly taken from moneys due to said Indians and paid to other Indians, in violation of the treaties of 1854 and 1858, including attorney's fees necessarily paid by said Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to strike out section 8, as follows:

SEC. 8. That whoever shall furnish to any Indian, by barter, sale, gift, or exchange, any gun, rifle, pistol, or ammunition or munitions of war, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not less than $100 nor more than $1,000, and be imprisoned not less than six months nor more than two years: Provided, That this provision shall not apply to the five civilized tribes of the Indian Territory; and that the Secretary of the Interior may issue such permits to Indians for the purchase of arms and ammunition for sporting purposes as he may deem proper: And provided further, That the President of the United States may, in his discretion, disarm such Indians as in his judgment may seem best, to preserve peace and prevent depredations All arms thus taken shall be received by the Secretary of War, who shall report all arms received by him, from what tribe taken, and the just value of said arms; and Congress shall appropriate the requisite funds to pay for all arms taken, and said sum shall be paid to said tribe, and, as near as may be, to the original owners of said arms, or their heirs.

Mr. DAWES. In the matter of the eighth section I wanted to try unanimous consent to improve it a little before the question of striking out is submitted. I ask unanimous consent to go back to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is section 8 that is now under consideration.

Mr. DAWES. Then I am in order. Pending the question of striking out section 8 I desire to move an amendment of it in the fifth line. I move to strike out the words "less than six months nor," so that it shall read "and be imprisoned not more than two years," striking out the minimum.

Mr. VEST. I should like to inquire of the chairman if he proposes to strike out the whole of it what is the use of amending it?

Mr. DAWES. I can not, of course, tell whether the Senate will strike it out or not, and I thought possibly it would be so improved that the Senate might leave it in.

Mr. VEST. It seems to me if the Senate adheres to its action heretofore on the subject of general legislation in appropriation bills it must rule this out.

Mr. DAWES. I have no doubt about its being independent legislation, and if the Senate adheres to its rule it will go out; but how can

I beforehand say that the Senate will adhere to its rule? I should like to perfect it before the question is put on striking out.

Mr. VEST. I have no objection.

Mr. DAWES. Of course I can not under the ruling do it except by unanimous consent. The purpose is to strike out the minimum of imprisonment. I think there ought to be a maximum, but there ought to be no minimum.

Mr. VEST. That is right.

Mr. DAWES. I think there may be cases where a violation of the provision ought not to be punished absolutely by imprisonment of "not less than six months." The maximum gives any judge of fair discretion an opportunity to punish as he sees fit. If the section is to be stricken out of course there is no occasion to amend it.

There are several sections here, the Senate will observe, that the committee have been compelled to recommend should be stricken out. There are provisions in some of them that are exceedingly useful and wise as legislation, but every one of them needs some amendment; some provisions, most important in my opinion, have crept into them unintentionally which are palpably unconstitutional and will have to come out if the sections remain. If the whole goes out, then we have nothing further to say; but the necessity that the House felt for this led the House, I have no doubt, to do what its own judgment thought was unwise in putting it on an appropriation bill.

Mr. VEST. Before passing to another section I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question in regard to section 3, which we have already passed. That section provides:

That no purchase of supplies for which appropriations are herein made exceeding in the aggregate $500 in value at any one time shall be made without first giving at least three weeks' public notice by advertisement.

I have not had time to turn to the Revised Statutes, but my recollection is that there is a general provision as to the advertisement that shall be made of these purchases. If there is a provision of the general statutes that covers the sort of advertisement here referred to, why insert this specification?

Mr. DAWES. There is a provision of the statutes, but this is always repeated in an Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. VEST. I noticed it in another appropriation bill which we passed last year. It always seemed to me that it ought to be "advertised as now required by law."

Mr. DAWES. I am inclined to think, though I have not looked at the Revised Statutes, that this is substantially what is required by law; but it comes down in each appropriation bill, and it is thought wise to repeat it so that it shall be before the eyes of every agent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves to perfect section 8, recommended to be stricken out, by striking therefrom, in line 5, the words "not less than six months." The question is on agreeing to that motion.

Mr. DAWES. Leaving in the "not" and striking out "nor;" so as to read "not more than two years."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator moves to strike out "less than six months nor." The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of the committee striking out the section.

Mr. DAWES. In the fourth line the language is "not less than one hundred nor more than one thousand." I move to strike out "less than one hundred nor."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves, in line 4, to strike out "less than one hundred nor."

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. After the word "depredations," in line 13, I move to strike out all the remainder of the section and insert in lieu:

All arms thus taken shall be appraised at their value when taken, and the amount thereof paid to each Indian from whom taken, and a sufficient sum for this purpose is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. Said arms shall be sold and the proceeds covered into the Treasury, and report shall be made to Congress of the proceedings hereunder.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the former ruling of the Chair, approved by the Senate on appeal, the Chair holds that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. DAWES. I ask unanimous consent. I knew it was out of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to offer an amendment.

Mr. DAWES. Before unanimous consent is asked, I will state the condition of things that has prompted this legislation. There are Indians, especially the Cheyennes and Arapahoes, who are wild Indians, down in the Indian Territory, about 6,000 of them, who are armed with the very best of arms, better than the United States manufactures, for they have gone into the States and purchased the very best of arms. Each head of a family among them is receiving under what is called a lease of their lands about $14 once in six months, which enables them to purchase all the ammunition they want. They are insubordinate in the extreme. They command the situation. They not only kill their own cattle, but anybody else's, especially those of the contractor, and whenever they want anything of the agent and he is unwilling to comply, as the agent told me in my committee-room—on one occasion one of them demanded of him a beef to be delivered immediately, and not wait for the day of issue, and he declined to do it, and the Indian drew upon him his rifle and repeated the demand. The only way the agent could save his life was to then and there, under the rifle, draw his order for the beef, and the Indian took the order and went away, and the agent sent the Indian police after him to arrest him. By the time the Indian police overtook him he had sufficient friends around him to defy the police, and they withdrew. Thereupon the agent sent to Fort Reno for what force they had, which was about fifty strong, and they followed these men up and by the time they overtook them the friends of this Indian, armed with Winchester rifles, had gathered around him and deliberately and coolly told the soldiers that they did not care to have any trouble with them, but they would advise them to retire to Fort Reno, and discretion led them back to Fort Reno. That is but one instance.

They do as they please. They are armed, and I say it is necessary for the peace of the Indians in that Territory and for the proper management of that reservation that they be disarmed.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I should like to ask the Senator if these Indians are so warlike and troublesome and so much better armed than soldiers of the United States, how are we going to disarm them? How is it going to be done?

Mr. DAWES. There is a difference between the power of the United States in whole and in part. There were but fifty soldiers at Fort Reno, and there are certainly seventy-five or one hundred in the whole Army. I think the United States have power to disarm them, but this provision as it stands proposes to disarm them without making them compensation. The amendment proposes that when an Indian is disarmed the value of his weapon shall be paid him then and there, so that he will understand that we are not to deprive him of his property without paying him for it. There have been many instances where Indians have been disarmed and been promised recompense. At one time up in the Sioux country it was found necessary to take from the Indians their ponies, and in Northern Dakota the ponies of one band of Indians were all taken from them, under a promise that they should be driven to Saint Paul and sold and the proceeds brought back and distributed among the Indians from whom the ponies were taken. But the inclemency of the weather between Dakota and Saint Paul, as well as the laudable desire of white people to improve their stock of ponies, and the failure to sell them out when they got to Saint Paul, led to the result that the Indians never got a penny for their ponies. And these Indians down in the Indian Territory never will get a penny for their rifles unless they are paid for when they are taken away. The object of the amendment is to provide money to those who take the rifles to pay the Indian on the spot. The previous provisions of this independent legislation provide for a severe punishment to any one who shall sell them another rifle. If this is to stay in the bill it ought to be amended in that way. It will not hurt it any to amend it in this way if you strike it out afterward.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to amend the section as has been proposed. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection, and the amendment is received. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, to strike out the section as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, to strike out section 9, as follows:

SEC. 9. That section 2139 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, amended and re-enacted so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2139. No ardent spirits shall be introduced, under any pretense, into the Indian country. Every person who sells, exchanges, gives, barters, or disposes of any spirituous liquors, beer, wine, or any intoxicating beverage to any Indian under the charge of Indian superintendent or agent, or introduces or attempts to introduce any spirituous liquor, beer, wine, or any intoxicating beverage into the Indian country, shall be punishable by imprisonment for not less than six months nor more than two years, and by a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $1,000; but it shall be a sufficient defense to any charge of introducing or attempting to introduce spirituous liquor, beer, wine, or any intoxicating beverage into the Indian country that the acts charged were done by order of or under authority from the War Department, or any officer duly authorized thereunto by the War Department; but no part of this section or of section 2140 of the Revised Statutes shall be a bar to the prosecution of any officer, soldier, sutler, or storekeeper, attache, or employé of the Army of the United States who shall barter, donate, or furnish in any manner whatsoever liquors, wines, beer, or any intoxicating beverage whatsoever to any Indian."

Mr. DAWES. I do not know that there is any use of asking unanimous consent to amend that, but in the eleventh and twelfth lines the minimum penalty should be stricken out.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will not ask to have the minimum penalty stricken out. If he thinks it is too severe, let him ask to reduce it; but I think if you intend to correct these abuses by prosecutions on the frontier you want to have some substantial minimum penalty. If you left it without any minimum penalty, the actual penalty would probably be twenty-four hours or $5, or something of that kind.

Mr. DAWES. Of course if the Senator differs with me it will be impossible for me to get the amendment in, and I withdraw it.

Mr. HARRISON. No, sir; I rose simply to suggest a better amendment than the one the Senator from Massachusetts suggested. I am not making an objection.

Mr. MILLER, of California. This section ought not to be stricken out. It ought to stand if we can possibly leave it in under our rules.

Mr. ALLISON. We can not.

Mr. MILLER, of California. We can do it by unanimous consent. It is certainly a very valuable provision of law and ought to stand. The Indian wars and Indian troubles come about by the sale of liquor in the Indian country. This is amendatory of the existing law.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from California will permit me to suggest that the section we have just stricken out is much more important.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I do not think it is.

Mr. VEST. Section 8 as amended, that gives the President the right to disarm Indians when they become dangerous, is one of the most important provisions that could be put in this bill. I suppose, without undertaking to ascertain the motives of any individual Senator, it was stricken out because it was general legislation. There can be no earthly objection to section 8 after the amendments made by the Senator having charge of the bill.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I do not think it was stricken out only on that account.

Mr. VEST. If we are now to adopt section 9, let us reconsider and go back and adopt section 8. I have no objection to either one of them. I think they are both important.

Mr. DAWES. I think they all ought to go out.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I think they all ought to stay in.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will amend it so that if it goes out it will go out in good shape.

Mr. DAWES. I did suppose, until the law was declared otherwise, that if it went out the conference committee would have jurisdiction of the shape of it. If I am mistaken as to that, I should like to get this amendment in.

Mr. BLAIR. If this is not touched, I suppose it may be passed and become a law. Here is one other quite important modification of existing law in this section as it comes to us from the House. It has come to be the case that among the Indians probably more injury is done by the use of the milder forms of intoxicants than by ardent spirits and wine, which are the forms of intoxicating liquors that are now prohibited in the existing law. The object of this section is to prohibit the introduction of ale and other forms of intoxicating liquor which have not been usually understood to be prohibited in the Indian country. That is one very important modification. The other is to fix a minimum punishment, so that the penalty when there is a violation of the law shall amount to something. As Senators have said, this section if it can become a law will be very beneficial legislation. We all know how it is that a civilized race destroys a barbarous or savage race more by intoxicating drinks than by all other forms of destruction combined. I was reading only the other day that from my own section of the country, New England, they are now transporting to the coast of Africa enormous quantities of intoxicating liquors, which are being introduced to the natives in large quantities, and in a single instance one tribe on one occasion, from liquor that went from New England to the coast of Africa, had a general drunken brawl, in which over two hundred of the tribe lost their lives. That is the sort of missionary effort which we under our commercial relations are exerting in Africa.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator yield to a question?

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly.

Mr. COCKRELL. Did I understand him to say that the good people of New England had been manufacturing distilled spirits and sending them to benighted Africa to the demoralization of the people down there in Africa?

Mr. BLAIR. If I did say so, what of it?

Mr. COCKRELL. I simply wanted to understand what the fact was.

Mr. BLAIR. Did I communicate to the Senator any information?

Mr. COCKRELL. I wanted to know whether the spirits were manufactured in New England and sent down to Africa to demoralize the people there.

Mr. BLAIR. If the Senator will come up to New England he can satisfy himself. I think that he would get all he wanted in that direction as well as in schools, and it may possibly have as great attractions to him there as would any portion of the civilized globe. [Laughter.] I do not know whether I am under obligation to say that this is done by the good people of New England, but I have no doubt that they feel good in consequence of this manufacture frequently, and they pass for as good people as the majority of us. I am not one of those who hold that a man who happens to be engaged in a legalized business in this country is necessarily a wretch because that business, authorized and sanctioned by law, happens to be pernicious in its general effect upon the community.

Mr. VEST. I have no sort of prospective object in view; but I wish to inquire whether the Senator includes Maine within the territory of New England.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not know so much in regard to Maine. I can not say in reference to Maine. I have not been there very much, but I never saw much intoxicating liquor in that State. The prohibitory law, I take this occasion to say for the benefit of my friends on the left and the universe generally, does prohibit in the State of Maine; and in the State of Maine to-day, as compared with what was consumed before the enactment and enforcement of that law, in my belief, based upon careful inquiry, it does not consume per capita one gallon of intoxicating liquor where formerly it did ten.

But to get back to the point with reference to this proposed legislation, I took occasion to simply utter a truism in reminding the Senate that it is by means of alcohol in its various forms, and perhaps specially in its milder forms, that civilized peoples now extirpate those who are inferior to them, and the milder form of intoxicants are destroying more Indians to-day, and destroying more Americans probably too, than those which are properly classed under the term "ardent spirits," by which name the more powerful liquors are recognized. I happened to speak of this illustration drawn from my own section of the country, because I have no disposition to indulge myself in any special glorification over New England. She has her faults, but with all her faults we all love her still. I mentioned this fact, and I have thought seriously of bringing it to the attention of the Senate by a formal resolution to be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations; for it seems to me that it is a crime against the reputation of our country, it is a crime against civilization, and an audacious insult to the Heaven which has given us the blessings we enjoy in this country more than are enjoyed elsewhere on earth, that we are to-day, while opening amicable relations with the inhabitants of the Congo Valley, looking out prospectively to a profitable communication with 200,000,000 of people who inhabit that dark continent, as it is properly now called—I think it is a great crime that our people are sending the seeds of death there more rapidly than we are those of life and civilization.

I beg pardon for this diversion, Mr. President, and would recall the attention of the Senate to the important modifications of the present law which are contained in this legislation as it comes to us from the House. One is its prohibition of what is getting to be the chief evil—that is, the introduction of beer and the milder forms of intoxicants among the Indians; and the other is a minimum of imprisonment and also of pecuniary penalty, so that when there is a prosecution the law may have that sanction which may make it effectual as against subsequent wrongdoers.

As the present statute is, the fine is required to be not exceeding $300, but it may be 5 cents, and the result is that the fine amounts to nothing. The imprisonment may be not exceeding two years; the result is that the imprisonment comes to nothing, and thus there is no actual penalty whatever against the introduction of intoxicating liquors among the Indians. It is very little use for us to put the million dollars we are appropriating by this very bill into the education and general improvement of the Indians when with the other hand, by our failure to enact efficient legislation and enforce it, we give the devil and his imps a much greater power for evil than we give to the opposing forces for good.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, this debate discloses the fact that probably there should be some additional legislation upon this subject. It also discloses the fact, I think, that it is impossible for us to consider proper legislation in this bill. We have a Judiciary Committee, which can correct the evils spoken of by the Senator from New Hampshire if there be evils in the administration of justice in the Territories.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator understand the question of temperance to be one that is within the purview of the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. ALLISON. I understand the Senator from New Hampshire to state that one defect of the existing law is in its administration, that the courts there do not administer the law in the spirit in which it was enacted, and if so, probably some further provision should be made. The Committee on Indian Affairs probably can also take cognizance of the information furnished us by the Senator from New Hampshire that now recently new modes of introducing intoxicants are adopted. But it is manifestly impossible to consider such a question upon an appropriation bill. We have had these committees in session for nearly two years, and this matter has just suddenly come before the Senate. It seems to me if this law is administered now with reasonable spirit and effect it will be so administered for nine months until new committees shall have an opportunity or the regular committees of the body can have an opportunity at this session to correct these evils. I hope the section will be stricken out.

Mr. MAXEY. Section 9 of this bill appears to be simply an amendment of section 2139 of the Revised Statutes, and is in the direct line of that section of the Revised Statutes, and makes the introduction of spirituous, vinous, or malt liquor into the Indian country more restrictive than by that section. While the use of ardent spirits, wine, and malt liquors among the Caucasian race is an evil, with Indians it is certain destruction. I speak from personal knowledge for twenty-five years. No curse has ever been inflicted on any people on earth greater than the curse of intoxicating drinks upon the Indian race.

The section proposed is plain. It does prevent in any shape, form, or manner the introduction of spirituous liquors, vinous liquors, or malt liquors. It is exclusive in its character, but for wise purposes it reserves to the Secretary of War the right under proper authority to permit it for certain purposes. That would give him the right to allow it for medical purposes. But it seems to me that no measures could be adopted which would be of greater service to the Indians than such as would absolutely and effectively prohibit the introduction in any shape, form, or manner of any character of intoxicating drinks. For one, therefore, I do not appreciate the reasons for striking out the section.

The Senator from Iowa says it is legislation on an appropriation bill. Well, on that point it is just as manifest as a thing can be that when legislation comes here which the Senate approve, they leave it on the bill. When legislation comes here that they do not approve, we raise the point that it is legislation on an appropriation bill. Now, for one, I assert that the House had a perfect right to send the bill in such mode as they saw proper, and we have the proper right under our Constitution to amend any bill that comes to us; and although I have always opposed legislation on appropriation bills, yet in this matter I am so earnestly in favor of prohibiting in every conceivable shape the introduction of liquors among the Indians that I favor this section, and I know what I am talking about.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, that is not any rule which permits us to do what we want to do, and prohibits us from doing what we do not want to do. That is no rule which precludes——

Mr. MAXEY. I did not say that was the rule, but the practice.

Mr. DAWES. That is no rule which makes not in order that which we do not want to have in a bill, and makes that in order which we do like; and therefore the practice which the Senator from California and the Senator from Texas urge upon us is the practice of abolishing rules. We might as well go along with one rule, just as I knew one learned parliamentarian, who was about to publish a book on parliamentary law, say that it was the shortest book that ever was published on that subject; it would have just one sentence in it, and that was, "Never put a fool in the chair; put somebody in the chair who knows his duty, and then he would rule in order just what ought to be in order, and rule out of order just what ought not to be in order." A rule which says that independent legislation which I like is in order and that which I do not like is out of order, is no rule at all.

I want to call the attention of the Senate to a particular part of this very section which the Senate says it will not amend; it will swallow the whole or not at all. If any person "introduces"—beginning at line 9—"or attempts to introduce any spirituous liquor, beer, wine, or any intoxicating beverage into the Indian country, shall be punishable by imprisonment for not less than six months nor more than two years, and by a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $1,000."

If an apothecary carries any alcohol into the Indian country, puts it into bottles by which to make spirits of camphor or to bathe a broken limb, or if an Indian agent or a man lawfully there carries in for his own purpose, for his own use, not for the purpose of giving it away to an Indian or anybody else, any liquor, he is bound to go to the penitentiary.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Not if he gets an order from the War Department.

Mr. DAWES. The soldiers are those who do that.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Anybody can get an order from the War Department.

Mr. DAWES. What has the War Department to do with the administration of Indian affairs in the Indian Territory except so far as a soldier is concerned? Now, to put such a provision as that upon the statute-book is to nullify the whole thing. Insisting upon a minimum in every such case as that, of imprisonment not less than six months, is not the way according to my opinion to promote the cause of temperance.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I think the Senator is mistaken about this being confined to soldiers. There is nothing said about soldiers in this section.

Mr. DAWES. Does the Senator understand that a private citizen sent to the Indian Territory, or going down there on business, would go to the War Department?

Mr. MILLER, of California. I do understand exactly that.

Mr. DAWES. I understand that there is another provision of law to which that refers, that permits officers and soldiers of the Army to obtain from the War Department, when they are sent down there, permission to take spirituous liquors.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Under this section any person can take liquor into the Territory if he gets a permit from the War Department.

Mr. DAWES. The War Department is not authorized by existing law to give to anybody but officers or soldiers a permit, and the object of that reference to the permit is to leave untouched the authority in the existing law in reference to it.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me to make a statement here? He is under a misapprehension as to the existing law. The section is just like the existing law in the particular that is now being discussed. It only differs in the penalty. The law as it now stands, after making the prohibition of the introduction of ardent spirits and wines, is:

> But it shall be a sufficient defense to any charge of introducing or attempting to introduce liquor into the Indian country, that the acts charged were done by order of or under authority from the War Department, or any officer duly authorized thereunto by the War Department.

The existing law with reference to the jurisdiction of the War Department is not changed at all. There are no changes from the existing law except as to different kinds of liquors or intoxicants being included, and as to the extent of the penalty. The minimum is fixed and increased of the pecuniary penalty and the penalty of imprisonment, so that the law will amount to something; and then beer and other malt liquors are prohibited, whereas hitherto they have not been.

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator understands that the War Department undertakes to deal with anybody but officers of the Army and the soldiers down there, he understands it differently from what I do, and if he proposes to extend the jurisdiction of the War Department over civilians by that construction, or if it has that construction, and then any one who fails to get permission of the War Department here in Washington is bound to go to the penitentiary whatever his motive may have been in having liquor in his apothecary's shop or elsewhere, it is not a provision which, in my opinion, ought to stand. When there was no minimum of punishment every man was perfectly safe who did the act innocently. This section undertakes to make a law that punishes those with innocent intentions precisely like those who have guilty purposes; and that is my objection to it.

With a single amendment and in a separate bill this provision would get my vote; but the Committee on Appropriations have felt called upon to apply the same rule to provisions in this bill which met their approbation that they have applied to provisions in the bill that they disapproved of, because that is what they understand is the use of a rule. I hope, therefore, that having stricken out excellent provisions because the rule requires us to do so, we shall not falter when we come to this.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not wish to prolong this debate, but the Senator from Massachusetts, after arguing that this was a severe and an improper provision, that an innocent man must be imprisoned six months and must pay at least $50 fine, and so opposing it upon its merits, sits down with saying that if it were in a separate bill he would vote for it. He falls back upon his old objection that this is new legislation and therefore in order to be consistent with ourselves we should strike it out. I have the existing law before me, and the existing law in the regard that the Senator speaks of, so far as regards the action of the War Department and its jurisdiction, is not changed but is almost precisely what it was before. The only changes are those which I have pointed out.

In reference to the matter of being consistent with ourselves, I tried with a great deal of care to be consistent with myself, and I followed the leaders of the Senate, and I found I was voting both ways by following the leaders of the Senate in this matter, and I made up my mind that while I would not vote in violation of the rule of the Senate to amend by either adding to or striking out new legislation which came from the House, yet when a provision coming from the House of new legislation satisfied my mind that it was good legislation and ought to be adopted, I would vote for it as it came from the House. When the Senate changes its rule so that we can, without violating our own rules and stultifying ourselves, vote for some legislation, I shall be glad to do that, but until then I shall be inclined to support a section like this, which as a whole seems to me to be a good thing. I have heard nobody objecting seriously against the merits of this legislation so far as its being likely to do good is concerned. It is temperance legislation sent to us by the House of Representatives, and I must say that I do not feel complimented, as a member of the Republican party that claims to be the temperance party of this country, by finding this provision so strenuously opposed wholly from our own side of the House.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator is quite mistaken in saying that I would take it just as it is if it were in a separate bill. I think that it should be amended. I think it should be improved. I hope it will be stricken out and go to a committee of conference with the rest of the independent legislation, and then be put in shape.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the recommendation of the committee that this section be stricken out.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out section 10, as follows:

> SEC. 10. That the President is hereby authorized to open negotiations with the Creeks, Seminoles, and Cherokees for the purpose of opening to settlement under the homestead laws the unassigned lands in said Indian Territory ceded by them respectively to the United States by the several treaties of August 11, 1866, March 21, 1866, and July 19, 1866; and for that purpose the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; his action hereunder to be reported to Congress.

Mr. PLUMB. I hope that provision will not be stricken out.

Mr. BLAIR. It is new legislation.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator frem New Hampshire says in an undertone it is new legislation.

Mr. BLAIR. I only meant to ask whether, if it is new legislation, it should be stricken out.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senate can keep it in if it thinks proper. It is perhaps legislation in its present shape, but it is very important legislation, and I think of sufficient importance, in view of the occurrences of the past few weeks which have come to the notice of the Senate as well as the country, to warrant the Senate in making an exception to its rule to strike out all general legislation put on appropriation bills by the House, and retain this.

We have had the spectacle recently presented of the Army of the United States being used for the purpose of expelling people from a tract of land ceded to the United States Government for a particular purpose, according to the view of the Executive, but which tract of land is never to be used, as we all know, for that purpose, whatever that may have been. It is to-day the objective point of many thousands of people who are seeking to make homes on the public domain pursuant to the invitation which has been always extended and universally accepted to the landless people of the United States to seek for themselves homes on the public lands. If something is not done to relieve the situation from the strain as it now exists that operation will have to be repeated; the succeeding President will have to stand by while those lands are settled, because it is not going to be a great while, if it is even so much as a few weeks, when other expeditions to that locality will be undertaken for the purpose of making homes there, and once located there, and that news communicated to the great body of the American people, the number to go will be found to be in the thousands if not the tens of thousands.

Inasmuch as we now know that the Government of the United States will never locate friendly Indians on these lands, and as we know that the purpose, if it ever existed, to locate the freedmen upon them has been abandoned, it is the part of wisdom that we shall do that which remains to be done as a necessary prerequisite to the settlement of these lands; and, as I have had occasion to say before, if we do not do it voluntarily the time will come when we shall be, to some extent, under compulsion to do it. It is not only a thing that is proper to be done in itself, but it is one of those things which ought to be done in time, and there is no reason in the world why this session of Congress should be allowed to go by without at least a preliminary step being taken looking to the opening of these lands to settlement.

While I do not care to enlarge upon this subject, I appeal to the Senate to take notice of the condition of things now existing, and to consent that this much at least may be done. I think far more ought to be done. I think it is in the power of Congress, and not only in its power but the exercise of the power would be wise, to open the lands without any convention with the Indians, and if they are damaged thereby we can pay them just as we pay other persons whose property we take if they have any property rights in the land at all. But if we are not to do that, as now seems probable, certainly we ought to do this thing and do it in this way, because in this way apparently lies the only hope of anything being done.

I think this constitutes an emergency, such a one as would appeal to the fairness, justice, and propriety of every Senator that this provision should remain in the bill, in order that the President of the United States may undertake such negotiations as that what appears now to be a burden on these lands, hindering their occupancy, something which must be removed before they can be subject to settlement, shall be attended to at least before another assembling of Congress, in order that legislation may then be adopted without any controversy whatever with the Indians.

As I said before, I think myself this preliminary step is not necessary, but the judgment of the Senate has apparently been otherwise expressed. It is the judgment of the present President of the United States, whatever may be that of his successor, that legislation is necessary, and the least that Congress can do is to inaugurate measures to remove this burden of Indian title, whatever it may be, in order that the appropriate legislation may go forward to have these lands settled.

Mr. BECK. In obedience to the rule of the Senate I have, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, voted on all the bills up to this time to strike out all new legislation, because we were unable to amend it if it was not satisfactory, and because it is not only my own judgment but I think the wish of the Senate that appropriation bills should be divested of legislation as much as possible. I have been voting in the Senate with the committee to keep it out; first voting in the committee to strike it out because I regarded that as our instruction, and then in the Senate to keep it out. Can we insert this now after striking out section 8, which, as amended, I think, is absolutely right, and ought to be inserted in the laws, and perhaps section 9 may not have any objectionable features in it; and this may have some features that we should like to see amended; but if we now insert this after striking out the others our conferees are met at once with the statement, "You are not objecting to legislation; you are only objecting to what you do not like, and you are inserting what you please." And when in addition to that argument the House conferees show us that the legislation we have stricken out is equally as good as that we have inserted, I see no ground on which the Senate conferees can stand or on which the Senate can stand, and in the closing days of a short session it seems to me if we expect to get our bills through at all we must divest them even of good legislation and take the chance for it hereafter.

I hope the committee having charge of these matters, the Committee on Indian Affairs, of which the Senator from Massachusetts is chairman, may at the long session next year have time to put many of these things in order, and doubtless they will if they can.

Mr. DAWES. I have advocated this very measure as an independent measure within a few weeks, so that my own position in reference to it is perfectly understood. I have been called upon by the rule of the Senate, and by the judgment of the Committee on Appropriations, in which I acquiesced, to advocate the striking out from this bill of more measures which independently met my approval than those I disapproved, but I have stood by the committee for the reason that I think it wise in the end that the good should go out as well as the bad. This proposition, if it were in an independent bill, it seems to me, would be wise, but I think that the President can do all this himself without any legislation, if when he comes to look the ground all over and assume the responsibilities of his position, he shall deem it wise, unembarrassed by legislation and subject only to his own conviction of duty. I see nothing in the way of his doing what is required here.

I have further to say that the Committee on Indian Affairs has been already instructed by the Senate, and is now in the execution of the duty imposed upon it, of investigating this very matter. They have gone so far, it may not be improper for me to say, to satisfy themselves that they ought to ask the Senate to permit them to devote some time in the vacation to the examination of all these matters in the Indian Territory, which I hope at some early day to ask the Senate to authorize that committee to do. I think, therefore, for very many reasons, as well as the fact that it is independent legislation, it ought to go out.

Mr. VEST. I am very reluctant to come to the conclusion that the Senate proposes to place itself in the position of sacrificing any measure of legislation, no matter what may be the emergency or what the necessity for its enactment, at the altar of a rule that no new legislation or general legislation shall be placed upon an appropriation bill. I do not believe the Senate intends to announce any such principle. I do not think that the Senator can get his own logical assent to any such proposition. There may be emergencies in which every rule of the Senate must give way. There may be necessities in which rules would be like withes of straw. What are these rules for? They are to facilitate the transaction of public business, but they are mere instrumentalities, they are mere helps. We are here to enact laws for the welfare of the people of the United States. And to say that this procrustean rule that no new legislation shall go upon any general appropriation bill shall stand here without exception is, with due deference to my distinguished colleagues, a monstrosity. I accede to no such proposition.

Mr. President, it does not affect the logical status of this question for me to express an opinion about this rule or its construction. For myself, I do not agree to the construction that has been put on this rule, or to the rule as construed, to speak more properly. I believe that legislation germane to the subject-matter of an appropriation bill should be admitted; if not germane, it should be excluded, and that, I believe, is the legitimate and fair construction of the rule adopted.

The Senator from Massachusetts has given to me the very best reason in the world why this section should not be stricken out of this bill. The Senator tells us that this very question is now under consideration by the Committee on Indian Affairs and that they propose to investigate it during the coming summer. Why, sir, the emergency will be upon us in the coming month of March. It is no secret, it is openly advertised in Missouri and Kansas and all the States adjoining the Indian Territory, that a raid is now being organized much more formidable than any that has ever heretofore existed, to go into this territory on the 4th of March, and this man Couch to-day has handbills stuck all over the Western States calling for volunteers. And I suppose the Senator from Kansas can substantiate what I say now: not a mail comes to me or my colleague that is not loaded down with letters inquiring, "When can we go into Oklahoma? When can we get a homestead?" And the other day I received a two-dollar bill from a gentleman who said that he wanted me to take that $2 and institute proceedings to give him a homestead in Oklahoma. He was a new-comer in Missouri, a foreigner, and was not an old citizen.

It is not a very comfortable or agreeable aspect of this matter that United States troops shall come in conflict with citizens of the United States anywhere under the dominion of our flag. The last raid that was made upon the territory came to an end, not by force, but from starvation. General Hatch was enabled to throw a cordon of troops around the men under the leadership of Couch, and cut off their provisions and drive them out of the territory in that sort of fashion; but just as certainly as they had been furnished with supplies, as they were thoroughly armed and equipped otherwise, they would have resisted the troops of the United States, and we should have had upon us the terrible spectacle of the forces of the regular Army in armed conflict with citizens for the possession of that territory.

Let us make no mistake about this matter. I am no alarmist. My State is no more interested in this question than other adjoining States; but do not let us make a mistake about it. The men who are going into that territory are the men of the West, used to arms, used to soldiers, unappalled by soldiers in uniform, and they believe they are right, and they believe that a court of the United States has decided that they are right. The letters that come to me are all filled with one burden: Why is it that a rich man can go into that territory and take up millions of acres of the public domain without the consent and approval of the Government, and a poor man can not go there and obtain a home for himself and his family? No Senator here will underrate the position; no Senator will fail to understand the danger when this thing is put before ignorant men in a fashion which they can not resist and which they choose to believe; and just as certainly as Congress does not touch this question and leaves it where it is now, there will be a conflict between the United States troops and these people in the coming spring. When they go there next they will go prepared to stay, and they will carry food for themselves and their horses.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to ask my friend if he thinks they will stop the moment they read this paragraph?

Mr. VEST. I believe in now doing all we can to stop them. I believe if the Congress of the United States would now adopt this provision as it comes from the House it would go very far to disabusing the opinion of these people that a Democratic administration intends to sustain them. This man Couch is now proclaiming that as soon as Cleveland is inaugurated the troops will not be permitted to resist them. I believe that is false. I am prepared as a Democrat myself to sustain Mr. Cleveland in the course pursued by the present administration, which was in strict consonance with the law, and I have written to these people that if they went there they went in violation of the law; that they were trespassers and lawbreakers. But the men who are now organizing this expedition, and who are determined to seize that territory at all hazards, are using the alleged fact that Mr. Cleveland will support and sustain them if they go in there with arms in their hands and take possession of this soil in defiance of law.

Now, let Congress pass this law, and it says to these people, "You need not expect support from the Government unless you do abide by the law." Let them see that Congress is doing all in its power to remove this Indian title, and I solemnly declare here to-day, Mr. President, whatever may be the subsequent history of this whole business, that now in this provision which is proposed to be stricken out under this procrustean rule in regard to general legislation is the whole avenue to peace and honor on the part of the United States, both to its own people and to the Indians within that territory.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, there has been a struggle for a long time, and it will continue to grow, against the Committee on Appropriations of this body having control of this class of measures. The District of Columbia Committee came very near taking charge of the District of Columbia appropriation bill some time ago. I suppose the Committee on Indian Affairs, the Committee on Military Affairs, the Committee on Naval Affairs, the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and every other committee will at once and with great propriety contend, if legislation is to be encouraged as suggested by the Senator from Missouri pertinent to any subject in an appropriation bill, that those are matters which they are especially intrusted with, and therefore the respective appropriation bills ought to go to the various committees on their subjects-matter, so that not only the proper amounts to carry on the Departments under the existing law shall be considered, but the modifications of that law passed upon by those committees. Then those committees, of course, would be selected in this wise: The Secretary of the Navy would select his friends to represent him on the Naval Committee; the Secretary of War would select his friends to represent him on the Military Committee, and the Postmaster-General his friends to represent him on the Post-Office Committee. Whenever you bring new legislation into appropriation bills and the Appropriations Committee is dissolved, as it will be by the clamor of the other committees to pass upon that character of legislation, and the special friends of each Department are put on those committees, the expenditures of this Government will not be as economical as they are now.

If the changes are needed as badly as the Senator from Missouri suggests they are, I suppose there are members of the Committee on Indian Affairs—and the Senator from Missouri himself, I believe, is a member of it—who ought to introduce bills and have them passed by both Houses so as to relieve us of the difficulty.

Mr. VEST. The Senator will permit me to say with all deference to him that that is exactly the proposition I have made. I offered a resolution incorporating the very provision that is in this section and it was resisted in the Senate, and according to the usual custom of this body sent to the Committee on Indian Affairs; and now the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs here in the Senate says that that committee proposes to do nothing with it this session, but to examine it during the coming vacation. There is no earthly chance of any legislation on this subject except in this bill, and that is the reason I say it ought not to be struck out in deference to this procrustean rule as to new legislation.

Mr. BECK. The rules of the Senate forbid legislation on appropriation bills. Whether they are proper rules or not they were agreed to by us all, and so long as they are the rules we are obliged to maintain them; and if we break them down, as I said a while ago, on points where we may see something that we want to insert badly, we have no chance to resist the House in inserting what it wants that we oppose. I do not know, I have no means of knowing, how urgent this Oklahoma matter is. The Committee on Indian Affairs, the gentlemen who have been consulted, perhaps have the means of knowing, but the Committee on Appropriations had not. We are not constituted in such a way that we can have the information necessary to enable us to tell all about such things, and that shows the impropriety of having such matters on a bill making appropriations to carry on the Indian service for the next fiscal year, for that is all this bill is for.

This section is not to carry on the Indian service for the next fiscal year. It is to take possession of an organized territory by the United States for the benefit of the people of the United States outside of the Indians altogether, and outside of any provision connected with the Indians or their support for the next fiscal year. If men from Missouri or Kansas or Kentucky or anywhere else band themselves together and undertake to violate the law, I hope the incoming Executive, as the present one will doubtless do, as Commander-in-Chief of the Army of the United States, will find force enough to have the law obeyed. I hope there will be good sense enough to sustain any administration in maintaining the law that Congress sees fit to make.

I have no doubt there are bold men, no doubt there are bad men, who will organize again to violate the law. They might just as well take the land of the Cherokees, the Choctaws, and the Creeks, and say those Indians are in the way of civilization, as to go and take this territory of Oklahoma by violence. They might as well seize any other property of the United States or drive off any Indian tribe that was in their way and say they were a law unto themselves, as to undertake to take this land now. I do not believe that any respectable body of men are going to organize themselves for any such purpose if we give them to understand that the laws must be obeyed. I have no trouble on that point, but I have great trouble whenever we break down this rule of having any fair consideration of matters of appropriation.

Mr. CALL. I wish simply to say that, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, I do not base my action upon the ground of abiding by the rule of the Senate. I believe that general legislation coming from the House is at times a necessity, and I shall have no hesitation whatever in voting to stand by and approve that legislation; but it is impossible for us to have a practical understanding of this measure without a prolonged discussion of it, and as in the Committee on Appropriations, for myself speaking, it was impossible to decide upon a measure of this great importance without a degree of consideration which it was impossible to give it, I voted to strike out the section. It is impossible now to give this subject the mature consideration which it requires in order to give it in the shape of a law to the country, and for that reason I shall vote for the striking out of the section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOAR in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations to strike out the section.

The question being put a division was called for, and the ayes were 24.

Mr. PLUMB and Mr. VEST called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I am paired on all questions with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

Mr. WALKER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER], or I should vote "nay."

The roll was concluded and the result announced—yeas 35, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—35.

Beck,	Dolph,	Hoar,	Morgan,

So the amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out section 11, as follows:

SEC. 11. That immediately upon and after the date of the passage of this act all Indians within the provisions of this act committing against the person or property of another Indian or other person any of the following crimes, namely, murder, manslaughter, rape, assault with intent to kill, arson, burglary, and larceny, within any Territory of the United States, and either within or without an Indian reservation, shall be subject therefor to the laws of such Territory relating to said crimes, and shall be tried therefor in the same courts and in same manner and shall be subject to the same penalties as are all other persons charged with the commission of said crimes, respectively; and the said courts are hereby given jurisdiction in all such cases; and all such Indians committing any of the above crimes against the person or property of another Indian or other person within the boundaries of any State of the United States, and either within or without an Indian reservation, shall be subject to the same laws, tried in the same courts and in the same manner, and subject to the same penalties as are all other persons committing any of the above crimes within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States: And provided further, That from and after the passage of this act any Indian or Indians may hereafter prosecute in any court any civil action at law or equity in like manner as others are permitted to do; and in all actions in said courts Indians shall not be rejected as witnesses on account of their race or nation: Provided further, This act shall not be so construed as to confer jurisdiction upon either the State or Federal courts to execute the laws of any of the five civilized tribes in the Indian country: Provided further, That the district court of the United States for the western district of Arkansas shall have civil jurisdiction over the five civilized tribes and white people of the Indian Territory in cases of debt on contract or torts committed upon the personal property of any person either in or out of said Indian Territory.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANDERSON. I offer an amendment to the bill to come at the end of line 1106:

That the sum of $5,450, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same hereby is, set apart, out of any money in the Treasury to the credit of the Winnebago tribe of Indians, out of which the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to cause to be paid to such individual members of the Omaha tribe of Indians, or their heirs, as shall submit proof to his satisfaction, the sum of $30 per head for each and every horse stolen from said individual members of said Omaha tribe of Indians by said Winnebago tribe of Indians, or individual members thereof, since the year 1871, unless the said depredations shall have in some way been settled or compromised by and between the said tribes or the said horses returned to the parties from whom they were stolen; and to Edward Farley the sum of $260 for expenses and services rendered in the recovery of ponies stolen by said Winnebagoes from the Omahas, and by them sold to white persons; such payment being in accord with the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, transmitted by the President January 25, 1885, Senate Executive Document No. 46.

Mr. DAWES. I object to that as out of order.

Mr. MANDERSON. I would say to the Senator that——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts raises the question of order, as the Chair understands. Will the Senator state his question of order?

Mr. MANDERSON. I would say to the Senator from Massachusetts, "Strike, but hear."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts reserve his question of order?

Mr. MANDERSON. This amendment is presented by me at the request of the Omaha band of Indians, who by this means ask justice at the hands of the Committee on Indian Affairs and the Appropriation Committee of the Senate.

I have been in hopes, as I have watched the debate on this bill, that while it might be that a white man had no rights which this rule of the Senate is bound to respect, perhaps an Indian had. This theft of horses by the Winnebago tribe of Indians from the Omahas was of such a character that it startled even the Interior Department and caused it to adopt action. It recommends this legislation. Legislation is asked by the Omaha band of Indians. I understand that it meets the approval of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I ask that for this righteous result the rule may be stretched sufficiently to do good to the Indians of the country.

Mr. DAWES. I renew the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. PLUMB. I now move to insert what I send to the Secretary's desk, to be added to what I find in line 4 of section 10, down to and including the word "sixty-six," in line 8, as stricken out of the bill.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert as a new section:

SEC. —. For the purpose of enabling the President to make certain negotiations with the Creek, Seminole, and Cherokee Indians, $5,000; and the President may in pursuance of this appropriation negotiate for the complete cession to the United States for the purposes of settlement of lands not needed by said tribes, and especially including lands ceded by them respectively to the United States by the several treaties of August 11, 1866, March 21, 1866, and July 19, 1866, his action hereunder to be reported to Congress.

Mr. DAWES. I raise the point of order on that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts objects that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator from Massachusetts please state what his point of order is?

Mr. DAWES. The point of order is that the amendment is not in order. It is not in order because it is independent legislation, and it is not in order because it does not come from a regular committee.

Mr. PLUMB. I think it is not legislation under the ruling of the Chair as heretofore pronounced. This is an appropriation of money to authorize the President to do a particular thing, and it is not general, because it expires with the term for which the appropriations are made by the bill. I do not think it is responsible to the point of order. It is possible the Senate may vote it down as before on its merits, but at the same time it is, I think, a provision that ought to go on the bill, and believing it not to be obnoxious to the point of order I have no hesitation in moving it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment proposes to give to the Executive a new authority by law, and therefore it is general legislation and is not in order.

Mr. BECK. I had an amendment suggested to the Senator who has charge of the bill, to come in after line 483, relative to a commission to the Crow reservation, but I suppose it would be subject to the same point of order as the one just made. The amendment was handed to me by the Delegate from Montana. It is to come in as a proviso after line 483, and is as follows:

Provided, That three Senators and three members-elect of the House of Representatives, who shall be selected by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, respectively, shall constitute a commission to visit the reservation of the Crow Indians, who shall confer with said tribe in regard to the sale of such portion of their reservation as may be unnecessary for the use of the tribe, and who shall inquire into other matters relating to the Indians, and such commission shall submit any agreement or proposition, together with their recommendations, to the next session of Congress.

Mr. DAWES. I shall be obliged to raise the point of order, but I will state to the Senator what I stated to the Delegate from Montana, and which seemed to meet his acquiescence, that that matter is now, by vote of the Senate, charged upon the Committee on Indian Affairs, and they are in the process of investigating that very question, and they propose in a few days to ask the Senate to permit them to continue that investigation during the vacation.

Mr. BECK. That is all that the Delegate from Montana desires, but I understood the Senator from Massachusetts to say that he wished to act on it hereafter. I did not know it was now going on.

Mr. DAWES. I propose to ask authority for the Committee on Indian Affairs to continue the investigation they are now making. It would be desirable if it could be a joint committee; and if the other branch should be induced to appoint a subcommittee of the Committee on Indian Affairs to join, I think it would be a great benefit.

Mr. BECK. Perhaps the amendment had better be withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky withdraws the amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I desire to reserve for a separate vote the amendment on page 40, of which I gave notice on Saturday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be separately voted on. Will the Senate concur in the amendments adopted as in Committee of the Whole, with the exception of the amendment reserved?

The amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment on which a separate vote is to be taken.

The SECRETARY. After line 957 the Senate as in Committee of the Whole struck out the following clause:

For the payment by the Secretary of the Interior to J. M. Hogan, of Stockton, Cal., the sum of $6,600, out of the funds herein appropriated for the Shoshone Indians; the same being a claim for damages caused by depredations of said Indians, and examined and approved, allowed and reported to Congress by the Department of the Interior, $6,600.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I wish to make a brief statement about the amendment. This is a claim which arose for depredations committed in 1861 by Shoshones. It has been adjudicated and found that there is this amount due. The party was wounded at the time. He has been a cripple ever since. He is a poor man, and he ought to have his money. I desire to call attention to the amendment because it presents a very interesting and peculiar case.

I suppose that after all the other items have been voted out this will be voted out also; but I wish to emphasize the fact that it is the duty of Congress to devise some measure by which these numerous claims for Indian depredations may be settled and adjusted and those which are found to be just and proper may be paid. I should be glad if the Senate would vote against the recommendation of the committee, and I ask them to do so in this case, as it forms an exception to all the other cases in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole striking out the clause which has been read.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. MANDERSON. I understand that the Senate has concurred in the amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole. When the Senate was in Committee of the Whole it was understood that there should be a yea-and-nay vote taken in the Senate upon the amendments proposed by the committee on pages 27 and 29 striking out certain words.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There was no such request made when the question was put on concurring in the amendments, but if there be no objection the Chair will now submit those amendments separately to the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON and others. No objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, those amendments will be treated as having been reserved. Does the Senator from Nebraska desire a separate vote on each or does he desire that they shall be treated as one question?

Mr. MANDERSON. Both may as well be taken as one question. They present the same question substantially.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the question will be stated on striking out the two paragraphs mentioned, on which the Senator from Nebraska asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. After line 637 the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out the following paragraph:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, and with the consent of the Indians, extend the time of payment for land as fixed by section 2 of said act so that one-third of the purchase-money shall become due and payable in two years from the date when the land shall be or has been thrown open to settlement, together with one year's interest on the amount of the first installment, to be paid when entry is made; and the second installment of one-third shall become due and payable in one year, and the remaining one-third in two years from date of first payment, with interest as provided in said act; and in case of default in either of said payments, or the interest thereon, the person thus defaulting for a period of sixty days shall forfeit absolutely his right to the tract which he has purchased, and any payment or payments he may have made: Provided further, That also, with the consent of the Indians, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to cause to be appraised and sold to the highest bidder, under such regulations and upon such terms as to payment as he may deem to be most advantageous to the said Indians, that part or parcel of said reservation described as follows: All that portion of the northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 27 and the west half of the northwest quarter of section 26, in township 25, range 6 east, lying east of the Sioux City and Nebraska Railroad, containing about fifty acres, more or less, conditioned, however, that the purchaser thereof shall erect, operate, and maintain a flouring-mill thereon.

After line 685 the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out the following paragraph:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to make such extension of time for the payment of the purchase-money under the sale made under an act entitled "An act to provide for the sale of the remainder of the reservation of the confederated Otoe and Missouria tribes of Indians, in the States of Nebraska and Kansas, and for other purposes," as he may deem advantageous to said Indians and settlers: Provided, That the interest shall be paid at the rate as now provided by said act; but the time for the payment of the whole of said purchase-money shall not be extended more than two years from the time the said purchase-money became due according to the original terms of sale under said act.

Mr. MANDERSON. I merely desire to say that the extension of the time of payment for the lands of the Omaha and Otoe Indians in Nebraska provided for in these two paragraphs of the bill is a simple act of justice. It is recommended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and by the Secretary of the Interior, and it has met with the approval of both the Committees on Indian Affairs of the Senate and the House, and it seems the clauses should be retained in the bill.

Mr. DAWES. Why should they be retained in the bill any more than the rest of the independent legislation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole striking out the paragraphs which have been read.

The Secretary called the roll.

Mr. CAMDEN. I desire to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. KENNA], who is detained from the Senate on account of illness, with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

The result was announced—yeas 45, nays 6; as follows:

YEAS—45.

Allison,	Edmunds,	Jonas,	Platt,
Beck,	Frye,	Lamar,	Ransom,

So the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2799) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

Mr. BLAIR and Mr. HALE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the Senate two bills from the House of Representatives for reference.

The bill (H. R. 870) to provide for the erection of a public building at Aberdeen, Miss., for use as a post-office, United States court, and for United States internal-revenue officials, and for other Government purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The bill (H. R. 7586) to amend section 5 of the act entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," approved June 10, 1880, was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred——

Mr. MCMILLAN. To the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. ALLISON. To the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is not quite sure.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I think that subject has been in charge of the Committee on Commerce. The original act was reported from that committee, and it has had charge of all the bills proposing to amend that act.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to know whether the Committee on Commerce will not have all its time taken up during the remainder of the session by the river and harbor bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I will state that usually such bills have gone to the Committee on Finance. This is a bill relating to bonded goods.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The Committee on Commerce reported what is now the original act on the subject.

Mr. MORRILL. I wish to say that bills in relation to bonded goods have invariably gone to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. MCMILLAN] that the bill be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

FOREIGN-LABOR CONTRACTS.

Mr. BLAIR. Regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the business that was informally laid aside, being the bill (H. R. 2550) to prohibit the importation and migration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and the pending question is on agreeing to the motion to strike out sections 3 and 4, which motion has been divided, so that the first part of the motion will be on striking out section 3.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the bill be laid aside informally so that the Senate may take up the agricultural appropriation bill. That bill will take but a short time.

Mr. PLUMB. I think the Senator from Maine had better let the agricultural appropriation bill go over until to-morrow. There will be some remarks made on it which will possibly extend its consideration beyond the period that the Senate will care to stay here to-day.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator from Kansas, who is a member of the subcommittee on the bill, desire that the bill should go over until to-morrow? If so, I shall not ask for its consideration to-day.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not specially desire it for my own convenience, but I think it would be more to the convenience of members of the Senate, who will not care to stay here more than three-quarters of an hour or an hour longer to-day.

Mr. HALE. I withdraw my request.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves——

Mr. SAWYER. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to allow me to make a report from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. HOAR. With the leave of the Chair I will withdraw the motion in order that my friend from Wisconsin may make a report from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is withdrawn.

Mr. SAWYER. I am instructed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the amendment intended to be proposed to the Post-Office appropriation bill, submitted by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] on the 14th instant, providing an appropriation for transporting the mails of the United States for the next fiscal year between any of the ports of the United States and any foreign port, or between the ports of the Atlantic and ports of the Pacific through any foreign territory, &c., to report it favorably, and I move that the committee be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SAULSBURY. As a member of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads I desire to state that the report does not meet my concurrence.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee will be discharged, and the amendment will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed, if there be no objection.

Mr. MCPHERSON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. DOLPH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 7586) to amend section 5 of the act entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," approved June 10, 1880; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORGAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 4976) for the retirement and recoinage of the trade-dollar; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Will the Senator from Massachusetts withhold that motion for a few moments, in order that I may ask unanimous consent that the Senate shall pass a bill seeking to accomplish a matter which the House endeavored to accomplish by a clause in the Indian appropriation bill, and which was stricken out here? It is only a question that will take no longer than the reading of the bill. It comes unanimously from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. HOAR. I will allow the bill to be read for information, and then, if there be unanimous consent for the passage of the bill, I shall yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts withdraws the motion, and the Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to introduce at this time a bill. Is there objection?

Mr. BLAIR. I object. The bill is to be introduced for discussion and action, and I object to anything that will tend to displace the regular order.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a parliamentary question. I understood the Senator from Nebraska to ask unanimous consent for the passage of a bill on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not so understand it. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to introduce a bill for present consideration.

Mr. DAWES. There is such a bill before the Committee on Indian Affairs. I suggest to the Senator from Nebraska to move to discharge the committee and put that bill on its passage.

Mr. BLAIR. I object. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. HOAR. I renew my motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BOWEN. I rise to a question of privilege. I wish to present the credentials of H. M. Teller, Senator-elect from the State of Colorado.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is a question which the Senator from Colorado has a right to present.

Mr. BOWEN presented the credentials of Henry M. Teller, chosen by the Legislature of Colorado a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1885; which were read, and ordered to be filed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HOAR. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and twenty-three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 16, 1885.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Friday last was read and approved.

REPORT OF THE NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following concurrent resolution from the Senate; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the report of the National Academy of Sciences for 1884, with its appendices, be printed in the usual octavo form, but that the eight accompanying memoirs be printed in quarto form, and that 4,500 additional copies of the report and memoirs be printed, of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,500 copies for the use of the National Academy of Sciences.

COMMISSIONS OF ASSISTANT ARMY SURGEONS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting petitions of assistant surgeons of the Army for legislation relative to issuance of commissions bearing their military rank; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

WATER-POWER POOL, ROCK ISLAND, ILLS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a communication from Col. D. W. Flagler, Ordnance Corps, recommending a reappropriation of unexpended balance for completion of water-power pool at Rock Island arsenal, Illinois; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CATTLE TRAFFIC.

Mr. REAGAN, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to transmit to this House such information as he may be able to communicate at an early day in regard to the range and ranch cattle traffic of the Western, Northwestern, and Southwestern States and Territories, with special reference to the bearing of that traffic upon the internal and foreign commerce of the United States.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FORNEY. The Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred with amendments of the Senate the bill (H. R. 8120) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, have directed me to report back the same and to move that the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate and ask a conference with that body.

The motion was agreed to; and the SPEAKER pro tempore announced the appointment of Mr. FORNEY, Mr. TOWNSHEND, and Mr. KEIFER as conferees on the part of the House.

YELLOWSTONE PARK.

Mr. HILL. I rise to a privileged question. I move that the House insist on its amendments to the bill (S. 221) to amend sections 2474 and 2475 of the Revised Statutes of the United States setting apart a certain tract of land lying near the headwaters of the Yellowstone River as a public park and agree to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to; and the SPEAKER pro tempore announced the appointment of Mr. PRYOR, Mr. HILL, and Mr. KEIFER as conferees on the part of the House.

COMMITTEE STENOGRAPHER.

Mr. COVINGTON, from the Committee on Accounts, reported back favorably the following resolution:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there is hereby appropriated out of the contingent fund of the House a sum sufficient to pay for the services of stenographer to the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department, in addition to the amount heretofore allowed said committee for payment of expenses of investigation of Hot Springs matters, as directed by resolution of the House; said payment to said stenographer to be upon vouchers approved by the chairman of said committee and by the chairman of the Committee on Accounts.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. COVINGTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Several MEMBERS. Let us have the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour under the special rule begins at sixteen minutes to 12 o'clock.

Mr. HERBERT. This being Monday, is not the first business in order the call of States and Territories for motions to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As the Chair interprets the new rule the first hour after the reading of the Journal, subject only to privileged motions and privileged reports, is for the recognition of members to call up bills for present consideration in cases where there are less than ten objections. The morning hour for the call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions, including resolutions of inquiry, will come immediately afterward.

PUBLIC BUILDING, ABERDEEN, MISS.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the unfinished business coming over from Friday last. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MULDROW] called up for consideration the bill (H. R. 870) to provide for the erection of a public building at Aberdeen, Miss., for use as a post-office, United States court, and for United States internal-revenue officials, and for other Government purposes.

The bill and report having been read, the debate for the bill has been exhausted, and there are remaining three minutes in opposition to the bill, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HORR. I have said all I care to.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is the bill up for present consideration?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not yet before the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would like to know whether the gentleman from Mississippi is willing to incorporate the amendment adopted in other cases, that a site is to be purchased before the plan is adopted and that the appropriation made by the bill shall include the purchase of the site and the completion of the building and the approaches thereto?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I propose to reduce the appropriation from $75,000 to $50,000.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is not yet before the House. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

The objection was not sustained, and the bill was brought before the House for present consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The pending question is on the amendment of the committee to strike out $100,000 and insert $75,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend the amendment of the committee by reducing the amount to $50,000.

Mr. MULDROW. Mr. Speaker, I hope that will not be done. The gentleman has an amendment which proposes absolutely to confine the appropriation for the purchase of the site and completion of the building to $75,000. I hope it will not be reduced any further.

Mr. HOLMAN'S amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment of the committee was then agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to insert, after the words "seventy-five thousand dollars," the following:

The Clerk read as follows:

And it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, after the site for said building shall have been purchased, to cause a plan and specifications to be prepared, which said plans and specifications shall not involve an expenditure in the erection and completion of said building and the approaches thereto exceeding the portion of said $75,000 remaining after the site of said building shall have been paid for; and no plan shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the sum so remaining after paying for the site of said building.

Mr. MULDROW. Do I understand the gentleman to mean that no more than $75,000 shall be expended for the purchase of the site and the completion of the building?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, and the approaches thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WELLER. I submit the following amendment:

Provided, however, That this appropriation shall be made and paid only in standard silver dollars.

[Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The noes seem to have it.

Mr. WELLER. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 6, noes 114.

Mr. WELLER. No quorum has voted.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. I rise to a question of privilege. The gentleman from Iowa has no right to be here, for he has had leave of absence for the rest of the session. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. MULDROW, and the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. WELLER.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported there were—ayes 16, noes 159.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MULDROW demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MULDROW moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill as amended was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

IMMEDIATE TRANSPORTATION OF DUTIABLE GOODS.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 7586) to amend section 5 of the act entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," approved June 10, 1880, reported from the Committee on Ways and Means with amendments.

The bill and amendments were read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 5 of the act entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," approved June 10, 1880, be, and the same is hereby, amended so that it shall read as follows, namely:

"SEC. 5. That merchandise transported under the provisions of this act shall be conveyed in cars, vessels, or vehicles securely fastened with locks or seals, under the exclusive control of the officers of the customs; and merchandise may also be transported under the provisions of this act by express companies on passenger trains, in safes, 'pouches,' and trunks, which shall be of such size, character, and description and secured in such manner as shall be from time to time prescribed by the Secretary; and in cases where merchandise shall be imported in boxes or packages too large to be included within the safes, trunks, or 'pouches,' so described, such merchandise may be transported under the provisions of this act by such express companies 'corded and sealed,' in such manner as shall from time to time be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury; 'and passengers' baggage and effects arriving at any port in the United States may also be transported by express companies under the provisions of this act to any interior port of entry in such manner and under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe;' and merchandise such as pig-iron, spiegel-iron, scrap-iron, iron ore, railroad-iron, and similar articles commonly transported upon platform or flat cars may be transported under the provisions of this act upon such platform or flat cars; and the weight of such merchandise so transported shall be ascertained in all cases before shipment, and ordinary railroad scales may be used for such purpose; and inspectors shall be stationed at proper points along the designated routes, or upon any car, vessel, vehicle, or train, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, and at the expense of the companies, respectively. Such merchandise shall not be unladen or transshipped between the ports of first arrival and final destination, unless authorized by the regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury in cases which may arise from a difference in the gauge of railroads, 'or where the route is bonded for both land and water carriage,' or from accidents, or from legal intervention, or when, by reason of the length of the route, the cars, after due inspection by customs officers, shall be considered unsafe or unsuitable to proceed farther, or from low water, ice, or other unavoidable obstruction to navigation; and in no case shall there be permitted any breaking of the original packages of such merchandise."

Amendments of the committee:

In line 18 strike out the word "described" and insert in lieu thereof "prescribed."

In line 23 strike out "port in the United States" and insert in lieu thereof "of the ports specified in section 1 of this act."

In line 26 strike out the words "interior port of entry" of the ports specified "in the seventh section thereof."

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, if I can have the attention of the House for two minutes I can explain all there is of this bill. It is an amendment to the statute already in existence relating to the transportation of dutiable goods. By section 5 of that act it was provided that goods and baggage might be transported by express companies from seaboard ports to interior ports of entry in safes and trunks only.

Now, the first amendment proposed by the pending bill is to include the word "pouches" between the words "safes" and "trunks;" that and nothing more.

Secondly, it provides that where trunks and safes are not sufficiently large to accommodate the packages for shipment, such goods may be transported in packages sealed and corded according to the instructions of the Secretary of the Treasury.

These are the only two amendments, the first of the two being to insert the word "pouches" in addition to safes and trunks, and the second providing that where a package is so large that it may not be put into safes and trunks it may be sent sealed and corded.

As I understand the law now it requires express companies in transporting dutiable goods from seaboard ports to the interior to assign one entire car to such goods. Even if there be but one single package it must be transported in a car to itself. The consequence of this provision is that the transportation in this way, where there is but a single package, is so costly that persons can not afford to send goods in that manner. Now, under this bill these packages may be sealed and corded and transported in a car with other goods; and it is for the convenience of the public, especially of travelers on the continent, who come to the port of New York and desire to go to Saint Louis, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, or some other interior port, that this bill was framed. If this provision is adopted they can send their baggage right on through, sealed and corded, or else in trunks, pouches, or safes, as the case may be, from New York to their place of destination without having them there opened, and pay the duties.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let me interrupt the gentleman to ask if this has been considered by the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I was going to remark that this bill has been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury and has the unanimous indorsement of the Committee on Ways and Means. I would have had the report read, but I thought perhaps I could make a statement that would be briefer than the report and possibly equally satisfactory to the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I see no objection, if the object of the bill is only that stated by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HORR. Where are the duties to be paid?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. The duties will be paid at the port of destination.

Mr. DINGLEY. I did not understand exactly what the gentleman from Indiana said. I wish to ask, therefore, if I understood him to say that this had been submitted to the Treasury Department?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Yes, sir; and the Treasury Department suggested one or two verbal amendments which will be read by the Clerk.

The bill is drawn in conformity with the suggestion of the Department.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the bill be read again.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I wish to state further before that is done that this bill levies no tax, imposes no duty, makes no change in any revenue law. It is simply intended for the general convenience of the traveling public, and it involves no expense whatever.

Mr. COX, of New York, rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MILLS in the chair). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Did the gentleman from New York desire to object?

Mr. COX, of New York. I did not rise for that purpose. I only rose to say that the report is here, signed by Mr. Charles E. Coon, Acting Secretary of the Treasury, recommending the adoption of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desired to know if the gentleman rose to object?

Mr. COX, of New York. I did not, but thought perhaps the Chair might be a little patient.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is not at all impatient, but was trying to find out the position of the bill before the House.

Mr. DINGLEY. I understand that there are several amendments. Let them be reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 23 and 24, strike out the words "port in the United States" and insert "of the ports specified in section 1 of this act;" so that it will read:

"Passengers' baggage and effects arriving at any of the ports specified in section 1 of this act," &c.

Also, in lines 26 and 27, strike out "interior port of entry" and insert "of the ports specified in the seventh section thereof."

Mr. DINGLEY. There is also an amendment preceding these, I believe, in the eighteenth line.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 18, strike out the word "described" and insert "prescribed."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is it the wish of the House to consider all of the amendments together, or one at a time? If there be no separate vote demanded the vote will be taken on the amendments in gross.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

Mr. DINGLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. I submit an additional amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding the following as an additional section:

"That the privileges of the first section of the act approved June 10, 1880, entitled 'An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes,' be, and the same are hereby, extended to the port of Portland, in Oregon, and that the privileges of the first and seventh sections of said act be, and the same are hereby, extended to the port of Port Townsend, in Washington Territory; said privileges in each case to be exercised on the same terms and conditions applicable to other ports, as provided in the act of which this is amendatory."

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserve the point of order upon that amendment.

Mr. WEAVER. I offer the following as an additional amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object to this amendment of the gentleman from Oregon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 7 of the amendment add the letter "s" to the word "port" and insert "Omaha, Nebr.," between the words "ports" and "of."

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to reserve the point of order until I can understand whether this has been agreed to by the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. One has been, and the other by the Committee on Commerce. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that these amendments were submitted to me. They do no more than this: to add two or three additional ports of delivery to those mentioned in the second section of the act.

Mr. GEORGE. Both of these amendments have been recommended by the Treasury Department to this House.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. That is all there is in it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I make no objection.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MILLS). The question recurs on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. GEORGE] as amended.

The amendment as amended was adopted.

Mr. BRENTS. I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the following to the amendment as amended which has just been adopted:

"And that each of the cities of Tacoma and Seattle, in said Washington Territory, be, and it is hereby, made a port of delivery; and a deputy collector of customs shall be stationed at each of them, who shall receive such compensation, not exceeding the sum of $1,200 per annum, as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe."

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the point of order on that amendment. It is not germane; it increases the expenditure; it does not pertain to this bill. It makes a new port, with all the necessary officers pertaining thereto.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I had risen and was trying to get the attention of the Chair that I might make that point of order.

Mr. BRENTS. Does the gentleman from Illinois make the point of order that the amendment increases expenditure?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MILLS). The point of order is made that the amendment is not germane to the pending bill, and that point of order the Chair sustains.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ALBERT H. EMERY.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I call up from the Speaker's table for present consideration the bill (S. 399) for the relief of Albert H. Emery.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Albert H. Emery, of Stamford, Conn., in full settlement of all claims, legal or equitable, which he has in any way against the United States on account of the cost of, and the time spent by him, and use of all patents and inventions in designing and constructing the testing-machine built and erected by him for the United States, or otherwise, in any way, on account of said machine, the sum of $200,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, which sum is hereby appropriated and made immediately available therefor. Said machine, together with the full right to the use therein of all patents and inventions used in its design and construction, shall belong to the United States.

Mr. McMILLIN. How does this bill come before the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is called up under the special rule by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SEYMOUR]. The gentleman from Connecticut is entitled to five minutes in support of the bill.

Mr. SEYMOUR. At the last session of this Congress I introduced a bill into the House precisely identical in all its provisions with this Senate bill. That bill was referred to the Committee on Claims, and that committee after having considered it recommended an amendment reducing the amount from $200,000 to $100,000.

Now, I am familiar, Mr. Speaker, with all the facts and details of this case, and I firmly believe that the sum of $200,000 contained in the original bill and passed by the Senate is not one penny more than this Government ought to pay Mr. Emery for the time he spent in making this machine, which has redounded, perhaps, more than any other machine to the credit of the ingenuity of this country. At the same time I promise if the bill is allowed to be considered, as I trust it will be, that I will offer an amendment reducing the sum named in the Senate bill from $200,000 to $100,000, so as to make it conform to the report of our own committee.

Of course there is no time in the five minutes allowed for debate to go at all into the facts and circumstances connected with the creation of this machine, or into the arguments in favor of paying this money. The committee's report is full and conclusive upon the subject.

Mr. HISCOCK. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. SEYMOUR. Yes, sir.

Mr. HISCOCK. Is it not true that the Government has also passed a law authorizing private work to be done on this machine, so that this man is precluded from getting the benefit of the use of his invention by private parties?

Mr. SEYMOUR. Certainly; that is the fact—not perhaps to the full extent indicated; but private parties are authorized to obtain tests on the machine.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to ask the gentleman from Connecticut whether that is not what was desired by this claimant himself? I have always understood that was done at his request.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I do not know about that.

As I have said, there is no time to go into the argument upon this subject. But one thing I want to have the House understand. This claim has been reported upon by no fewer than six committees of Congress, every one of which reported a larger sum than the $100,000 that I am to move as an amendment to this bill. In the Forty-sixth Congress the Committee of the House reported in favor of $200,000, and in the Forty-seventh Congress the House committee reported in favor of $200,000 and the Senate committee in favor of $225,000. In the present Congress the Senate has passed this bill appropriating $200,000, and our own committee is in favor of $100,000. I am to propose an amendment to the Senate bill making it conform to the sum of $100,000 recommended by the House committee. This matter has not only been considered by committees of Congress, but it has been considered by a commission——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. McMILLIN. As this subject-matter was before the Committee on Claims, of which I am a member, it is not improper that I should make a statement concerning it. I will state at the beginning that I do not think the bill ought to pass.

A majority, however, of that committee, but only a majority, recommended the payment of, I believe, $100,000. It is true that the Senate reported a bill, the one now under consideration, giving this gentleman $200,000. The subject-matter came before our committee. I did not believe that the $200,000 ought to be paid or that the $100,000 ought to be paid, and I will state briefly the reasons. What are the facts concerning this matter? The Government authorized the construction of a testing-machine and appropriated $25,000 for that purpose. Mr. Emery undertook the construction; he went on with the work, and the $25,000 was paid—not only the $25,000, but a large amount in addition to the sum named in the original contract—I do not now remember the exact sum.

Mr. PRICE. Six thousand five hundred.

Mr. McMILLIN. And as the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] suggests, the patents were perfected at the Government expense. The patents were also sold to other parties, and when our committee asked Mr. Emery if he would undertake, upon the payment of $100,000, as suggested by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SEYMOUR], to turn over to the Government the patents which he says he ought to have pay for, he said he would not. That is the status. Now, what does this House do if it pays this $200,000? If it pays that amount it will have paid Mr. Emery, clear of the expense of construction, more than six times the amount of the original contract.

Mr. SEYMOUR. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. McMILLIN. In one moment. If the bill now under consideration shall pass, Mr. Emery will be paid clear of all expense of construction the amount of the original contract several times over, and one question for the House to determine is whether it is willing to pay, as profit on a contract a sum larger than the original amount contracted for. This matter having been considered before my committee, I thought it due to the House that thus much I should state. Now I will hear the question of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SEYMOUR].

Mr. SEYMOUR. I wish to ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] if it is not a fact that Mr. Emery is now over $50,000 out of pocket?

Mr. MCMILLIN. There were computed in making up the amount that he was out of pocket even the pencils and all the implements used in making the designs for the patents. I believe it was so stated by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE]. How much the amount would be if all those items were to be computed I do not know. I have stated the facts as I understand them, and it is for the House to determine what they will do with the subject-matter. I do not think $200,000 ought to be paid.

Mr. MORSE. He does not ask that.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I do not think the $100,000 ought to be paid, but it is for the House to determine.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, I was on the committee in the Forty-seventh Congress that examined this question, and I can state with a great deal of certainty that the Government is under no legal obligation whatever to this gentleman, so that if it gives him anything it will be given as a matter of grace. I wish to say further, in reply to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SEYMOUR], that, while that committee did report in favor of allowing $200,000, it was not a unanimous report; the committee was divided.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate has expired. Does any gentleman object to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] Seventeen gentlemen have risen; more than a sufficient number, and the bill is not before the House.

PUBLIC BUILDING, NEW BEDFORD, MASS.

Mr. DAVIS, of Massachusetts. I call up the bill (S. 2246) to provide for the purchase of additional land for the uses of the public building in the city of New Bedford, in the State of Massachusetts.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $20,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the purchase of land adjoining the lot now occupied by the public building in the city of New Bedford, State of Massachusetts, and used as a custom-house and post-office.

Mr. DAVIS, of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, this bill provides for the purchase of land adjacent to the present post-office in the city of New Bedford in order that that building may be extended, it being at present too small to accommodate the public business. It was erected more than fifty years ago, when New Bedford was a city of 9,000 inhabitants; while to-day that city has 30,000 inhabitants, and has long been the center of large business interests. In 1882, $42,000 was collected there in customs duties; one hundred and forty clearances were made from the port; two hundred and fifty vessels are owned there, aggregating 53,700 tons, and more than 3,000 seamen are employed. The city of New Bedford has been for two generations the chief center of the whale-fisheries interest, and even now, in the comparative decline of that industry, a million and a half dollars is there derived from it annually. The people of New Bedford have largely turned their attention from commerce and the fisheries, and to-day that city is rapidly assuming the position of the third manufacturing city in Massachusetts, and such is the character of that community and the variety and importance of its interests, that a very large post-office business is done. Something like 2,000,000 pieces of mail matter are handled annually; there is a post-office revenue of $20,000; forty-six mails arrive daily; there are nineteen persons employed in handling those mails, and all this business is done within a space of 48 by 18 feet, which, as gentlemen will see, is altogether inadequate.

I will state further that a committee of this House has twice reported favorably upon this bill; the bill has been twice reported upon favorably by the Treasury Department and by the Post-Office Department, and also has twice passed the Senate.

A MEMBER. What is the amount appropriated?

Mr. DAVIS, of Massachusetts. $20,000.

Mr. WELLER. I desire, if I may, to ask the gentleman a question: Does he object to having this appropriation made payable in standard silver dollars? [Laughter.]

Mr. DAVIS, of Massachusetts. Any form of appropriation that will accomplish the purpose will be satisfactory to me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the House.

Mr. WELLER. I offer the following amendment:

Add to the bill the words:

"Provided, however, That this appropriation shall be made and paid only in standard silver dollars."

I desire to inquire whether the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAVIS] will, so far as he is concerned, accept this amendment?

Mr. DAVIS, of Massachusetts. I have no power to accept the amendment.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment, there were—ayes 11, noes 153.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The question being taken on ordering the bill to a third reading, there were 134 in the affirmative 1 in the negative.

Mr. WELLER. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman insists upon the point that no quorum has voted the Chair must appoint tellers.

Mr. WELLER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Will it be proper under the rules of the House for me at this time to move that the House do now adjourn?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion would be in order.

Mr. WELLER. I move that the House adjourn; and pending that I move that it adjourn for fifteen minutes. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is not in order.

Mr. OATES. I make the point of order that the gentleman is not addressing the Chair from his own seat.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present rules permit a member to speak from any place on the floor or from the Clerk's desk.

Mr. WELLER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (having taken the affirmative vote on the motion to adjourn). One gentleman has risen. The "ay" will be seated, and the noes will rise. [Laughter.]

The negative vote having been taken, the result was announced—1 in the affirmative, 143 in the negative.

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DAVIS, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MOSES F. CARLETON.

Mr. YAPLE. I call up the bill (H. R. 6089) for the relief of Moses F. Carleton.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to Moses F. Carleton, late of Company I, Fourth Michigan Infantry Volunteers, the pay and allowances of a second lieutenant of infantry from October 24, 1865, until June 12, 1886, deducting therefrom the pay he received as sergeant of infantry.

Mr. YAPLE. I ask that the report of the Committee on War Claims upon this bill be read.

The report (by Mr. GEDDES) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4792) for the relief of Moses F. Carleton, submit the following report:

The facts out of which this bill for relief arises will be found stated in House Report No. 821 of the Committee on War Claims, first session Forty-fourth Congress, a copy of which is hereto appended.

Your committee adopt the said report as their own, and report herewith a substitute for the bill, and recommend its passage.

"(House Report No. 821, Forty-fourth Congress, first session.)

"The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2386) for the relief of Moses F. Carleton, late second lieutenant of Company I, Fourth Michigan Infantry Volunteers, report:

"This is an application for pay of second lieutenant from October 20, 1865, to June 12, 1866, of Moses F. Carleton, who enlisted as private in Company I, Thirtieth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, 26th September, 1864, and the regiment was consolidated, and Company I was transferred shortly after to the Fourth Michigan Infantry, and he was made a sergeant in Company I, Fourth Regiment Michigan Volunteers. He received a commission of second lieutenant October 24, 1865, said company having but one commissioned officer, viz, a first lieutenant, who received a commission of captain of same date. He was assigned to duty under the commission as second lieutenant in Company I, Fourth Regiment Michigan Volunteers.

"The evidence of First Lieut. and Adjt. William F. Bradley, Fourth Regiment Michigan Volunteers, goes to show that Moses F. Carleton was commissioned a second lieutenant of said regiment, and performed the duties of one from October 24, 1865, until the discharge of the regiment.

"The evidence of William Black, first lieutenant of Company I, Fourth Regiment Michigan Volunteers, shows that said Carleton was promoted to a second lieutenancy, and that he performed the duties of same. The evidence of the colonel, J. W. Hall, Fourth Michigan Volunteers, goes to show that he received a commission of second lieutenant; that he was assigned to duty under said commission, and that he did well and faithfully perform said duty from October 22, 1865, to the discharge of the regiment. The evidence of S. S. Parker, major of Fourth Regiment Michigan Volunteers, goes to show the same facts.

"Your committee, therefore, agree that the claimant should be paid from the 24th day of October, 1865, until June 12, 1866, less his pay as sergeant of said company, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill as committed."

Mr. YAPLE. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Two minutes.

Mr. YAPLE. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GEDDES], who presented this report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that that motion is not in order except under the call of committees, when under instructions from a committee a motion may be made to suspend the rules.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is not a motion to go into Committee of the Whole in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is not the day for individuals to make motions to suspend the rules; such a motion must come from a committee. [Cries of "Regular order!" "Regular order!"] The regular order is called for. The regular order is the call of committees.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, the question of consideration can be raised, I suppose?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can not raise any question of consideration on a motion to suspend the rules of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the House do now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of finishing the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. SLOCUM and others. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made. The regular order is the call of committees under the rule for motions to suspend the rules and for the consideration of bills, and the call rests with the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SLOCUM] is recognized, but with the consent of the House, before the gentleman proceeds the Chair will submit certain executive communications.

RETIREMENT OF GENERAL GRANT.

Mr. SLOCUM. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to move to suspend the rules and to take from the Speaker's table and put upon its passage the bill (S. 2169) to place Ulysses S. Grant, late General of the Army of the United States, upon the retired-list of the Army.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That in recognition of the eminent public services of Ulysses S. Grant, late General of the Army, the President be, and he hereby is, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint him a general on the retired-list of the Army, with the rank and full pay of General of the Army.

Mr. HORR. I demand a second on that bill.

Mr. ROSECRANS. I demand a second.

Mr. BAYNE. I ask unanimous consent that a second be ordered.

Mr. SPRINGER, Mr. STOCKSLAGER, and Mr. McMILLIN objected.

Mr. BAYNE. I ask that a second be ordered by unanimous consent.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object, and call for tellers.

Mr. HORR. Would it be in order for me to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. SLOCUM] a question? [Calls of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded. The Chair will ask the gentleman from New York, Mr. SLOCUM, and the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. HORR, to take their position in front of the Clerk's desk and act as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 110, noes 72.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The tellers report 110 gentlemen voting in the affirmative and 72 in the negative; so a second is ordered. Under the rule thirty minutes is allowed for debate—fifteen minutes on either side.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does the Chair recognize the right of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] to control the time in opposition to the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] rose to demand a second and was recognized by the Chair, and, in the judgment of the Chair, having been recognized, he would be entitled to control the fifteen minutes on that side. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. SLOCUM].

Mr. SLOCUM. Mr. Speaker, this bill proposes to place General Grant in the same position that he would have occupied had he not, in accordance with the will of the people of this country, accepted the office of its Chief Magistrate. In form and language this bill is precisely like all bills that have been passed by Congress for purposes of this kind.

Mr. SPRINGER. Like the Fitz-John Porter bill?

Mr. SLOCUM. It is like all bills that have been passed for the retirement of officers since the foundation of this Government.

Mr. HORR. There was one passed on Saturday that is not in this form.

Mr. COX, of New York. I trust my colleague [Mr. SLOCUM] will be permitted to go on without interruption.

Mr. SLOCUM (to Mr. HORR). You will have your time by and by.

Mr. Speaker, it has often been said that much has been done for General Grant. But the Government of the United States has done nothing for him beyond paying him the salaries to which he was entitled by law. It is true that patriotic citizens have been liberal to him, but the Government has only paid him lawful dues. It has been the custom of the English Government from time immemorial to honor with high offices, to enrich with large emoluments, her great military and naval heroes. Wellington, Marlborough, and Nelson each individually received from the English Government more in money, in palaces, in pensions than has been given to General Grant by our Government and by all our citizens combined.

I would not, and I do not, commend to our country the example set by England in this respect, but I do think that when a man has performed for his country the services that General Grant has performed it is right and proper that in his old age he should not be left to grapple with poverty. I would to-day gladly vote for a bill providing properly from the public Treasury for every man who has ever held the office of Chief Magistrate of this country.

The characters of Marlborough and Nelson were both open to hostile criticism, yet the people of England gladly forgot all their errors, and delighted to honor them for the glory and renown they had shed upon the history of England. General Grant has not been free from mistakes in his career either as a soldier or a civilian; but in a few years his late campaign in Wall street will be forgotten; every error of his will be consigned to oblivion, as it should be, and the campaigns that Grant made from that day at Donelson, when he sent the tidings which revived the hopes of the North, to that other day when from Appomattox he sent the news which carried joy to every Northern heart—these are the campaigns which will be remembered—all else will be forgotten. All the good that he has done will be held in grateful recollection; all his mistakes will be, as they ought to be, forgotten. These campaigns of Grant will live in history, and will compare favorably with the most brilliant and the grandest achievements of England's noblest military heroes.

The successful close of the war under General Grant made him the idol of the people of the North. His generous and noble treatment of Lee and the gallant men who fought under him, his subsequent lenient treatment of the Southern people, his insisting upon carrying out all the terms that he had granted to General Lee and his soldiers, won for him the hearts of the Southern people. I believe that it is to-day the wish of the people South as well as North that General Grant, now afflicted as he is by illness, now in his old age—I believe it is the will of the great mass of the people throughout this country that the Government should take care of him and provide for him liberally. The honor of our Government is at stake. I trust this bill will pass the House with the same unanimity with which it passed the Senate.

I know there are many gentlemen here who want to speak on this question, and as the time is limited I reserve the residue of my time. How much have I left?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ELLIS). Nine minutes and a half.

Mr. HORR. Mr. Speaker, I desire to occupy but five minutes on this question, because I wish to yield to other gentlemen. I asked for a second on this motion not for the purpose of opposing the proposition to put General Grant on the retired-list of the Army with his full rank. I would walk on my knees to-day all over this city through the snow to accomplish that one purpose. I called for a second on this bill that I might state to the House what I believe to be true, and that is that this bill is reported by the committee well knowing that it will prevent General Grant from being put on that list.

Mr. MORGAN. It was drawn by Senator EDMUNDS.

Mr. HORR. There now lies on our table another bill drawn by Senator EDMUNDS, when that Senator learned that this bill was open to objections conscientiously held by the President which might prevent him from signing it. This latter bill, drawn to obviate that difficulty, was passed by the Senate and sent to this House, was before the committee now reporting this bill, and they purposely refused to substitute that in place of this measure, and reported this bill, which they must have known was liable to prevent General Grant from being put on the retired-list.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to say that the Committee on Military Affairs had reported in favor of this bill before the second bill was received from the Senate.

Mr. HORR. The gentleman will not deny that the last bill of Senator EDMUNDS was before that committee, and an attempt was made in that committee to substitute that bill for this one upon the very ground that the position of the President, conscientiously taken in the Fitz-John Porter case, might prevent him from signing this bill, and therefore prevent it from ever becoming a law. But that committee knowing and fully understanding this difficulty refused to make the change. Ay, that is not all.

Mr. SLOCUM. One word. [Cries of "Regular order!" on the Republican side.]

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. Do not interrupt him; he has only five minutes.

Mr. SLOCUM. I think the gentleman from Michigan believes what he is saying.

Mr. HORR. I know I do.

Mr. SLOCUM. There is not a word of truth, however, in what he has said. [Cries of "Regular order!" from the Republican side.]

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Michigan ought to be permitted to proceed.

Mr. HORR. I have only a moment, but I am in earnest about this matter.

Mr. SLOCUM. What you are saying is utterly untrue.

Mr. HORR. I say to the gentleman it is only too true. Mr. Speaker, I have spent twenty-two years of my life standing by General Grant and his character when he has been vilified by men in this nation as no other man ever was who breathed the breath of life in the United States. And now I say you attempt to force us here into a false position, to force us to vote for a bill purposely—I say it advisedly—purposely brought in here to put the Executive of the nation, as one of the gentlemen of the committee said, into a tight place, knowing that his decision conscientiously made in another case might perhaps prevent him from signing this bill. Now then, gentlemen, if you will substitute the Edmunds bill, which is not open to this objection, we will vote for it unanimously on this side of the House; and if you want to place General Grant on the retired-list give us a bill which you yourselves know can and will be signed with great pleasure, but do not try to cast stones before this people when we are demanding bread. [Applause on the Republican side.] This bill is presented here not in the interest of General Grant, but simply to spite some one else. To that I most solemnly object.

Mr. SLOCUM. Have you got through?

Mr. HORR. If you want to ask a question, go on.

Mr. SLOCUM. No, I do not want to ask a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ELLIS in the chair). Does the gentleman from Michigan yield?

Mr. HORR. I will yield two minutes of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS]. The balance of my time I reserve.

Mr. SLOCUM. I shall reserve my time until the other side have concluded what they wish to say. I wish first to hear some more debate of that kind we have just listened to from the gentleman from Michigan before making my reply.

Mr. HORR. I reserve the balance of my time until I can hear from gentlemen on the other side.

Mr. SLOCUM. You can not reserve your time; you must either occupy it or be cut off.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan yields for two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois. [Cries of "Go on!"] Public business will not be resumed until order is restored in the House.

A MEMBER. Who has the floor?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan has the floor, and has yielded two minutes of his time to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. Let him go on.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will be recognized as soon as order is restored.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this bill in its present shape and expect to vote against it on that account. The reasons given by the gentleman from Michigan are so satisfactory a statement of the reasons I had in mind that I would have been content to let the matter go without making any objection were it not for the fact that my people, Democrats and Republicans, without exception, are in favor of putting General Grant on the retired-list.

Mr. MILLER, of Pennsylvania. You mean some bill?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; in favor of putting General Grant on the retired-list. And my people, as well Democrats as Republicans, believe that this bill is a trap brought forward for the purpose of catching not only Republican votes on this floor, but of putting the President of the United States, as the gentleman from Michigan has stated it, in "a tight place." The President of the United States, being a conscientious man, can not sign this bill in its present shape, and the Democratic party in this House and out of it know that fact.

Mr. MORSE. He can let it become a law without signing it.

Mr. THOMAS. They know to pass this bill is to absolutely prevent putting General Grant on the retired-list. I am in favor of the last bill passed by the Senate, the one drawn by Senator EDMUNDS, and which was passed almost unanimously by that body, and if it had been presented instead of this one I would have gladly voted for it. I will cast my vote any day not only to pension him but to put General Grant on the retired-list. I fully appreciate his grand services to his country and to the civilization of the age in which he lived. No man will go further than I will to help him in this day of his distress and old age; but I will not allow myself to be put in a position where, while appearing to be his enemy, I am really his friend, nor will I agree that Democrats on the other side of the House shall appear as his friends when they are in fact his deadly enemies.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HORR. I yield now seven minutes, to be disposed of as he pleases, to the gentleman from California [Mr. ROSECRANS], and I reserve one minute in order that I may have a word to say after the other side has concluded if I shall find it necessary to occupy any additional time.

Mr. WEMPLE. I object to the gentleman reserving his time.

Mr. ROSECRANS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Michigan for his courtesy. It has been already stated that the object of this bill is to put the President of the United States "in a hole." It is my duty to say that in reality the bill is a plain proposition to reward General Grant for his distinguished military services, and it is my duty to say that I can not vote for that bill.

It is not my intention, sir, to recount any of the historical reasons why I think that military reputation has been exaggerated and misrepresented under the exigencies of party interest and power; and can only suggest that when true history comes to be written, it will be pared down to very different dimensions. I do not propose to go into that subject, sir, although I am one of the four living Army commanders contemporary with him, and would feel quite qualified to express opinions of my own on that subject.

But, Mr. Speaker, this House by the passage of this bill is called upon by solemn act to renew and reaffirm all the exaggerations and misstatements of fact which have been popularly impressed on the public mind under the circumstances to which I have alluded. It was the interest of a great political party of this country to make the services of General Grant appear as large and important as possible, for he was their servant and tool to secure power. He himself kept an aid-de-camp in his back office and there prepared the first two volumes of Badeau's Life of Grant, upon which the students of history have put the stamp of unworthiness to be trusted.

But we are told that General Grant is now poor and the public has been told from the same source that General ROSECRANS will not vote for General Grant's bill because of personal ill-will. I do not think, sir, that my colleagues on this floor will believe that I am capable of descending to the depths of being guided in a public duty by any motive of personal dislike; and if there be any gentlemen on this floor who entertain the idea that it is possible, I simply enter my solemn protest, and say that under no consideration would private dislike prevent me from doing this or any other act that my public duty prompted. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I would not oppose the passage of this bill on account of any of these things to which I have alluded, nor would I oppose it on account of those other things to which I have not yet alluded, namely, statements made officially by General Grant that were false, and which he knew to be false at the time he made them and which I have shown in my official reports to be false. I say these things do not enter into my reasons at all. But if we take things as they stand now it has been said over and over again that General Grant is in a state of distress, that there is nothing between him and the poor-house except the income on $250,000 a year, and this statement has been carefully circulated among members of both Houses and the public, and, I say it upon my own responsibility, from his family, that even that amount, the $250,000, was lost or substantially lost. That is not the truth.

There is another critical circumstance to which I wish to call the attention of gentlemen on this floor. Congress by a solemn act like this is asked to arrest—what? Why, the progress of public opinion in the investigation into that great confidence mill of Grant & Ward. If gentlemen on this floor can afford to put a cover over that investigation, or can afford to put a ligature around that investigation by such a solemn and significant act as the bill proposes for the purpose of deceiving the public by it, I can not afford to do it. I can not afford by my action on this floor to say to the people of this country that a business which has been so conducted as to rob poor people of many millions of dollars, and which if done on a small scale would have sent its managers to prison, shall be considered as unimportant when the principal manager has allowed a great name to be used as the instrument of the robbery.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ELLIS in the chair). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ROSECRANS. I yield one minute——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SPRINGER. May I ask how much time was originally accorded the gentleman from California?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands seven minutes.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I ask leave to state that there must be an error in the record of the time kept at the Speaker's table; because I was keeping the time myself, and the gentleman from California has not occupied more that five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed by the Clerk at the table that the gentleman has exhausted the time yielded to him.

Mr. HORR. I would like to reserve my time if the gentleman from New York does not object.

Mr. SLOCUM. I do most seriously object.

Mr. SPRINGER. Do I understand the Speaker to say that the gentleman from California has exhausted his time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed by the time-keeper at the desk that six and one-half minutes have been occupied by the gentleman from California, which the Chair understood was the time yielded by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Michigan yielded seven minutes, as I understand.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair so thought.

Mr. SPRINGER, And I held my watch in my hand and am satisfied there is a mistake.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can only take the statement furnished to him by the time-keeper at the desk.

The gentleman from Michigan has one and a half minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. HORR. I desire to ask a parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HORR. Being myself the demander of a second, have I not the right to reserve one and a half minutes of my time to close debate?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the gentleman who holds the affirmative of a proposition is entitled by the practice of the House and by parliamentary law to close debate.

Mr. CANNON. Will the Chair allow me a word on the question of order? I suggest that this does not come under that rule, for the reason that there are only fifteen minutes of discussion allowed to a side. Now the gentleman having the affirmative is first entitled to be heard; otherwise there will be no debate. The gentleman who supports the bill took the floor and was heard and reserved the remainder of his time. Now, then, I take it that the negative has the same right; and if they both see proper they can both stop now.

Mr. COX, of New York. The gentleman who holds the affirmative always has the right to close debate.

Mr. CANNON. I will undertake to say——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois rise to a question of order?

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir; I want to make this parliamentary inquiry——

Mr. BLOUNT. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. One question of order is already pending. After that is disposed of the Chair will hear the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT].

Mr. CANNON. I want to make this suggestion, that the fifteen minutes cannot be split up——

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. I rise to a question of order. There is so much disorder in the Hall that I can not hear the point of order stated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order of the gentleman from Kentucky is well taken. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] will suspend till order is restored. The Chair requests gentlemen to be seated.

Mr. HORR. I desire to have order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] will suspend till order is restored. [After a pause.] Does the gentleman from Illinois desire to be heard further on the point of order?

Mr. CANNON. I do not know that I desire to say anything further except this: Under what rule can a gentleman split up those fifteen minutes? How should it be divided? If a gentleman reserves a portion of his time and objection is not made, well and good. But if the gentleman from New York [Mr. SLOCUM] can do that, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] can do it also under the same general rule. And if both gentlemen reserve their time and refuse to talk, then we are ready for a vote.

Mr. SLOCUM. Does the gentleman claim that the negative has the right to close debate?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ELLIS). The point of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is not well taken. It has been the uniform practice of the House ever since the adoption of the rule under which the House is now proceeding that gentlemen holding the affirmative or the negative should divide their time as they saw fit. But that does not militate against the force of the rule and of the parliamentary law which prevails in this House that he who holds the affirmative of a proposition has the right to open and close debate.

Mr. OATES. I desire to make a request for unanimous consent. As it is evident that not one-tenth of the gentlemen who desire to make remarks on this bill can be heard I move that general leave be given to print.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will submit the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] who asks unanimous consent that gentlemen who so desire shall be permitted to have printed remarks on this bill in the RECORD.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I object unless an opportunity be afforded for debate on the question in the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] will proceed.

Mr. HORR. In justice to myself I must state that I yielded to the gentleman from California [Mr. ROSECRANS] not because he was in accord or sympathy with me on this bill in any manner, but because I was compelled to, that I might keep my promise made the Speaker to give the other side of the House a fair portion of the time, as they desired to oppose the bill on different grounds; and I did it to keep the contract I had made, and not as a matter of choice.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in the minute and a half which I have I want to call the attention of the gentleman who has this bill in charge to this fact, that on the third day of this present month of February the President of the United States sent to this House a message in which he asked the House to act upon a measure which shall place General Grant upon the retired-list of the Army. He closes that message by saying—

That Congress by taking such action will give expression to the almost universal desire of the people of this nation is evident, and I earnestly urge the passage of an act similar to Senate bill 2530—

Not this bill; mark his words—

which, while not interfering with the constitutional prerogative of appointment, will enable the President in his discrimination to nominate General Grant as general upon the retired-list.

Here we have clearly pointed out the kind of a measure he can honestly approve.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HORR. Why, sir, I have not had a minute and a half.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SLOCUM] is recognized.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPRINGER. According to the way in which I have kept the time, and in which it has been kept by other gentlemen about me, there are two minutes yet remaining of the time for opposing this bill. There was a mistake evidently made by the clerk at the Speaker's table who informed the Chair as to the time occupied by the gentleman from California [Mr. ROSECRANS]. I was keeping the time myself, and know that that gentleman occupied but five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The officer of the House who has charge of the duty of keeping the time says it is as was stated by the Chair. But inasmuch as there is a doubt about it the Chair will submit the request for unanimous consent that two minutes more be occupied by the opponents of the bill.

Mr. MILLS. I object.

Mr. KEIFER. Let it be two minutes on each side.

Mr. MILLS. I object. The statement of the Chair should be final.

Mr. SPRINGER. I assert of my own knowledge that two minutes remain of the time in opposition to the bill.

Mr. MILLS. The rules have settled the authority of the Speaker, and not of gentlemen on the floor, to decide that question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is compelled to decide on official information furnished to the Chair that the full time allotted was occupied by the opponents of the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then the Chair is misinformed. That is all I can say. The opponents of this bill have not had a fair opportunity.

Mr. SLOCUM. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SLOCUM] has seven minutes and a half.

Mr. SLOCUM. Mr. Speaker, the only time that I will occupy will be to correct the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR]. He tells the House that for the last twenty years he has been very near to General Grant——

Mr. HORR. I did not.

Mr. SLOCUM. Well, Mr. Speaker, there have been times when I, too, have been pretty near the general, perhaps as near as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR]. [Laughter and applause.] The gentleman is opposed to this bill and he states a reason, but I think the reason of the gentleman's opposition to this bill is that General Grant attempted to do justice to General Porter. [Applause on the Democratic side.] That is the secret of the opposition of the gentleman from Michigan. He says that this bill, if passed, will be returned with the veto of the President. He forgets that the same vote which will pass it through this House will pass it over the President's veto, if necessary, and that if he is sincere he should seek to pass it now. Why not pass the bill here to-day, and if it is vetoed to pass it again over the veto? [Applause on the Democratic side.] The same votes that will put it through to-day will put it through over the veto.

Mr. HORR. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment?

Several MEMBERS. Do not yield.

Mr. SLOCUM. What is the status here? Since our Government was founded there has been a uniform method of passing these bills from which there has been no deviation. They have been all alike. A bill is now presented here for the benefit of an ex-Republican President, and a Republican President now in office threatens to veto it unless a Democratic House complies with his ideas about the framing of the bill. That is a fine position for the Republican "friends" of General Grant to occupy here!

Mr. COX, of New York. The President names the very bill that we are to pass.

Mr. SLOCUM. Yes; he mentions the number of the bill that he wishes this House to pass.

A MEMBER. He dictates to the House.

Mr. SLOCUM. Suppose he should veto this bill, what would happen? In three weeks' time the House at the other end of the Avenue will be occupied by a different man—by a gentleman who will not stickle so for his prerogatives as to threaten the House of Representatives with a veto message. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I want to correct the statement of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] in another respect. What he said on this floor was untrue from beginning to end. I do not think he supposed so, because I think he is a truthful and honorable gentleman, but the fact is that the bill now before the House was acted upon by the committee before the second bill was presented.

Mr. HORR. Was it not reacted upon? I simply want to know the facts.

Mr. SLOCUM. Mr. Speaker, I have now in my drawer in the committee-room a letter from the gentleman who presented both these bills, in which he alludes to the presentation of the second one, and to the fact of his not having observed the action of the Committee on Military Affairs at the time the second bill was presented. Your history [addressing Mr. HORR] is wrong from beginning to end.

Mr. HORR. Did not the committee react on this bill?

Mr. SLOCUM. Suppose it did. Is a Democratic House to come and bow down before you, and ask you what you will have it do, or is it to go to the President and bow down to him and ask what he wants it to do? [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] If you really want to relieve General Grant, and are honest and fair, you have a chance to do it now; and if you do not do it, it will be simply because you are prejudiced against him because of his action in favor of doing justice to General Porter. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. ROSECRANS. Will my colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SLOCUM], yield to me a moment?

Mr. SLOCUM. I am going to yield to the friends of the measure. [Cries of "Regular order!" "Regular order!"]

Mr. ROSECRANS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California is out of order.

Mr. ROSECRANS. He is usually out of order, but I want to correct the gentleman——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California is out of order.

Mr. SLOCUM. I yield one minute to my colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX, of New York. When my friend from California [Mr. ROSECRANS] was fighting the Union fight in West Virginia I happened to be a member of this House from Ohio, and, along with Mr. Washburne, of Illinois, I gave my aid in every vote of money and men to sustain Ulysses S. Grant. I have seen many things connected with his career as a civilian since that time which I have reprobated on this floor; but, sir, Ulysses S. Grant has passed into history.

Mr. COX, of New York. I ask leave to extend my remarks.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Pennsylvania, and others objected.

Mr. SLOCUM. I yield now to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I favor the proposition to place General Grant upon the retired-list of the Army because I believe it to be a right procedure. Whether the method now proposed is the most expeditious mode of accomplishing the result I am not going to inquire; but if this proceeding fails, then I shall be ready to resort to some other to accomplish the end in view. [Applause.] But I want to say to General Grant's friends on this floor that if they divide on this question they are sure to be overcome, and they will not be free from blame if, in order to secure the consistency of President Arthur, they shall thereby put the knife to General Grant. Hence I invoke every member on this floor who favors the object in view to vote for this bill, and, this failing, to join with me in voting for some other measure which will accomplish the result. [Applause.]

Mr. SLOCUM. I yield the residue of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] is entitled to two minutes.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Speaker, in two minutes I can say but little. Against this bill are arrayed, first, the prejudices of most of the men whom General Grant conquered; I am sorry to see it. Against this bill are arrayed, secondly, the personal dislikes felt by a few individuals; I am sorry to see it. Against this bill are arrayed, thirdly, the political resentments of Republicans because General Grant's name is in the body of the bill and because the President vetoed a similar bill. I am sorry to see it; for no such motives should influence any man occupying the responsible position of a member of the House of Representatives; and in yielding to such motives he can not by any possibility excuse himself.

I believe implicitly in the power of the American Congress to pass this bill and to name the man to be benefited. [Applause.] It simply authorizes the President, with the approval of the Senate, to appoint General Grant to an office, if the President, in the exercise of his discretion, sees fit to do so. It is not mandatory. It does not say to the President, "Thou shalt," but only says to him, "You may, if in your judgment you believe it to be proper and right to do so."

The bill is in accordance with the practice under the Constitution from the foundation of the Government; and the very President who now occupies the executive chair has signed three bills containing provisions precisely similar to those in this bill.

I can see no justification under heaven for denying to General Grant, who was the great benefactor of his country and almost the saviour, this little boon. When any man interposes his prejudices or resentments or personal feelings against this most righteous act he does that which will not commend itself either to his own conscience or to the approval of the people of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time allowed for debate on this question has expired.

Mr. HORR. I rise to a personal explanation, and I do not think any one will object. I find I was misunderstood in reference to the division of time; and some members think I said something which compromised the gentleman occupying the chair regularly as Speaker pro tempore. If you will let me state just what occurred, that gentleman now being in the chair, I will say that when I asked to be recognized—— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. SLOCUM. No more debate is in order.

Mr. HORR. I will not say a word on the bill.

Mr. TUCKER. I hope the gentleman will be allowed to go on.

Mr. HORR. I am not going to say a word on this bill. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. TUCKER. If the gentleman wants to explain his remarks I hope he will be allowed to do so.

Mr. HORR. I think I have the right——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair rules that the gentleman is entitled to be heard if he claims the floor on a question of privilege.

Mr. HORR. I am not going to meddle with the question before the House.

Mr. COBB. The gentleman did not rise to a question of privilege.

Mr. HORR. I think that was my statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood the gentleman to say that he rose to a question of personal privilege. [Cries of "Regular order!"] Who is it that objects to allowing a gentleman to rise to a question of personal privilege?

Mr. COBB. That is not what the gentleman stated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair so understood.

Mr. COBB. He said that he rose to a personal explanation and did not think the House would object. If he rises to a question of privilege, that is another matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear to what point the gentleman from Michigan desires to address himself.

Mr. HORR. What I sought was to make an explanation of a remark which I learned I have been understood as making. Some members thought I intimated I was compelled to divide my time in a certain way in order to get the recognition of the Chair.

Mr. COBB. I ask whether this is a question of personal privilege?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman states that it is a question of personal privilege.

Mr. HORR. It is. I am not in the habit of occupying the time of the House frivolously.

Mr. COBB. You take up more time than I do.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will proceed to state his question of privilege.

Mr. HORR. What I should have said and supposed I did say was this—that when I asked the present occupant of the Chair to recognize me to call for a second on this question I stated to him frankly that I opposed the bill on an entirely different ground from many other gentlemen on the floor. He said I will recognize you, trusting to you to be fair and let both wings be represented, and I stated to him that I would do that. I did do it, and that is the only reason why the gentleman from California received a portion of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair). The gentleman's statement is altogether accurate.

Mr. SLOCUM. I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time for debate having expired, the gentleman from New York demands the yeas and nays on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 158, nays 103, not voting 63; as follows:

Mr. STRAIT with Mr. VAN EATON.

Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas, with Mr. REED, of Maine.

The vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I ask that by unanimous consent members be permitted to print speeches on this subject which they did not have the opportunity to deliver.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I object.

Mr. COX, of New York. I rise to a question of privilege. I understood from the Speaker at the time I made my remarks I was authorized to print some remarks in addition. [Cries of "No!"]

Mr. CLAY. No; that was objected to.

Mr. COX, of New York. I do not care enough about it, and I withdraw any remarks I made on that subject.

EVENING SESSIONS FOR COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS.

Mr. TALBOTT. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the resolution which I send to the desk. I do this at the instance of the Committee on Naval Affairs of this House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That on Wednesday, February 18, and Wednesday, February 25, the House take a recess at 5 o'clock p. m. until 8 o'clock p. m., and that the session of each of said evenings until adjournment shall be devoted to the consideration of bills or resolutions reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs, and bills and resolutions upon the Speaker's table over which the Committee on Naval Affairs may have jurisdiction, except Senate bill 698, or other bills authorizing the construction of steel cruisers, unless said evenings are claimed by the Committee on Appropriations for the consideration of general appropriation bills.

Mr. HENLEY. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objections are not in order.

Mr. HENLEY. I propose to antagonize the motion, and therefore demand a second.

Mr. TALBOTT. I ask that a second may be considered as ordered by unanimous consent.

There being no objection a second was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule thirty minutes are allowed for debate, of which the gentleman from Indiana will control fifteen minutes and the gentleman from California the remainder.

Mr. TALBOTT. The committee does not want any time to discuss the motion unless some gentleman shall occupy the time in opposition, when we wish to be heard.

Mr. HENLEY. I want to submit some remarks to the House upon the subject.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from California.

Mr. TALBOTT. We will reserve our time.

Mr. HENLEY. I should have no objection to the adoption of that resolution if it included an exception in favor of business from the Public Lands Committee. But there are some very important bills now before the House upon the Speaker's table involving the restoration to the public domain of millions of acres of land, and I think if the desires of the people throughout the United States were consulted they would place that character of legislation——

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. It does not seem as if there are seats enough provided for the members of this House. I ask that the public business be suspended until gentlemen are provided with seats.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Sergeant-at-Arms will see that gentlemen take their seats.

Mr. HENLEY. I dislike exceedingly to antagonize anything that contemplates a rehabilitation or building up of our Navy; but I was proceeding to say at the time I was interrupted that I believed if the question were submitted to the people of the United States, and we are presumably representing their wishes, I believe they would say that the restoration and opening up for settlement of these public lands and the forfeiture of railroad land grants would be paramount to all other considerations.

Now, if the gentleman will amend his rule so as to give the Committee on the Public Lands an equal show with the Committee on Naval Affairs, for myself I would interpose no objection; but as it is I submit these considerations as reasons why the rules should not be adopted, and reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HENLEY. I have promised to yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] for two minutes.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, ordinarily I do not oppose these requests for the consideration of any character of public business; but in the present condition of our Calendar, with four or five appropriation bills pending, with the river and harbor bill before the House for its action, unless the gentleman shall except that from the operation of this provision, in my judgment it jeopardizes the passage of the river and harbor bill, and I ask him, therefore, to except that from his resolution.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. And all other special orders.

Mr. WILLIS. If that exception is made, I shall support cordially the proposition; but unless it is done, I think the available time necessary to pass the appropriation bills, and in that I include, first of all, the river and harbor appropriation bill, will be taken up with proceedings brought up by this committee.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. If the gentleman from Kentucky will yield to me the remainder of his time I shall like to say a single word.

Mr. WILLIS. Very well.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I am opposed to taking up any new business whatever until we finish the consideration of the appropriation bills. I do not think the House ought to go into any new business, as we have quite enough before us now.

Mr. HENLEY. That is right. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND].

Mr. HAMMOND. I desire simply to call the attention of the House to the fact that the resolution provides that the House shall take a recess on each day fixed in the resolution at 5 o'clock. We spent three hours of good work after 5 o'clock on the last day's session of this House.

Mr. HENLEY. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has eleven minutes remaining.

Mr. HENLEY. I will yield one minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND].

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Unless the gentleman from Maryland will except the Mexican pension bill, I shall certainly oppose his motion. [Laughter.] It is my desire to procure final action upon that pension bill before this Congress adjourns, and I shall not agree to allow that bill to be put aside by any other business whatever if I can help it.

Mr. TALBOTT. Has not some other gentleman some bill that he wants excepted, the Library bill for instance?

Mr. HENLEY. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. I only want to say I can not vote for this resolution at this time of the session; for this among other reasons, that it excepts the only measure of great public importance that I know of that should come from that committee, namely, the consideration of the bill for the construction of steel cruisers. I apprehend if this order should be made it may have awkward results and will greatly jeopardize some other special orders and business of public importance. I hope the resolution will be voted down.

Mr. HENLEY. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN].

Mr. MCMILLIN. I have favored the special orders that have been sought by the committees seeking this privilege heretofore, and if the resolution were qualified I should favor the resolution in this instance also. I should be willing to attend any session of the House for any length of time for the benefit of the Committee on Naval Affairs. But there are two measures still undisposed of in addition to the appropriation bills excepted by this resolution, which I think are of paramount importance and which should not be permitted to be set aside by any special order. I refer to the reports made from the Committee on the Public Lands and to the report from the River and Harbor Committee. Until those reports are disposed of I think this House ought to be slow to make any special order that may by any possibility supersede them.

I regret to have to oppose the resolution; but in its present form and while it does antagonize the forfeiture and the just forfeiture of public lands and imperils the passage of the river and harbor bill, I shall oppose it and vote against it.

A MEMBER. Those are privileged matters.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Not under this resolution. If they were I should have no objection to voting for it, but this resolution sets their privilege aside.

Mr HENLEY. I yield one minute to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. O'HARA].

Mr. O'HARA. I regret very much I am compelled to oppose this resolution. But in addition to the appropriation bills and the river and harbor bill of which I am in favor, there is another bill of a great deal of importance, I might say of vital importance, to the country that should be acted upon this session and which will be excluded from consideration by the resolution now offered if it should be adopted. I mean the education bill. Until action is taken upon that bill I shall oppose not only this special order but all others that may be asked for.

Mr. HENLEY. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. TALBOTT. I yield five minutes of my time to the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. Speaker, this resolution has been ordered by the committee of which I happen to be chairman, and has been pressed here, in one form or other, for several weeks and months. It has not been passed. Resolutions of similar import for other committees, of no more dignity or importance to the House, have been adopted. We have made every proper exception in this resolution, but gentlemen oppose it because forsooth the educational bill is not excepted, or because the land-grant forfeiture bills are not excepted, or because somebody else's bill has not been excepted.

I desire to say, sir, on the two hundred bills sent to the Committee on Naval Affairs in this House for careful inspection there have been reports made, and we have modestly and kindly pressed them on the attention of Congress. If this House does not choose to consider matters of a naval character, the fault does not lie with that committee but with the House itself.

It is unfair to place men in charge of important interests and then by some hocus-pocus or by some rule ruling thereon cut them off from any consummation of the work in which they have been engaged.

No man wants to serve in this Congress unless he sees some sort of result from his labors. After some nine or ten months of constant labor on this committee we have had but one day of a hearing in this House.

We do not propose to intrench on the duties of other committees. Although I believe it is the duty of the Naval Affairs Committee to consider the question of our naval marine, we have not had an opportunity even to present one proposition in respect to it, and this resolution is only possible because that is excepted.

If the House chooses to vote this down, very well. As the chairman of that committee I have done my duty in all persistency in bringing matters before this House. There are matters now on the Speaker's table, and matters which have been reported from our committee connected with our Arctic expedition, with the Alert, with the proper disposition of things in the Navy, which are indispensable to be passed, and yet we can not get unanimous consent; we can not be heard by the Speaker under our rules; we can not move to suspend the rule by a two-thirds vote, and all we can do is during the last six days of the session to move to suspend the rules and pass some of our measures. We are discriminated against. I protest against it. If the House shall vote us down they may do so, but the responsibility is not on that committee which has been diligent in season and out of season to do the work delegated to us by the House.

Mr. TALBOTT. I yield two minutes to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO].

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Speaker, I think that when the House reflects upon the time that has been given to other committees of no greater importance or dignity than the Committee on Naval Affairs this resolution will pass. It is conceded that we shall not try on the occasion selected to pass any bills looking to the construction of the Navy, the building of ships, but that we will deal alone with the personnel of the service. Now it is of the utmost importance—and I want to impress that upon the minds of members of the House—that this great mass of bills relating to the personnel of the Government and the efficiency of the service shall have consideration from Congress at this time. There are on the Calendars carefully made reports with relation to the official conduct of persons in the Navy, with relation to the reinstatement of cadets, with relation to almost everything that concerns the efficiency of the service—a great public service equal to the Army or the Post-Office, or any other branch of the Government—and I think it is but right that this House should give two evenings before it adjourns to the consideration of this business, the preparation of which has cost the members of the Committee on Naval Affairs weeks of labor. I have no hesitation in saying that no committee of this House has labored more faithfully, more zealously, and, although I am a member of the committee, I will say, more intelligently or more honestly, in investigating the matters assigned to it than the Committee on Naval Affairs. Is it right, sir, that all the labor of the members of that committee shall be wasted simply because this House will not give a single evening to considering the bills reported by the committee?

Mr. TALBOTT. How much time have I left, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has sixteen minutes remaining.

Mr. TALBOTT. I yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE].

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs has very forcibly stated the injustice of which members of that committee have a right to complain because of the condition in which they find themselves in respect of the public business committed to their care. I, Mr. Speaker, have had lying upon my desk for weeks two measures of public importance unanimously approved by the Committee on Naval Affairs—one of them involving a measure recommended to this House by the President of the United States in a special message; another involving the extension to the enlisted men and marines of the naval service of those beneficent provisions of law which have been heretofore extended to the military branch of the service, and the further extension of which is demanded by every consideration of justice and equity; yet day after day this House has adjourned and no possible opportunity has been afforded to members of our committee to discharge the duties which have been imposed upon them by their colleagues upon this floor. Neither under the morning hour, nor by unanimous consent, nor by suspension of the rules, has it been possible for me as one member of that committee to discharge the duties with which I have been intrusted. Member after member has come to me day after day inquiring, complaining, protesting; yet still we are in the position of being unable to secure any action whatever by the House. I appeal to the House to give to this committee, which certainly ought to be regarded and recognized as one of the important committees of the House, an opportunity of attending to the transaction of the public business intrusted to it.

Mr. TALBOTT. Mr. Speaker, I had no idea when I offered this resolution of how much business could be transacted in the course of two evenings. I find now that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors believe that they could pass their bill in one of the evenings which the Committee on Naval Affairs seeks to occupy; I find that the Committee on Education and Labor believe that they could pass their bill on that evening, and the only thing I am surprised at is that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON] did not tell us that if he could have that evening he could pass his Library bill. Mr. Speaker, although the Committee on Naval Affairs is one of the most important committees of the House, having charge of the legislation affecting a very important branch of the Government service, yet, under the rules of this House, we have found no possible way of getting our "day in court." If I ask for unanimous consent, somebody—no matter who—objects under the rule. I have carried this resolution and waited and waited for this day to be reached and for this committee to be called. I have waited so long that the resolution is almost worn out in my pocket [laughter], and this is the first time that I have had a chance to ask the House to give us a day or an evening for the consideration of business reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

We have a number of bills which have been passed by the Senate and are on the Speaker's table. We have a number of bills which were referred to our committee and have been reported back. We have a bill distributing prize-money, and we have a bill giving marines or seamen in the naval service charged with desertion an opportunity to remove the charge upon proper proof; we have a number of bills of great importance to the country; we have a bill which provides what is to be done with the Alert—for Congress has to pass upon that. We have also a bill upon the Calendar transferring vessels now in the Navy to the Treasury Department—the revenue marine. None of those measures, all of which are necessary measures and ought to be passed, can be reached unless this resolution be adopted. The Committee on Appropriations can, if they choose, antagonize these measures on either of these two evenings, or on both. The most important thing for this House to do is, of course, to pass the appropriation bills. That is what the country expects and what the people have a right to expect; but I think when we yield to the Committee on Appropriations that is as much as we ought to be required to do.

Mr. HENLEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman says he does not desire to retard the progress of the appropriation bills; but the trouble is that this proposition which he asks the House to adopt would do that very thing, because, as the gentleman from Georgia has very aptly said, it would compel a recess of the House on the evenings designated at 5 o'clock, appropriation bills or no appropriation bills. I oppose this proposition because I believe it means the possibility of all the disaster, turmoil, and distraction of an extra session.

Another thing, Mr. Speaker, it antagonizes the river and harbor bill; and I believe, if the sense of the people of this country should be taken, it would be found that the advancement of the commercial prosperity of this land, the security and preservation of human life sought in this river and harbor bill, are held in their estimation paramount to the consideration of the matters insisted upon by the Naval Committee or anything that can be done in that direction at this stage of the present session.

The chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs has alluded to the fact that he has had no opportunity to press the consideration of the bills coming from his committee. Well, this House and the country will acquit him of any want of endeavor and persistency and determination on his part to secure the consideration of those measures. This House cheerfully accepts the responsibility of that matter, and he has none at all on his shoulders; unquestionably he has done his duty, as he always does, and his whole duty.

Mr. Speaker, the necessity becomes more and more apparent every day and hour that we live for the legislation embraced in the land-grant-forfeiture bills, which are antagonized by this proposed order. We see the other end of the Capitol—the Senate of the United States—gradually filling up with railroad magnates and their creatures. We see that the State of California has recently elected Leland Stanford to the Senate, distinguished for his violation of law and defiant disregard of the will of the people, and his great wealth taken from their pockets. We see elected from the State of New York Mr. Evarts, a man who has been conspicuous in and whose fame rests mainly on his defense of the pretended rights of railroad corporations and of corporate domination. We also see that another gentleman who has grown somewhat famous in the West in the same line has been returned to the Senate from Wisconsin. All these things go to show that the time has come when the friends of the people, when those who desire that these vast quantities of public lands that have fallen into the grasp of these corporations shall be restored to the public domain for the benefit of actual settlers, should act unitedly; and if we have any time at this session outside of that required by the appropriation bills that are actually necessary to carry on the Government, I am in favor of dedicating that time to the restoration of these lands to the people.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is right.

Mr. HENLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas has one minute and a half.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, in the confusion I failed to hear the reading of this resolution. I ask that it be read again.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If read again it must come out of the gentleman's time.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. I am aware of that. I hope the Clerk will read rapidly.

The Clerk proceeded to read the resolution again:

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas (interrupting the reading). Mr. Speaker, I have heard enough of this resolution to convince me that I ought to vote against it; and as gentlemen seem to have selected this occasion for the purpose of pronouncing funeral orations over the dead measures of dying committees, I wish to say that the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, of which I am a member, has never had an hour of the time of this House from the beginning of the Forty-eighth Congress down to the present time. I do not know how many more committees of the House are in the same situation.

Mr. TALBOTT. That is not the fault of the Naval Committee.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. As a parting shot I want to say that at the next session of Congress I hope we shall have some revision of these rules, so as to give us some opportunity at some time to discharge our public duties in a manner creditable to ourselves and in a measure at least acceptable to the country. We shall never do it while working under this cleverly devised batch of obstructions that we improperly denominate a system of rules. [Applause.]

Mr. TALBOTT. I yield the residue of my time to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF].

Mr. GOFF. Mr. Speaker, the statement of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] that his committee has not had opportunity to present its business to the consideration of the House is no argument why one at least of the important committees of this House should not be heard. I mean no disrespect to the gentleman from California [Mr. HENLEY] or to the measures which he advocates when I say that he probably magnifies their importance, at least in the estimation of members of this House. The reason he has given why this resolution should not pass applies equally to every motion made here, to every proposition brought up for the consideration of the House, because it consumes time, and the consumption of time jeopardizes the passage of other measures.

We have had important matters before the Naval Committee; matters in which the entire country is deeply interested; matters in which every Congressional district and every member of this House is concerned; matters affecting the Naval Academy; matters affecting the Naval Observatory. They have been duly considered in committee, and we should have at least a few hours of this session to present them to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time for debate on the motion to suspend the rules has expired.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. TALBOTT to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution, it was not agreed to; there being—ayes 54, noes 73.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SPRINGER). The next committee entitled to submit a motion to suspend the rules is the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

LETTING OF MAIL CONTRACTS.

Mr. MONEY. By instruction of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, I move to suspend the rules so as to take from the House Calendar and pass the bill (H. R. 6407) to regulate the letting of mail contracts.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That every proposal for carrying the mail, made under a general or miscellaneous advertisement, shall be accompanied by the bond of the bidder in a sum to be designated by the Postmaster-General in the advertisement of each route, and in a form to be prescribed by the Postmaster-General, with sureties approved by a postmaster at a post-office upon or contiguous to the route to which the proposal relates, to which bond a condition shall be annexed that if the said bidder shall, within such time after his bid is accepted as the Postmaster-General shall prescribe, enter into a contract with the United States of America, with good and sufficient sureties, to be approved by the Postmaster-General, to perform the service proposed in his said bid, and, further, that he shall perform the said service according to his contract, then the said obligation to be void, otherwise to be in full force and obligation in law; and in case of failure of any bidder to enter into such contract to perform the service, or, having executed a contract, in case of failure to perform the service according to his contract, he and his sureties shall be liable for the amount of said bond as liquidated damages, to be recovered in an action of debt on the said bond. No proposal shall be considered unless it shall be accompanied by such bond, and there shall have been affixed to said proposal the oath of the bidder, taken before an officer qualified to administer oaths, that he has the ability, pecuniarily, to fulfill his obligations, and that the bid is made in good faith, and with the intention to enter into contract and perform the service in case his bid is accepted. And if any bidder or surety shall knowingly and willfully swear falsely to any statement that the Postmaster-General may require under the provisions of this section, he shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and, on conviction thereof, be punished as is provided by law for commission of the crime of perjury.

SEC. 2. That whenever, from any cause, no proposal is received for the performance of mail service on any route that has been advertised at any general or miscellaneous letting, or whenever the lowest proposal received is considered too high, the Postmaster-General may informally readvertise the service, for not less than ten days, at the terminal points upon the route, and at such other points as he may deem proper; and the contract made under such advertisement shall run, as nearly as possible, from the beginning to the end of the regular contract term; and during the time that may necessarily be lost by reason of a failure to receive a proposal or make an award, the Postmaster-General may employ temporary service upon the conditions imposed by law therefor.

SEC. 3. That in awarding contracts for mail service the Postmaster-General shall not be bound to consider the proposal of any person who has imposed, or aided in the imposition, upon the United States of an insufficient bond upon any proposal or contract for carrying the mail, or who has made any false statement to any postmaster or other official in the postal service to secure a certificate to the sufficiency of the sureties upon any such proposal or contract, or who has made or filed, or aided in the making or filing, of any false statement in relation to any post-road, or mail service thereon, with the intent thereby to defraud or otherwise cause loss to the United States.

SEC. 4. That the first part of section 2 of an act to regulate the advertising of mail lettings, and for other purposes, approved May 17, 1878, be so amended as to read as follows:

"Hereafter no subletting or transfer of any mail contract shall be permitted unless the annual compensation under the contract for the service shall exceed $700, and in no case without the consent in writing of the Postmaster-General."

SEC. 5. That section 1 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes," be, and it is hereby, amended by striking out, in lines 28 and 29, the words "and upon a bulletin-board in a public place in the Post-Office Department building at Washington, in the District of Columbia." And sections 3945, 3946, and 3953 of the Revised Statutes, and subsections 245 and 246 of section 12 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes," approved June 23, 1874, and subsections 246 of an act approved August 11, 1876, entitled "An act to amend subsections 246 and 251 of section 12 of an act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, and for other puposes,' approved June the 23d, 1874, and for other purposes, and section 3954 of the Revised Statutes," approved August 11, 1876, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. VALENTINE. I demand a second.

Mr. MONEY. I have no objection to that, and I hope a second will be granted by unanimous consent.

Mr. VALENTINE. I only want time for explanation of the provisions of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and there is a second to the motion to suspend the rules. The rules allow fifteen minutes' debate on either side.

Mr. MONEY. I ask the attention of the gentleman from Nebraska for a moment. Is it his intention to debate the bill?

Mr. VALENTINE. Not especially. I can not support the bill as reported from the committee. I find objection to the first section. Let the gentleman take his time if he is going to make any remarks on the bill.

Mr. MONEY. I have no desire to debate the measure unless gentlemen have something to urge against its adoption.

Mr. VALENTINE. Explain it.

Mr. MONEY. Very well, then; I will explain briefly to the House that the purpose of the bill is to shut off all speculative bidding on star routes, or ring bids. It is to obviate hereafter any possibility of that maladministration of the contract office of the Post-Office Department which fostered and encouraged those star-route frauds which were the subject of investigation by two or three committees of this House. In my opinion and in the opinion of the committee it will have that effect. It will throw, in other words, the carriage of mails on star routes into the hands of the people who live contiguous to those routes. It will put it into the hands of the local contractors and take it out of the hands of this great organization which exists only at Washington, and puts in bids for every State and Territory in this Union, at prices sometimes below the market, and then sublets to subcontractors all over the country. The result is, we have as cheap carriage as under any system, but it is inferior and unsatisfactory to the Department and the people. That is the object of the bill, and I will reserve the remainder of my time until I can hear what gentlemen have to say in opposition.

Mr. VALENTINE. I am in sympathy with the line of thought suggested by the gentleman from Mississippi. If it is possible under this or any other law we may enact to take from the great star-route ring the power of gathering all these small routes in the country into their hands, then I will support the bill. I am in favor of that if that would be the result of it, but I believe if this bill becomes a law that in the sparsely settled portions of the West it would deprive the citizens of their mail facilities. I specially refer to this provision of the bill which says that every proposal for carrying the mail made under a general or miscellaneous advertisement shall be accompanied by the bond of the bidder in a sum to be designated by the Postmaster-General in the advertisement of each route, and in a form to be prescribed by the Postmaster-General, with sureties approved by a postmaster at a post-office upon or contiguous to the route to which the proposal relates, to which bond a condition shall be annexed that if the said bidder shall, within such time after his bid is accepted as the Postmaster-General shall prescribe, enter into a contract with the United States of America, with good and sufficient sureties, to be approved by the Postmaster-General, to perform the service proposed in his said bid, and, further, that he shall perform the said service according to his contract, then the said obligation to be void; otherwise to be in full force and obligation in law.

That would only permit men living on the route or contiguous thereto to enter into competition in bidding. I assure you, in my own State, where this system is largely in vogue yet, there are no men who would be able to carry on the larger routes, for the reason they could not give the security. They are not able to take the responsibility of carrying on those large routes, and I believe the result would be to break down the carriage of the service we have now in the West. So believing, I think the bill ought not to be passed without amendment. For instance, a man in the eastern part of my State would not be able to get a contract in the western part of the State, forsooth, because the postmaster on the western route would not be sufficiently acquainted with him to approve his bond. In a State five hundred miles across a man in one part can not know well enough those in the other parts to give approval to their bonds.

Now, I am in favor of any plan which may be devised to take from the Washington ring the power of gathering up all these routes, but I do not wish to have our people deprived of the chance of receiving their mails as they now do.

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. What is the reason that solvency of sureties may not be made to appear to the postmaster along the route as well as you can make the fact in Arkansas appear in New York?

Mr. VALENTINE. Why is it the committee select a postmaster away out on the route instead of the Postmaster-General?

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. Simply to break up the star-route ring that has existed here and controlled these matters.

Mr. VALENTINE. If I thought this bill would accomplish that purpose, and that it would not in any way change for the worse the system we have of carrying the mails, I would be glad to assist in carrying it through; but as I am now advised it will not have that effect.

A MEMBER. And it will increase the cost.

Mr. VALENTINE. I do not care whether it increases the cost or not, as I believe the people of the United States, whether they live in the prairies or in the cities, should have all the mail facilities this Congress can furnish them with. If I were sure it could increase the efficiency of the service I would vote for it, but I am unwilling to deprive the people of the West of any postal facilities they now possess.

Mr. HORR. I would like to know to what extent the gentleman assumes that this would increase the cost of the public service.

Mr. MONEY. I will allude to that in the course of my remarks.

Mr. VALENTINE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I doubt very much whether this bill should be passed, if passed at all, with only fifteen minutes' debate on each side. To me it is a very important bill; that was my impression on hearing it read for the first time from the desk; and it is a bill that should not, in my judgment, pass without sufficient information as to exactly what it does. It is impossible in the short time allowed for its consideration to judge properly of its effects. I do not believe it is possible for anybody to form an intelligent opinion unless he be on the committee which presented it. There is not time for the House to understand it in the limit of the half hour allowed for discussion.

Now, I grant you one thing, that in the past great outrages have been committed in this branch of the service.

Mr. TILLMAN. And they are committed now, I will say, if the gentleman is not aware of the fact.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman says they are committed now; but to a great extent the cure for these outrages is in the administration of the Department. We have seen within the last few years this service established upon over 10,000 routes, and by correct administration cut down from an actual expenditure of about $8,000,000 to a little over $5,000,000 per annum; and while I think it might be well enough to require these star-route bidders to provide not only proper sureties, but the approval of their bonds in the State, or the section, if you please, where the route is to be let, yet I am inclined to think that if you require them in every case on each one of these 10,000 routes throughout the country to comply with such a requirement, and demand that a postmaster on each particular route shall approve the bonds, you destroy competition and necessarily double up the cost of the service to the Government.

Now, sir, I do not want to legislate for the benefit of any contractor or contractors, but in seeking to break up one ring I am opposed to doing it in such a manner as to incur the possibility of creating a dozen others. Therefore I would be glad if the gentleman in charge of this proposition would amend his motion so as to set the bill down for consideration some evening when it can be considered in the House and fully discussed, intelligently discussed, and understood by the House before we are called upon to vote on it. In its present shape I can not vote for it, although I would be glad to do so when I understand its provisions, if it commends itself to my judgment, when I have had that opportunity.

Mr. VALENTINE. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. MONEY. I believe I have the right to close this discussion, and will reserve my time.

Mr. VALENTINE. Then we had better come to a vote at once.

I would like to say to the gentleman that I think it is but fair that he should give some reason for the passage of this bill before objection is asked against it. It may be that he can sufficiently explain the clause to which I object. I have no desire to consume any of the time of the House unnecessarily, nor have I any desire in this matter except to increase the efficiency of this branch of the service. In my present view of the case I think it would be a public injury to my people and would eventually break down the service in that State to adopt this bill.

Mr. MONEY. I am perfectly willing if the gentleman wants information to give it.

Mr. VALENTINE. I should be very glad to hear from the gentleman before proceeding myself.

Mr. MONEY. This bill was prepared at the Post-Office Department, and they are presumed to know the wants of the service. They are not presumed to be willing to strike down the service in any of its branches. This has had the careful consideration and comes here with the unanimous approval of the Post-Office Committee.

I say to my friend from Nebraska that it is a measure which would not impair the efficiency of the service, but on the contrary it will promote it. The only object that it has in view is to promote the efficiency of the service, and to strike down this speculative bidding under which great frauds have arisen and flourished in the past.

Mr. CANNON. Does not my friend think that it would materially increase the cost of the service?

Mr. MONEY. I do think so. I desire to deal perfectly fairly, openly, and frankly with the House. My own impression is that it will increase the cost. There is, however, a conflict of opinion in the Department upon the subject; but the committee believe that it will increase the cost perhaps as much as 5 per cent.

Mr. VALENTINE. And do a good deal more than that percentage of injury to it.

Mr. MONEY. But on the other hand the committee believe that it will best promote the efficiency of the service and its interests, as well as the honesty of the administration of the service. We propose to take away the temptation to defraud the Government and the opportunity for doing so. We propose while giving every needed star-route facility to every community in all parts of the country to throw every possible safeguard around it to secure its honest administration.

Why, sir, the practice that prevails here is one that I am satisfied a little reflection will induce any man to admit ought to be broken up. Take a thousand routes in any portion of this Union, and if the bidder on those routes can secure the approval of the postmaster in some little village like Falls Church, or Rockville, or any other place in the neighborhood of Washington, on the bonds, if one man comes in and swears he is worth $10,000 he is approved by the postmaster, and he becomes the surety on bids involving one hundred thousand or a million of dollars.

The whole object of this bill is to promote the efficiency of the service; and I grant the gentleman, if he desires it, it will be at an increased cost. But if it is, it brings a benefit to the people more than commensurate with that increase of cost.

Mr. HORR. I wish to ask the gentleman: Do they not now have to deposit a check?

Mr. MONEY. They do have to deposit a check, and that is one of the things which prevent the people in the rural districts from bidding. The people who know every inch of the country, the character of the routes, the cost of forage, the value of labor, of horses, &c., want to bid; but they have not got a national bank convenient to them; they have not the money in their pockets to get checks here to compete with the gentlemen who have millions of dollars and can get their checks without inconvenience to themselves.

Mr. BAYNE. I wish to ask the gentleman from Mississippi a question. Does this bill preclude the doubling up of contractors in support of each other?

Mr. MONEY. I do not quite understand the gentleman.

Mr. BAYNE. Does it shut out mail contractors from supporting each other and intermingling their bids?

Mr. MONEY. It prevents the ring bidding so far as it is possible for that to be done. It is designed to put the service in the hands of the people who are on the routes, who understand the service and are willing to give good service.

The result of the present system is that a great many of these routes are taken every year and sublet at a loss; but on the average the contractors make their profits. But when the routes are taken at a loss it means inefficient and poor service; it means a derangement of the whole service; it means a delay in the Sixth Auditor's Office in the settlement of the accounts; it means deductions and subsequent releases on that account. This not only simplifies but it vastly increases the efficiency of the service; and it does so, as I admit, at a slight increase of cost.

Mr. KEIFER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask, in the spirit of getting to understand the bill in the short time we have for its consideration——

Mr. MONEY. I am sorry we have not more.

Mr. KEIFER. I sympathize with the gentleman as to that, and want to know if this bill—for I had not an opportunity of listening to its being read—will prevent a contractor from taking contracts on these star routes at various places over the country and subletting them to other parties.

Mr. MONEY. It will not prevent any man in the United States from bidding on any route, but compels him to bring his sureties from that route.

Mr. KEIFER. Does it forbid subletting to the local parties?

Mr. ROGERS, of Arkansas. Under $700 it does.

Mr. MONEY. Under $700 they can not sublet at all.

Mr. KEIFER. And if they bid for a contract and it is awarded, they must by their own teams and transportation carry it themselves?

Mr. MONEY. Yes, sir. I should be glad to speak for an hour in explanation and advocacy of this measure, but I promised to yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SKINNER], for two minutes.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. I desire to indorse every word which the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads has said in support of this bill. I think the objection made to it by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. VALENTINE] is not good, because I believe it is true that the character of the sureties can be better known within the bounds of one State than the character of sureties throughout the Union can be known at the Department.

My reasons for supporting this bill are that it gives infinitely a better service, and what is the best is the cheapest. It should be passed for another reason: it makes impossible the disgraceful frauds which have disgraced the present plan. It opens the service to parties nearer by, where the service is to be performed, and where it can best be judged. It is recommended by the best judgment of the officers of the Department, who, it seems to me, are the best judges of what the service needs. It has received the patient and careful attention of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads in connection with the authorities of the Post-Office Department; and I believe it will be to the credit of this Congress to put this good legislation upon the statute-book.

Mr. MONEY. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY].

Mr. DINGLEY. I am heartily in favor of this legislation for three among other reasons:

First. I believe that the contracts for carrying the mails of the United States should be given to those men who live near the routes, who are acquainted with the wants of the localities, and who will give their personal attention to the business. I do not believe that the giving of contracts to professional bidders living hundreds of miles distant from the point where the service is to be performed does result in benefit to the service.

Secondly. I know, from experience in my own district, that the correction of irregularities in the carrying of the mails, where the letting has been given to a professional bidder, is always delayed because of the distance that the contractor lives from the locality interested.

Thirdly. I believe that the contractors who carry the mails themselves should not be permitted to sublet to other parties, because when professional contractors sublet to other parties they always desire to make a profit, and in doing that necessarily secure the service of men who have inadequate equipments for the purpose, and who therefore always, or usually, provide inefficient service.

I think, therefore, that this bill is in the interest of a true economy and an improved and more efficient service, and I am heartily in favor of it.

Mr. MONEY. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Speaker, how much time is there remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. VALENTINE] has six minutes remaining.

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Speaker, I can agree with almost everything that has been said by the gentlemen who advocate this bill except that it is a good measure. [Laughter.] I would like to see a law enacted to carry out just what they desire, but I do not believe that this bill would have that effect. I ask any of these gentlemen to look at any route in his own State at least fifty miles in length and he will find that the contractor is not required to live in the State; he may live in Washington. All that is required is that the bonds of the sureties shall be approved by a postmaster who lives contiguous to the route. Now, if any gentleman in whose district there are star routes will just think for a moment I am satisfied that he will agree with me that in every case of a route there or in any other part of the country the bidders in Washington can carry their bonds out there to some postmaster along the route and get them approved. The fact is, this legislation only gives more power to the men that you are trying to strike down and makes the case worse than it is at present, and I wish to say to the House that if this legislation be adopted the increase in the cost of the star-route service will be not 5 per cent. but 50 per cent. That is my prediction, and when you are called upon two years hence to vote an appropriation for the star-route service remember what I have said about it here to-day, that instead of the cost being increased 5 per cent. it will be increased probably 50 per cent.

Mr. HORR. Oh, no.

Mr. PAYSON. Why do you say that?

Mr. VALENTINE. I believe it.

Mr. PAYSON. Why?

Mr. VALENTINE. Because the legislation will force out the best men from the service and give it to people who will charge more than they do now.

Mr. JONES, of Texas. How can it cost 50 per cent. more? If you will read further you will see that the Postmaster-General may reject any bid if he thinks it unreasonable and can readvertise the route.

Mr. VALENTINE. I will say to my friend from Texas that a short time ago it came under my observation that a gentleman living in his State, and for aught I know in his district, bid upon a star route in that State, and he being the lowest bidder, the contract was awarded to him; but when he came to put on his service he found that he could not carry the mails for the amount of his bid, so the route was left without service, the next bidder upon the list refusing to take it, and the Department had to do as you say they can do under this bill—readvertise. They did readvertise that service, and it stands readvertised to-day; and the mail is most irregularly carried. That is the condition of affairs in my friend's State, and it is in my own State, and all over the West. Now if you enact this law you will find that it will strike down the best service in all the sparsely settled portions of the country, besides increasing the cost of the whole star-route service. Under a correct administration (if that is the proper phrase) of the affairs of the office of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General the appropriations for this star-route service have been reduced from a little over $8,000,000 to a little over $5,000,000; but if you pass this law, remember what I say now, that instead of five millions, your appropriations for this purpose two years from now will be at least seven millions and a half.

Mr. JONES, of Texas. My friend, let me correct you. It is the opinion of the Post-Office Department that if the subcontractors could get the pay that the contractors now get from the Government there would be no such failures as there are at present.

Mr. VALENTINE. That is often so. I have myself spoken here more than once upon the subject of diamond-pin gentlemen who live in this city and defraud our people in the West, and I am most anxious to have legislation which will put an end to that evil.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. This bill will help to do it.

Mr. VALENTINE. I am sure that this bill, if it shall become a law, will not only fail to accomplish that result, but will strike down the most valuable and efficient portion of the service in my State and in all that part of the country.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MONEY. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT].

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I regret that there is not more time for the discussion of this bill, although its provisions are simple and easily understood. In my own section, which, I take it, illustrates the condition of things in many other sections of the country if not in the entire region where the star-route service prevails, there is an abandonment of the service in various routes. The contractor sublets to this or that person at a rate which turns out to be unremunerative, and the subcontractor abandons the route. Then comes a complaint, and then a letter to the contractor, and the service is put on again until another man experiments with it and abandons it in the same way. That is quite a common result in the star-route service in my own section of the country, and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] says it is the same in his State, and my information from other gentlemen representing districts in which this star-route service exists is to the same general effect.

Now, sir, I have come to the conclusion that the parties here in Washington whose entire time is devoted to this star-route mail business conduct it in this way: They get together and take a block of, say, five hundred contracts; they know nothing about the routes, but they bid upon them at a certain rate, with the idea that, on the whole, in the final summing up, they will make a profit, and I presume they generally do. The result is, that where the route is remunerative the contractor sublets it to some one at a rate at which, perhaps, the service can be performed at a profit; but on another route, where the contract does not pay, it is sublet perhaps to some ignorant person, who undertakes to do the work and fails, so that the result is the embarrassment to which I have referred.

Now, where these routes have practically been let too low, as every person acquainted with the facts knows—have been let at rates for which the service can not be properly performed—can there be objection to increasing the cost of the service in the reasonable way now proposed?

My attention has been called to these very difficulties by the Post-Office Department, which has had a great deal of trouble in this way, the time of its employés being constantly taken up in efforts to enforce the service. After long consideration officers of that Department have informed me that the only way which has occurred to them of meeting the difficulty is by such a provision as is contained in this bill, requiring the sureties to be approved by the postmaster at a post-office upon or contiguous to the route to which the proposals relate.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. One minute remains of the time in opposition to the bill and two minutes of the time in its favor. [A pause.] No gentleman rises to claim the time in opposition.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized to speak in favor of the bill for two minutes.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to correct the apprehension entertained by my friend from Nebraska [Mr. VALENTINE] that this bill, if passed, may in its operation break up some of the star routes. I beg to assure him it is impossible that under this bill or any other the star service should be stopped on a single route. The only question is whether we shall make that service more efficient. Under this bill it certainly will be made more efficient, more honest, more satisfactory to the people and to the Department; and while I admit that the cost may be about 5 per cent. additional for a year or two, yet in a very short time, before the next regular contracts are let, the whole thing will in my opinion correct itself, and the service will be as cheap as it ever was.

What we desire most of all is to have a good service, a service with which the people will be satisfied. There are now pending in various parts of the country lawsuits brought by subcontractors who have not been paid. Great "rings" are systematically organized to contract for this service throughout the whole country; and it is frequently the case—I will not say how often—that upon the last quarter these contractors entirely fail to pay their subcontractors.

In my opinion there has not been presented to this House for a long time a measure better calculated to correct abuses in the public service and promote its efficiency than that which I now ask the House to pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time allowed for debate on this motion has expired.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. MONEY to suspend the rules and pass the bill, it was determined in the affirmative—two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments disagreed to by the House to the bill (H. R. 8130) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. ALLISON, Mr. PLUMB, and Mr. RANSOM.

The message also announced that the Senate had concurred in the amendments of the House to bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. 1571) granting a pension to James McCallen; and

A bill (S. 2549) granting a pension to Isabella Higgins.

BUSINESS OF COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The next committee entitled to recognition under this call is the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. WELLBORN. By direction of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I move to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That on Tuesday, the 24th instant, the House take a recess at 6 p. m. until 8 p. m.; the evening session of said day to be devoted to such business as the Committee on Indian Affairs may designate; this order not to interfere with revenue or general appropriation bills.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the resolution be modified by adding "or bills affecting the public lands."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That modification can be made by unanimous consent. The Chair hears no objection.

The question having been taken on the motion of Mr. WELLBORN,

The SPEAKER pro tempore said: On this question the ayes are 69, the noes 36. Two-thirds not having voted in the affirmative, the resolution is not agreed to. The next committee under this call is the Committee on Territories.

Mr. PERKINS. If it is not too late, I desire to call for tellers upon agreeing to the resolution in regard to business of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks it is too late, another committee having been called.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent that the vote be taken by tellers on that question.

Several members objected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made. If the Committee on Territories has no business to present, the next committee on this call is the Committee on Railways and Canals.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I was instructed by the Committee on Railways and Canals to submit a proposition for an evening session for the consideration of bills reported from our committee; but the fate of similar resolutions from other committees has satisfied me that it would be useless for me to do so; and therefore I will not unnecessarily consume the time of the House.

ARMY MEDICAL MUSEUM BUILDING.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 48) providing for the erection of a building to contain the records of the library and museum of the Medical Department, United States Army, with the amendments reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That a brick and metal fire-proof building, to be used for the safe-keeping of the records, library, and museum of the Surgeon-General's Office of the United States Army, is hereby authorized to be constructed upon the Government reservation in the city of Washington, in the vicinity of the National Museum and the Smithsonian Institution, on a site to be selected by a commission composed of the architect of the Capitol, the secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, and the officer in charge of the State, War, and Navy Department building, and in accordance with plans and specifications submitted by the Surgeon-General of the Army and approved by said commission, the cost of the building, when completed, not to exceed the sum of $200,000; the building to be erected and the money expended under the direction and superintendence of the officer in charge of the State, War, and Navy Department building.

The amendments of the committee were read, as follows:

In section 1, line 9, after the word "the," insert the words "Secretary of War, the;" and in line 10, after the word "Capitol," insert the word "and;" also, in lines 11 and 12, strike out the words "and the officer in charge of the State, War, and Navy Department building;" also, in lines 18 and 19, strike out "officer in charge of the State, War, and Navy Department building" and insert "Secretary of War."

Also insert the following new section:

SEC. 2. That the sum of $200,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the commencement and completion of said building.

Several MEMBERS. Read the report.

The report was read, as follows:

Mr. STOCKSLAGER, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 48) providing for the erection of a building to contain the records of the library and museum of the Medical Department, United States Army, submit the following report:

The building now used by the Medical Department for a library and museum, situated on Tenth street, between E and F streets northwest, is not only too small to contain the records of the library and museum, but is unsubstantial and exposed to destruction by fire. The records are very valuable, and if destroyed many of them could not be replaced.

The late Surg. Gen. J. K. Barnes, in a letter to the Secretary of War, December 7, 1881, made the following statement:

"It is difficult to form an estimate of the value of the Government property collected in this building. The money value of the portion of it which could be replaced by money can not be less than $250,000; but much of it could never be replaced, either by time or money. Thus, there are filed in the record and pension divisions over 16,000 bound volumes of hospital records, together with a great quantity of papers embracing the original records of the hospitals of our armies during the civil war. Aside from their historical value these records are daily searched for evidence needed in the settlement of large numbers of pension and other claims, to the protection of the Government against attempted frauds as well as to the advantage of honest claimants; should they unfortunately be destroyed, these records could not be replaced.

"The collections of books and specimens constituting the Army Medical Museum and Library are also of national importance. The library now contains about 51,500 volumes and 57,000 pamphlets relating to medicine, surgery, and allied topics. A considerable part of them were gifts or were obtained by exchange, or purchased in Europe under peculiarly favorable circumstances; so that if destroyed this collection could not probably be replaced except at a great advance on its actual cost. The collections of the Army Medical Museum consist of 22,000 specimens, and are unique in the completeness with which both military surgery and the diseases of armies are illustrated. Their destruction would be an irreparable loss, not only to the United States, but to the world."

The collections of books and specimens, which has been largely increased since the above was written, is of great interest to the members of the medical profession, and medical societies from nearly every State in the Union have called the attention of Congress, by petitions and memorials, to the necessity of providing a building where these records would be secure.

In view of these facts, your committee recommend the adoption of the accompanying bill as amended.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I ask for a second on the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I ask that by unanimous consent the second be considered as having been ordered.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. The time of the reading of the report ought to be taken out of the half hour allowed for debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Four minutes were occupied by the reading of the report, which will be taken out of the time allowed in advocacy of the bill.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I did not call for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thought it was called for by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. No; the report was read at the request of other gentlemen upon the floor. I did not care anything about it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized and will proceed.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. What has become of the question of seconding the motion to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman object to the second being ordered by unanimous consent?

Mr. REAGAN. I do.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair appoints Mr. STOCKSLAGER and Mr. THOMPSON as tellers.

The question is on seconding the motion to suspend the rules.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 127, noes 17.

Mr. BLAND. No quorum. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 31, noes 115.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the point will be withdrawn about a quorum not having voted, so we may get through with this measure and take up another.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Missouri insist on his point of no quorum?

Mr. BLAND. I withdraw it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. So there is a second of the motion to suspend the rules. Does the gentleman from Indiana wish to be heard?

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. Not unless some one wishes to say something on the other side.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I do.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I would gladly answer any question which may be propounded to me.

Mr. THOMPSON. Then I wish to ask the gentleman why this has been separated from the general library bill, and why it is they seek to put up a separate building for a library relating to the Medical Museum? Why is it that the volumes he speaks of can not be taken care of in that general library bill now pending before Congress? Are we to establish a separate library for each Department of the Government, or are we to establish one general library in which all these books can be taken care of?

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. It will be a sufficient answer to my friend, so far as I am concerned as chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to say that the general library bill comes from a different committee, and we have nothing to do with it. And as an additional answer, I would say that there is no such similarity between this museum of anatomical and other specimens and this library as would make it proper to put it in either of the plans suggested by my friend.

Mr. SPRINGER. This concerns the pension records.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no connection whatever between the two.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. A large part of these are hospital records—the records of hospitals during the war—some 20,000 volumes.

Mr. SPRINGER. In manuscript.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. Yes, sir; in manuscript. Then there is a medical museum the most complete in the world, the result of a great war, and which is now kept in the old Ford theatre building, a building totally inadequate to its safe-keeping, a mere tinder-box, surrounded by wooden buildings and liable to be destroyed by fire at any time.

I visited it a short time ago in company with the Surgeon-General, and found the building in an absolutely dangerous condition. The building was originally put up under contract in ninety days, and was very badly constructed. The east wall is more than twelve inches out of plumb. The southwest corner of the building has given away until there is a great crack in the wall, and the officers in charge have been prohibited from putting heavy articles in the upper story for fear of pressing out the west wall. It is indeed in a tumble-down condition.

Mr. THOMPSON. Are not the hospital records which the gentleman speaks of a part of the pension files, and can they not be cared for in the new pension building?

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I suppose that could be done if the office of the Surgeon-General of the Army were under the Pension Bureau and there was room for them, but instead of that he is an officer of the Army and attached to the War Department.

Mr. HUNT. This surgical and medical museum and the vast collection of medical and surgical books are very precious to science in this country.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. They are of the greatest value, and if lost could not be replaced. Surgeon-General Barnes, referring to their value, says:

It is difficult to form an estimate of the value of the Government property collected in this building. The money value of the portion of it which could be replaced by money can not be less than $250,000; but much of it could never be replaced, either by time or money. Thus, there are filed in the record and pension division over 16,000 bound volumes of hospital records, together with a great quantity of papers embracing the original records of the hospitals of our armies during the civil war. Aside from their historical value these records are daily searched for evidence needed in the settlement of large numbers of pension and other claims, to the protection of the Government against attempted frauds as well as to the advantage of honest claimants; should they unfortunately be destroyed, these records could not be replaced.

The same might be said of the specimens, which are the result of a great war, such as we all hope we may never again have.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. Certainly.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I understand that this building is not only for the storage of the records of this medical museum, but also for the museum itself, its anatomical specimens, books, instruments, &c.?

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. Yes, sir; all of them. There is in the present building a vast collection of anatomical and other specimens, and they are of immense value and importance. There are petitions from the medical profession all over the country petitioning Congress to preserve these records and specimens. They come from every State and important city in the Union. I have before me a list of them, which I will ask permission to print with my remarks in the RECORD.

MEMORIAL.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The undersigned, a committee appointed by the American Medical Association for that purpose, respectfully invite the attention of your honorable bodies to the urgent need of prompt action to secure the preservation and full benefits of the Army Medical Museum and Library at Washington.

These collections, already the largest and most valuable of their kind in the world, are of the greatest importance, not only to the physicians of this country, but to all whose welfare and lives depend upon medical skill; and hence, what we ask is emphatically for the general good. The medical profession of this country for whom we speak desire the following:

I. That the necessary authority, with a sufficient appropriation for the purpose, be at once granted by Congress for the erection of a fire-proof building of ample dimensions to contain the present museum and library and to permit of their large increase.

II. That the library and museum be kept together under the present excellent management.

III. That the annual appropriation for the library be increased to $10,000, in order that the physicians of the country may be sure of finding in it every new medical work, in every language, as soon as it appears.

IV. That independent of this appropriation for the library, not less than $5,000 per annum be granted for the care and improvement of the museum.

V. That the necessary authority be given for the completion of the index catalogue of the library, a part of which has been already published, and that the Public Printer be authorized and directed to print a sufficient number of copies of all or any volumes of this work needed to supply the wants of those who desire to purchase.

We append to this memorial copies of the action of the American Medical Association on this matter, with other documents, setting forth in detail the reasons for this request.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

AUSTIN FLINT, M. D.,
Of New York, N. Y.,
President of the American Medical Association, Chairman.
S. D. GROSS, M. D., LL. D.,
Of Philadelphia, Pa.
D. W. YANDELL, M. D.,
of Louisville, Ky.
T. G. RICHARDSON, M. D.,
Of New Orleans, La.
H. F. CAMPBELL, M. D.,
Of Augusta, Ga.

The erection of this building is recommended by the President of the United States in his message.

I desire also to lay before the House a letter from Dr. Murray, the present Surgeon-General, which is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 28, 1883.

MY DEAR SIR: I have the honor to forward to you, as chairman of the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, the inclosed printed document relative to a proposed new fire-proof building for the Army Medical Museum and Library of the Surgeon-General's Office.

The imperative need of such a building is thoroughly set forth in the pamphlet which I respectfully ask that you will read and give the subject your personal care and attention, believing that you will be convinced of the pressing necessity of placing in security these collections, probably the most valuable of the kind in the world.

I may also state that the proposed building will furnish room for the accommodation of the records and clerks of the pension division of the office and will thereby relieve the Government of considerable expense for rental.

It will afford me much pleasure to give you any additional information you may require on the subject which may be in my power.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. MURRAY,
Surgeon-General United States Army.

Hon. S. M. STOCKSLAGER,
House of Representatives.

Mr. VAN ALSTYNE. And is petitioned for by resolutions passed by the medical colleges, State associations, and county societies throughout the country.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will my colleague on the committee allow me a moment to have read in this connection a short extract from an eminent British authority as to the importance and value of this collection?

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In whose time is it to be read?

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. It must be in the time of the gentleman from Kentucky, I presume, as he still holds the floor.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. How much time is there remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Eleven minutes on either side.

Mr. THOMPSON. That is fully as much as I expect to use, I will say to the Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the extract to which the gentleman refers.

The Clerk read as follows:

I do not think that any other point to which I might call attention would justify me in repeating an account of details which would present but slight variation; and the only other incident of which I may speak was my visit to Washington, where I had the privilege, with the help of the Surgeon-General of the United States Army, of seing one of the most wonderful medical institutions in the world. Of course I allude to that immense library, formed but always forming, at Washington, and one of the results of which comes before us in that colossal catalogue, which is one of the best proofs of the advancing civilization of the great Republic. You are all familiar enough with the Index Medicus, the work of Dr. Billings and his assistants, and any one familiar with the business of cataloguing must know what labor that represents; but if you could see the library itself, your impressions of the undertaking would be immensely increased. The building in which it is situated is the old theatre, hallowed by the occurrence in it of one of the most dramatic incidents of modern times—the assassination of Abraham Lincoln. [From American Notes, by Lawson Tait, F. R. C. S., chairman of the clinical section, read before the Birmingham Medical Society, October 31, 1880.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands the gentleman from Kentucky to have this read in his time.

Mr. HOPKINS. In the time of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. THOMPSON. If I understand correctly the gentleman from Indiana yielded to his colleague to have it read, and it must be taken out of his time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the Chair had recognized the gentleman from Kentucky, who is on the floor.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I have no objection to its coming out of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will then be deducted from the time of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. May I ask the Chair how much time I have remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has eight minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I will reserve that.

Mr. THOMPSON. I yield now five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTER].

Mr. POTTER. Mr. Speaker, I confess I have the gravest doubts as to the propriety of this project. I think it will end in a national library of medicine, a national collection of medical specimens, and finally in a national college of medicine here at the capital. It seems to me that if we are to do this we may just as well enter upon any other and all other branches of science, and erect buildings for them, and establish libraries and gather specimens for them as national matters.

Now we have the finest medical colleges in our States perhaps in the world. There is one at Philadelphia, near where the Declaration of Independence was made and promulgated, and I have no doubt they will be glad to take and preserve all these specimens where they will be open to the inspection of medical scientists and students for all time to come. Our own library which we are to build up I trust at no remote day, our national Library, would be made all the richer by providing proper space in which these books may be placed. That disposition of them will save to the nation not only this $200,000, but will prevent establishing a precedent the end of which I do not think any man can foresee.

It will do more than that, sir; this library and museum will end at last in a staff of officers to take care of it and at the national expense, and an annual appropriation will be demanded to support and continue it forever. I am one of those who believe the whole subject of education, except as to the local education of the people of this District, belongs to and will be best guarded, forwarded, and perfected to its great end by the States through their rivalry and competition in the pursuit of knowledge and science; but I do not see that the General Government should enter upon that field. I do not believe that we are to gain by preserving the relics and bones or wounds caused by the war at any one place in our capital. I wish they were all buried and covered all over with green grass and hidden from sight forever.

Mr. THOMPSON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. NUTTING].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That will leave the gentleman from Kentucky just one minute. The gentleman has now six minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. THOMPSON. Then I will yield the gentleman half of that time, or three minutes.

Mr. NUTTING. I desire to say I am not favorable to the passage of this bill under the circumstances. This Congress, through one of the committees of the House, and through the Senate, the co-ordinate branch of Congress, is asked to pass a bill which would erect a library building that would be all that is necessary for the books that are now sought to be preserved by the building contemplated in this bill. One-fifteenth of the money sought to erect the library building by the bill now on our Calendar is asked to be appropriated for this building.

If you are going to appropriate money for libraries all over the city for each separate class, you are commencing, in my opinion, at the wrong end. If you will erect the library building, for which a bill has passed through the Senate, it will give capacity for all of the books now sought to be preserved. If there is any danger from conflagration as far as the specimens now preserved in alcohol are concerned, that is an argument against the building you propose to erect.

The building which is sought to be erected by the bill which has passed the Senate for a library will be sufficient for all the books in this library and will be for the next fifty years.

We have a Library of Congress which now contains more than 500,000 volumes and is of immense value. Although only $3,000,000 are asked for the building for that library, it has been impossible for us to get up the bill in this House or to get consideration for it. If you want to erect a building for each separate individual library or each separate individual subject, then you will never erect such a library building as this Government ought to erect. The Library which the United States has under this roof at this time is in danger of being destroyed at any time. It is a shame and disgrace to this Government that it should have such a mass of books of such value and of such a representative character as far as the Government is concerned and yet do nothing toward their preservation.

I say if this bill is passed it is a direct blow at a library building such as this Government ought to build. If you authorize the construction of this building for the purposes of this act, then in a little time you will have another little library seeking to be accommodated with a separate building somewhere else, and so on, till you have separate buildings for a number of little libraries, whereas you ought to have one grand building, which should contain all the books of the Government, and should be a representative building that would be an object of pride to our whole nation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMPSON] has three minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. THOMPSON. The only reason I have for opposing this bill grows out of the fact that I see no necessity for it, and that I have heard no sufficient reason assigned for it by any of the gentlemen who advocate this measure.

The only reason given us for putting up this building is that there are belonging to the Surgeon-General's Department 52,000 volumes of important records, hospital records, &c. Now, these records, if they belong to the Surgeon-General's Office, do not properly belong to any library, but constitute part of the records of the War Department, of which the Surgeon-General's Office is merely one branch. And we are not told, nor has any gentleman undertaken to say, that the new War, State, and Navy Department building, when completed, will not furnish ample resources for the accommodation of the records we have.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. With the gentleman's permission I will state——

Mr. THOMPSON. I have but three minutes, and have not time to yield.

Furthermore, we have now in process of construction in this city what is known as the new Pension building, which covers acres of ground; and we are not told why these records which relate indirectly to the Pension Office can not be well taken care of in that enormous building which we are now constructing.

As far as the Medical Museum is concerned, I think we have ample means of accommodating everything which relates to that museum in the Smithsonian Institution.

We have further pending before this House a bill which has passed the Senate to construct a library building which will hold all the books the Government has. It seems to me one building is enough. We should deal with this matter not in detail for each separate Department of the Government, but we should deal with it as a single question, and construct one building sufficient to hold all the libraries and museums we need. Therefore I am opposed to the expenditure of this sum of money, because I believe it absolutely unnecessary.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time allowed in opposition to the bill has expired.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LYMAN].

Mr. LYMAN. Medicine and surgery have done something to cure disease and to lengthen human life. They have done more to lessen suffering. They have done most of all to prevent disease. Most of the progress in these arts has been made during the last half century, and the next fifty years promise a great advance. All over the civilized world there are great establishments where men of talent devote their lives to the study of disease. These men have grappled with the general plagues that decimate our race—consumption, small-pox, diphtheria, cholera, and the typhoid, scarlet, and yellow fevers. They seek to know their intimate nature and to provide prevention and cure. There is no subject more baffling, and yet it is yielding to study. Already they have rendered it highly probable that these plagues are caused by the fertilization of microscopic germs within the body; so that these diseases are a death-struggle between man and a parasitic fungus. But already we discern a hope that these germs may be used for inoculation and may protect us from such diseases, just as vaccination protects against small-pox.

These profound studies, so essential to the welfare of our people, are carried on under the fostering care of our National Medical Museum, whose library, now the first in the world, and whose not less admirable collection of military pathology are placed at the disposal of all investigators. If our Fish Commission, Signal Service, and our national surveys are worth preserving, then has the Medical Museum a double claim on our fostering care.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I now yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me proper that this building should be erected. I think the purpose in view in erecting this building has no connection whatever with the public Library. It seems to me that the collection made by the Medical Corps of the Army is a valuable one and worthy of special consideration. I am so assured by gentlemen who are familiar with the subject, and I think that this collection ought to be preserved. The building that it is in now is said not to be safe. We are assured that the collection is exposed to peril of destruction by fire. It is known that when the State, War, and Navy Department building is completed the entire space will be required by other branches of the service. We are assured that it will be impossible to set apart in that building any space for the Medical Museum. A new building seems indispensable; therefore it seems to me that under all the circumstances it is better that a building of sufficient dimensions, safe from fire, should be erected for the preservation of this valuable collection. I have entertained that view during the present session; I had, indeed, reached this conclusion during the last session.

I am not inclined to favor the appropriation of unreasonable or extravagant sums of money for the erection of public buildings, and I have been influenced in favor of this measure not only by the apparent necessity for it and the generally expressed wish of the medical fraternity throughout the entire country that this collection be secured against peril, but also by the fact that the amount proposed to be expended and the manner of its expenditure indicate that the object is to secure a proper and useful building for a necessary and important public purpose, and not the mere expenditure of public money for purposes of expenditure and embellishment without reference to public interest or necessity. For these reasons, sir, I cheerfully support this measure and hope the bill will pass.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOLLETT].

Mr. FOLLETT. Mr. Speaker, the most magnificent medical museum and library in the world belongs to the Medical Department of our Army, and is to-day exposed in a building where no private individual owning such a library would permit it to remain for twenty-four hours. It has accumulated through the efforts of the medical fraternity of the United States and has cost the Government comparatively nothing.

In the museum department there are illustrations of the effects of gunshot wounds and injuries received in battle such as medical students and the medical profession can have access to in no other way. That museum and library should be kept by itself, and should be kept in a building where it would not be exposed to danger by reason of its surroundings. To the medical faternity of the United States it has been for years, and is now, an object of special solicitude that this property should be put in such a position as not to be constantly exposed to the danger of being lost or destroyed. The building in which it is now located has already begun to tumble to the ground. The rear wall is more than twelve inches out of plumb, and, as I said before, no private individual would think of leaving such property in such a building for any length of time.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That exhausts the gentleman's time.

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I thought I had another minute remaining to yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG].

Mr. SLOCUM. Mr. Speaker, my attention was directed to the importance of this proposed building by a visit to the building where these manuscripts and books and specimens are now kept; and I do not believe there is a gentleman on this floor who would hesitate to vote for this bill after going there and seeing for himself the value of the contents of that building and the danger to which they are now exposed. No army has had a more intelligent body of medical gentleman connected with it than had our Army during the late war. The history of every case has been most carefully preserved, accompanied with specimens of the wounds inflicted, &c. These valuable and scientific records are now in danger. Should the building in which they are preserved be destroyed to-night there is no amount of money that could replace the records stored there, for they are invaluable. I believe that if this question were left to the decision of the brightest and most intelligent medical gentlemen of this country, there would be a unanimous vote in favor of the proposition.

Mr. LONG. My colleague [Mr. LYMAN] has treated this question from a scientific view, as he is amply qualified to do. Had he been allowed time to proceed further, as I wish he had, I am sure he would have treated it also from the practical side. We are constantly told that we ought to look at these matters as men look at their own private affairs, that we ought to deal with the interests of the Government as we would with our own. Now, what would be the course of any sensible man situated as the Government is with regard to this property? If a man of ample means had a most valuable library, if the building containing that library were tumbling down and the library exposed to danger of destruction, he would certainly prepare a new building. He would not move that library upon his neighbor's property, as the gentleman from New York suggests that the Government might carry this library to Philadelphia; nor if he were building a new stable, would he transfer the library there, as the gentleman from Kentucky has suggested this collection of the Government should be carried to the Pension building.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time allowed for debate on this motion is exhausted.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. STOCKSLAGER to suspend the rules and pass the bill as amended, it was agreed to; there being—ayes 181, noes 23 (two-thirds voting in the affirmative).

Mr. STOCKSLAGER. I ask unanimous consent that the title of the bill just passed be amended so as to read: "A bill providing for the erection of a building to contain the records, library, and museum of the Medical Department, United States Army."

There being no objection, the title of the bill was amended accordingly.

SALES FOR TAXES IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. FOLLETT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8236) relating to sales for taxes in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

MARY J. DICKSON.

Mr. SMITH, of Iowa, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8237) granting a pension to Mary J. Dickson; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

UNITED STATES ARSENAL AT INDIANAPOLIS.

Mr. ENGLISH, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8238) to authorize the donation of the United States arsenal building and grounds located at Indianapolis, Ind., to the State of Indiana, to be used as a State university; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

GRADUATES OF MILITARY ACADEMY.

Mr. SLOCUM, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8165) authorizing the attachment to the Army, as additional lieutenants, of graduates of the Military Academy in cases where no vacancy exists; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ASSISTANT CHIEF SIGNAL OFFICER.

Mr. SLOCUM, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, also reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 7817) to create the office of assistant chief signal officer, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. BLAND. I move that the House now adjourn.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. SNYDER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

A bill (S. 2549) granting a pension to Isabella Higgins;

A bill (S. 1571) granting a pension to James McCallen; and

A bill (S. 2547) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Frances L. Thomas, widow of Maj. Gen. George H. Thomas.

COMMITTEE APPOINTMENT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore announced the appointment of Mr. NUTTING as a member of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Mr. CHACE.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for the remainder of to-day's session on account of sickness.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] that the House adjourn.

Mr. BLAND. I yield a moment to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the House now take a recess until half past 7 o'clock this evening for the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill only in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KEIFER. I understand that the Committee on Appropriations will have a meeting to-night.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think it will only require half an hour to complete the consideration of this bill in Committee of the Whole.

Several MEMBERS. Go on with it now.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, I will withdraw my former request and will ask the House to go into Committee of the Whole now for the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana asks that the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. Is there objection?

Mr. O'HARA. I object.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the House to take a recess now until half past 7 this evening, for the purpose of proceeding with the further consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. O'HARA. I object.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Is it not competent for the House on motion, by a majority vote, to take a recess until half past 7 o'clock this evening?

Mr. HOLMAN. It would still be suspension day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It would be, but it would be still suspension day at the request of committees. The Chair would have to continue the call of committees for that purpose.

Mr. WILLIS. I think the House will allow a statement from the committee.

Mr. BLAND. I move the House adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 125, noes 39.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before the announcement is made I hope the gentleman from North Carolina will withdraw his objection to the House taking a recess until half past 7 o'clock this evening. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. WILLIS. I ask unanimous consent to make a brief statement. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. SPRINGER. I demand tellers on the motion to adjourn.

Tellers were refused. So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

He desires leave to withdraw the original petition, leaving a copy thereof on the files of the Senate. It is a letter in the nature of a petition making that request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Mr. MANDERSON. The publication of this report was recommended by the Committee on Territories, and the cost of the entire edition will be quite small.

The resolution was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia moves that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2621) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Great Kanawha River below the falls, and to prescribe the dimensions of the same. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WEHRLE, WERK & SON.

Mr. ALLISON. Regular order.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the Senator from Iowa will allow me to call up a short bill reported from the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ALLISON. If it does not lead to debate I shall not object to it.

Mr. SHERMAN. If it leads to debate I shall not press it. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7496) for the relief of Wehrle, Werk & Son.

Mr. FRYE. Let the bill be read.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to it if it will take no time.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think there will be no objection to it.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair). The bill will be read for information.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to abate internal-revenue taxes to the amount of $461.87 illegally assessed against Wehrle, Werk & Son in the year 1876, for spirits distilled in the year 1875.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Ohio to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. No; the Senator from Ohio asks for unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood that he moved to take up the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think there will be any objection to the bill. It was unanimously reported from the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not desire to have the pending order displaced by a bill taken up on motion.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not desire to do that. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object if it will not lead to debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No objection being made, the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VENEZUELAN AWARDS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the regular order.

Mr. LAPHAM. I move to take up at this time the joint resolution (S. R. 111) referring the controversy between the United States and Venezuela in respect to the awards of the mixed commission to the President.

Mr. ALLISON. I call for the regular order.

Mr. LAPHAM. I suppose my motion is in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the motion of the Senator from New York is in order.

Mr. LAPHAM. This is an important matter. It is the unanimous report of the committee——

Mr. ALLISON. No debate is in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No debate is in order on the motion. The Senator from New York moves to take up the joint resolution indicated by him.

The motion was not agreed to.

DES MOINES RIVER LANDS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order, being the bill (S. 1886) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes, is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The pending question is on the motion to indefinitely postpone the bill, made by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. Is the Senate ready for the question? Senators in favor of the motion will say "ay." Those opposed will say "no." The "noes" appear to have it. The "noes" have it.

Mr. LAPHAM. I have the floor upon that motion, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair waited some time and heard no one address the Chair.

Mr. LAPHAM. I was under a misapprehension as to the question. I have not concluded the remarks I have been making.

Mr. FRYE. Is the motion to indefinitely postpone disposed of?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that in such matters it is usual to extend a good deal of indulgence. The Senator from New York claims that he had the floor. The present occupant of the chair did not notice it. If there be no objection, the Chair will treat the motion as not having been voted on, and give the Senator from New York the floor. There is no objection. The motion to indefinitely postpone is still before the Senate, and the Senator from New York has the floor.

Mr. CONGER. When the bill was last before the Senate the Senator from New York had the floor until the time when he was stopped under the rules, and he had it this morning, and I do not know at what time the motion to indefinitely postpone could have been made without taking him from the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not know that the Senator from New York was claiming the floor. The pending question on the bill was the motion of the Senator from Alabama to indefinitely postpone. Waiting a few seconds, the Chair put that question. Then the Senator from New York said that he claimed the floor all the while, and by unanimous consent the vote to indefinitely postpone the bill is treated as a nullity. The question is still before the Senate, and the Senator from New York has the floor.

Mr. LAPHAM. Mr. President, when I was taken from the floor at the expiration of the morning hour on Saturday last, I was engaged in presenting to the Senate the reason assigned by Mr. Parsons, of Iowa, why this legislation should not be allowed. For the purpose of continuing what he has said on this subject, I will read the rest of his communication. He says:

I know of no reputable lawyer who has ever advised them—

That is the settlers—

that there has been at any time since what is known as the Wolcott decision any hope for them so far as the title to the land is concerned, except through a reconsideration by the Supreme Court of the principles of that decision. I tried in the Reilly case to procure such reconsideration. It was submitted upon my part upon a very elaborate printed argument, in which every question that has since been made by anybody was fully discussed.

Every item of evidence that has since been given in any case as to the general title to these lands is found in the printed record in that case. I had hopes—but never very strong—that the Supreme Court, in view of the great magnitude of the interests involved, and the extreme hardship of the lot of those who had purchased and improved these lands and made homes upon them, would reconsider that decision. I urged this, as my argument shows, if not ably certainly very earnestly, but the court declined to re-examine the principles of that decision, which is certainly an end of all controversy as to the title to the lands if it is possible for the highest judicial tribunal of the country to end it. I regret exceedingly that the settlers upon these lands, for whom I have done a great deal, and have tried to do more, are flattering themselves with a hope which is doomed to certain disappointment. They are throwing away their contributions not on a doubtful case, but in one which is absolutely certain, in which the decision is already against them, and in which nothing that they or Congress can do can ever change.

The relief that they can get is to be had under the occupying claimants law, unless Congress (which in my judgment is, and always has been, extremely improbable) shall make a grant of lands or money for their indemnity. The former—

That is the grant of lands—

at one time might have been obtained; that is while the lands in the northwestern part of the State were unappropriated. While in the Legislature I procured the passage of a joint resolution asking Congress to make a grant of lands for their indemnity.

And here I beg to call attention to that joint resolution and see what proposition it was. The joint resolution passed by the Legislature of Iowa was in these words:

Joint resolution asking a grant to indemnify settlers upon the Des Moines River lands.

Be it resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Iowa, That our Senators in Congress be instructed, and our Representatives requested, to use their influence to procure from Congress a grant of lands to the State of Iowa, to be used by said State to indemnify such persons as have purchased of the United States or pre-empted any of the odd sections lying along the Des Moines River, and whose titles have since been held invalid on account of the grants by Congress to the State of Iowa, of August 8, 1846, and the acts in extension thereof.

Resolved, That the secretary of state be directed to send a copy of these resolutions to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Approved April 12, 1870.

Mr. Parsons continues:

I thought it was useless to ask for money. I still think so. I prepared and procured the passage of an act providing for the distribution of a grant in case one should be made (Laws of 1870, p. 107). I also introduced and procured the passage of an act bringing them within the occupying claimants law.

To that law presently I shall have occasion to refer.

I wish you would read these acts. At that time there was enough unappropriated land in the northwestern part of the State to have fully indemnified every one of these settlers. When I went home I found—

I ask the attention of the Senate to this.

When I went home I found that certain persons had told them—that all of these things were a cheat, a piece of demagogism, if not an effort to get them off the lands. A feeling of opposition to accepting the grant was in this way got up, and, of course, it was wholly useless to make an effort to procure one. I think at that time had an effort been made Congress would have made the grant, and there is just as little doubt the river company and its grantees would gladly have taken the lands in exchange for those occupied by the settlers, and the whole matter would have been ended years ago. But as a cry was got up against the plan (the only feasible one in my judgment that has ever been proposed) nothing was done, and at the next session of Congress the lands which my bill contemplated were granted to the Des Moines Valley Railroad by an act confirming what is known as the Harvey settlement.

These settlers never have had, and never will have, a better friend than I have been to them. I have considered their fortune a very hard one, with many of them extremely so, but all intelligent men know that the powers of Congress are not without limits, and most intelligent men know that private rights judicially established are outside of those limits with entire indifference to the question whether the party in whose favor the decision is made is entitled to our praises or should receive our curses. Courts as well as juries will deal liberally with these men under the occupying claimants law. Whatever is promised them beyond that in my judgment is the promise of a demagogue and an impostor.

Truly yours,

GALUSHA PARSONS.

Mr. President, I have shown by these communications that when Mr. Wright was a member of this body and an appeal was made to him to aid in this scheme, he flatly refused to do it, on the ground that it could by no possibility result in any advantage to these settlers upon the Des Moines lands. I have shown that Governor Carpenter took the same ground and discouraged any effort of this kind, and I have shown that Mr. Parsons, in the letter I have just read, occupied the same position.

They have in Iowa what is known as an occupying claimants law, to which Mr. Parsons refers in this letter. That law, which was first enacted in 1866, provides this:

Where an occupant of land has the color of title thereto, and in good faith has made any valuable improvements thereon, and is afterward, in the proper action, found not to be the rightful owner thereof, no execution shall issue to put the plaintiff in possession of the property, after the filing of the petition hereinafter mentioned, until the provisions of this chapter have been complied with.

That law provides that the unsuccessful defendant may present his petition to the court and have a jury impaneled to try the question of the value of the improvements, and that, unless paid forthwith by the owner, he may enter judgment for the amount found by the jury, and that judgment is a lien upon the land and the land may be sold to satisfy it. By a subsequent act of the Legislature of Iowa, procured by Mr. Parsons himself, the provisions of this law are applied to all the occupants of the Des Moines River lands. So that every one of these settlers now has a right, in case judgment is found against him upon the question of title, to go into the courts of Iowa and have the value of the improvements decided and to take that out of the land, unless the owner of the fee pays it. This, Mr. Parsons says in his letter, is the only remaining resource of the settlers now to get compensation.

Instead of taking this advice of Mr. Parsons and of Senator Wright and of Governor Carpenter, what did these settlers do? They formed what is called the settlers' union, a combination to resist the assertion of the title of the true owners of this property. I wish I had time to refer to the multitude of evidence I have in my possession as to the character of this organization, as to its aims, as to its acts, as to its purposes, but I have not time to do it. I can only refer briefly to one communication made by a responsible man, on the 21st of December, 1883, to Mr. C. D. Culver, one of the owners of the Des Moines River lands, and one of the remonstrants to whom I referred on Saturday. He says:

Under the influence of these men and their incendiary doctrines they have resisted sheriffs and United States marshals repeatedly; over and over again threatened to kill owners if they could catch them on their grounds; intimidated and mobbed agents asking for money due on contracts; assaulted and driven off buyers who would not join their "settlers' union," and would pay the rightful owners; prevented others by their violent threats from completing purchases, and driven off others who had bought or rented by cutting their wire fences, cutting up or trampling down their corn or other growing crops, maiming their cattle, and even resorting to burning their buildings.

This is the character of the men in whose behalf this extraordinary legislation is invoked. I said on Saturday that they were as bad as the anti-renters of New York. I am satisfied they are worse than the anti-renters of New York. They have less excuse than those men had in the piratical course which they are pursuing.

So that—

This letter continues—

this settlers' union has been a curse to at least five counties, retarding and even killing improvements, accustoming the people to ideas of lawlessness and violence, destroying what civilization they had, and reducing them to semi-barbarism. Industry, thrift, and law-abiding lives are not their favorite means or methods.

The union is a perfect blight upon their lives, for, instead of encouraging them to labor and earn a home for themselves, it promises them each a farm on these river lands by act of Congress; meanwhile they are encouraged to take and keep possession, if necessary, by violence. The consequence is that the courts are filled with litigation; suits are multiplied, and these lands are actually swarming with defying squatters and repudiating contractors, many of them living from hand to mouth under the sense of insecurity, and not even paying the taxes on the lands—a thriftless and most undesirable kind of population for any community. Whereas, if the instigators of these troubles were sent about their business by Congress, and their fraudulent bill once and for all thrown out, every acre of these lands would speedily be occupied by a quiet, industrious, and thrifty population, satisfied with their title, and rapidly assuming the usually elevated characteristics of prosperous farming communities.

This letter goes on to say that it is impossible in behalf of one of the owners of this title according to the decision of the Supreme Court to execute process and give possession. He cites a case:

On one of these a squatter settled, although the land officer at Fort Dodge expressly warned him that it was a part of the river grant.

After some years and much temporizing with him, we required him to purchase or lease it, and finally brought a suit of ejectment against him. He employed one of the best lawyers in the State to defend him, and put us to several hundred dollars of expense. But after long delay judgment was rendered in favor of our claim of title. Then he offered to purchase at a fair but moderate price, but without costs! and all on credit or deferred installments, pleading poverty, and we agreed to that. When the first, and again the second annual payments came due he still plead for indulgence, and we gave it. Finally, after repeated broken promises and delays, we threatened another suit, and then he joined the settlers' union and defied us. But never, during all these years, has he paid a dollar of taxes.

Of course we brought our ejectment again, and though he was defended again by the same excellent lawyer, we have at length got our judgment against him again at a heavy cost; but he is still there; defying us still, and intimidating through this settlers' union whoever would rent or buy of us.

* * * * * * *

In short it is a perfect reign of terror and lawlessness, and the law is practically powerless; so the lawless man remains there safe and defiant, expecting every winter that Congress will vote him his farm, being so assured by Clarke, Dawley, and Heffner, while he contributes his $10 or $20 per year; and this is a fair sample of over two hundred cases that I could name from positive knowledge.

I stated that General Martindale went upon this property and found one of these settlers in possession of one of his lots. He entered into a contract with him to sell it to him. He loaned him $150 (I repeat the statement made last week) to enable him to purchase a team and farming utensils; and then the settler joined this settlers' union and turned around and defied him, and has never paid him a farthing and never paid any taxes. Here is a letter addressed by the agent of General Martindale to Colonel Martindale, since the death of the General, dated January 23, 1884:

LEHIGH, January 23, 1884.

MR. MARTINDALE:

DEAR SIR: I have seen the marshal, and he says he must have the money to hire help to put Intermile off. There is a great deal of talk about the land, and it is bound to be a test case. There are lots of men who say if I get the land they will buy land. I think it would be a good plan for you to come and see the marshal. * * * The settlers are talking loud. When I got home from Des Moines the word was out that I had bought the land, and my house and the contents were all in ashes. My wife was gone to Duger's, and everything was burned. The house was set on fire in five different places.

* * * * * * *

Yours, truly.

This is the conduct of a man who had entered into solemn contract recognizing the title of the purchasers under the Des Moines grant, and he is prompted to do it by the settlers' union. Now a word to Senators as to the combination formed and known as the settlers' union. I have here a copy of the obligation which each member of this settlers' union has entered into, which is found in one or more of the reports of the Supreme Court in the cases which have already been decided. It is in these words:

FORT DODGE, IOWA, ——, 187-.

Sixty days after the resumption of the so-called river lands—

Mark the language—

Sixty days after the resumption of the so-called river lands, by act of Congress, as Government land, by which acts, as a bona fide settler, I may perfect my title under Government to the following lands, to wit:

The —— —— of section No. ——, township No. —— north, of range No. —— west, 5th P. M., Iowa.

I promise to pay to treasurer of settlers' union, or bearer, the sum of $——, being at the rate of $1 per acre on said tract so confirmed by Congress in me by means of resumption of the so-called Des Moines Navigation and Railroad lands. Said sum so owing by me shall be and become and remain a mortgage lien on said piece or parcel of land claimed by me until said note is paid. Also, said note is, and shall be, a special lien on any compensation or indemnity that may be granted by Congress and accepted by settlers' union or myself in lieu of said land, and be paid as soon as such compensation or indemnity is set apart for such purpose by such act, and retained out of such moneys by the settlers' union for payment of this note.

But in case the settlers' union fails to secure title as above, or compensation or indemnity, then this note is null and void.

These notes are all acknowledged before a proper officer, and the members of the settlers' union, each one of them, have entered into this obligation, and they expect, as the letter of Mr. Parsons shows, and the letter of Mr. Culver shows us, they are to get these lands by paying simply a dollar an acre. They have never paid anything to the Government. They had a right to a refund of all they paid the Government, and a large portion of them, as shown by the report of the Judiciary Committee and a letter I have from the Interior Department, accepted the return of the money, so that they are in possession of these lands, having occupied them for a period of over twenty years, without ever paying taxes or paying any sum whatever.

Mr. President, I desire to ask the advocates of this bill that they will tell the Senate what new fact there is now that was not before the Supreme Court in the cases which have been decided. I challenge the statement of any fact whatever but what is already before the courts. There are none. Mr. Parsons in his letter so states. I so state from a careful examination of the records of the Supreme Court. There are no new facts. The decisions of the Supreme Court, especially the later decisions, embrace every fact upon which by possibility any question as to this title can be said to depend. But, say the majority of Committee on Public Lands in their report, there has never been an action in which the United States was a party. Has that anything to do with the question? The grantees of the United States have been parties. The United States granted these lands, and these actions are actions in which the grantees of the Government have been parties.

I have always supposed that judgments had operated upon privies by blood and privies in estate; and it is a singular doctrine to advance here for the Government to say, "True my grantee has succeeded in establishing his title to this property; now I will lay my hand upon it and see if I can not do better than my grantee has done." I should like to know what kind of morals is involved in such a proposition as that. I should like to know the attitude of the Government of the United States in saying as they are now asked to say, "True those to whom we conveyed these land have established their title, but now we will intervene and see if we can not do something better than our grantees have done." Why, Mr. President, on the face of the proposition it is one so monstrous that it seems to me no fair-minded man can contemplate it for a moment with composure.

No head of a Department has ever recommended this legislation. The Attorney-General has never been asked to recommend or approve this legislation. There are no petitioners here in favor of this. The former occupants of seats on this floor and of the gubernatorial chair of the State of Iowa have remonstrated against it. One hundred and four settlers in that very region have remonstrated against it, and yet the Senate is asked in the morning hour to take up this important measure to the exclusion of all other business and pass this monstrous proposed law.

Why should a bill of this magnitude and of this importance be considered in the morning hour? At no period of time since I have had the honor of a seat here has the Senate consented to consider such a bill. It is a bill which ought not to be debated in the manner in which I have been compelled to debate it by piecemeal, by fractions, a quarter of an hour one morning, an hour another, and then again another installment on another morning. It is a bill which should be considered by continuous discussion. The importance of it demands it, and it is an anomaly to take up such a bill as this and consider it in the morning hour, and I trust when the time comes for a vote the motion of the honorable Senator from Alabama will prevail, as it should prevail. If it should not, then what is to follow? There are a large number of amendments to this bill which it will be necessary to propose and which necessarily will involve more or less of discussion. I desire to call attention to some of those amendments, to the end that the Senate may see what they are and what is before us if we pursue the investigation of this subject.

When this bill was before the Senate in 1879 and referred to the Committee on Public Lands, Senator McDonald, of Indiana, who was the chairman of that committee, gave notice that if the bill should be reported favorably and taken up for consideration he would move to add to the second section authorizing the Attorney-General to bring suits the following amendment:

Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall have the effect of invalidating or disturbing the titles of any bona fide purchasers from the State of Iowa, or its grantees, prior to March 2, A. D. 1861; but such titles are hereby ratified and confirmed.

That was the view taken by a distinguished member of this body as to a necessary amendment to this legislation in case the legislation should be adopted. There are, I am informed, lands to which this would relate other than those granted by the Des Moines River Navigation Company to these purchasers; but if this bill is to be pursued, that exception is one necessary for the consideration of the Senate before final action upon the measure.

Mr. President, there are two or three amendments which I shall necessarily be compelled to offer. One is to strike out of the first section of the bill the proviso declaring that the lands which are owned by those whom I now represent are public lands. I have shown the folly of such a declaration. It is misleading; it may, if this bill should become a law, be deceiving and a fallacy in the administration of the law, and therefore it should under no circumstances be allowed to remain in the bill. There is no occasion for its remaining there. It does not add at all to the authority of the Government, while it may very seriously embarrass the rights of these owners of the fee.

Then I give notice of another amendment which I shall press upon the consideration of the Senate, and which I think every Senator will see is one that ought to be made. If the Treasury of the United States is to be invoked in aid of this litigation and we succeed, we can not recover any costs of the Government. The United States is not liable for costs. This bill makes no provision that the Government shall pay costs, and therefore I shall ask that the Senate consider an amendment like this:

Before the commencement of any action, as provided in section 2 of the act, by the Attorney-General, the person or persons in whose interest and for whose benefit the same is to be prosecuted shall deposit with the clerk of the court a bond or bonds, to be approved by the court or a judge thereof as to the form and penalty of the same, conditioned to pay to the person or persons to be prosecuted all costs and expenses of the defense or defenses of such action or actions in case the plaintiff should fail to recover therein.

Without some such provision as this in the bill, the attorney of the Government, that in no event would be liable to pay costs, is permitted to take the Treasury of the United States into its hands and go into a career of litigation against the men whom the courts have so often decided are the owners in fee of this property.

Mr. President, I might continue this discussion on the facts of this case at much greater length if I were disposed to do so, but I have no desire whatever to consume the time of the Senate unnecessarily. I have endeavored to confine myself in this discussion to a fair statement of the facts upon which I think this question depends and call the attention of the Senate to the legal principles which I think are involved.

I have already said that in asking for the reading of the majority report in this case, though I was accused of a desire to consume time and to prevent action on this bill, I had no such purpose. I wanted the Senate to see and to hear the character of the report which the majority had submitted in favor of this measure. So far from being a report calculated to develop the real questions here involved as I have shown them to be, it is a report the whole object and purpose of which was to obscure and keep out of view the real questions in the case. It is a mere recital of historical facts without calling the attention of the Senate at all to the real propositions which are involved. Therefore the reading of it I thought necessary to a fair understanding of the proposition.

Mr. President, I have shown that by virtue of the several acts of Congress and the decisions of the courts of Iowa, and the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, all the lands purchased by those whom I represent passed by a valid title and the title of the United States was completely divested thereby. I have shown that every question now under consideration was before the courts when those decisions were made, and there are no new facts to form a basis for this legislation. I have shown that any attempt on the part of Congress to designate these lands or any portion of them as public lands would be an idle ceremony and constitute a disgraceful act of legislation. I have shown that a proposal to authorize the United States, having no shadow of right to any of these lands, to institute suits against the lawful owners at the expense of the Federal Treasury, if carried out would be an act of usurpation and a violation of the constitutional provisions for the protection of private property. I have shown that the settlers on these lands were at one time offered the opportunity to take substituted lands in lieu of the tracts they had severally occupied, and that, listening to bad advice or following their own evil inclinations, they spurned the offer.

I have shown that under the laws of Iowa they are entitled to the value of their improvements and can sell the land to obtain payment therefor, and they get the use of the land they have enjoyed for so many years without even having paid taxes thereon.

My appeal to the Senate is not to embark upon a scheme of folly and impropriety such as this bill proposes, not to spurn by our votes the unanimous decision of our Judiciary Committee made only four years since upon precisely the same state of law and the facts now existing, except that the Supreme Court has made two important confirmatory decisions since that report was made.

Mr. President, "good faith is a jewel," whether it be observed by individuals or by governments, and the highest obligations of good faith demand that the United States shall not lay its heavy hand upon the rights of these purchasers who were invited to make their investments by the solemn acts of the Government, which its highest tribunal has so repeatedly held divested it of all interest in or control of this property except on the conditions and for the purposes provided in the Constitution of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] to postpone the bill indefinitely.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I am paired on all questions with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HARRISON (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. VOORHEES] on this question. I therefore withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—27.

Butler,	Gibson,	Lapham,	Pendleton,
Camden,	Groome,	McMillan,	Pike,

Dolph,	Jones of Florida,	Sabin,

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. LAPHAM. I do not know whether any motion in reference to the preamble is in order at this time; but I suppose not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not in order as the Chair understands.

Mr. LAPHAM. Until after action on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. So the Chair understands.

Mr. LAPHAM. Then I move to strike out the first proviso in the bill, beginning in line 10 of section 1, as follows:

Provided, That the title of all bona fide settlers under color of title from the State of Iowa and its grantees, or the United States and its grantees, which do not come in conflict with pre-emption or homestead claimants, are hereby ratified, confirmed, and made valid.

Mr. PLUMB. I see no objection to that motion. It strikes out the provision for the title of those whom the Senator is interested in. If he wants that to go out, I have no objection.

Mr. LAPHAM. Let it go out. I have said that I do not want a declaration by Congress in our favor. I would rather have the judgment of the Supreme Court.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAPHAM. Now, I move to strike out the next proviso, beginning in line 14 of section 1; as follows:

Provided further, That the claims of all persons who, with intent, in good faith, to obtain title thereto under the pre-emption or homestead laws of the United States, entered or remained upon any tract of said land prior to January, 1880, not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres, are hereby confirmed and made valid in them, their heirs or their proper assigns; and upon due proof thereof, and payment of the usual price or fee, where the same has not been paid, shall be carried to patent.

The Senate will see that that is a declaration in this bill, as far as a law can make a declaration, that the title of these settlers shall be preferred to that of the purchasers whom I represent and whose title has been held valid by the Supreme Court of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM].

Mr. MORGAN. If that provision of the bill which the Senator from New York proposes to strike out remains, it will hardly be worth while to retain any other provision in it relating to a litigation about these titles in the courts. The Senate will have expressed in the most emphatic way possible their affirmation of the title of these parties to the land. If the title belongs to the Government of the United States and we convey it in such words as are in the bill that the Senator proposes to strike out, that closes the matter. There is nothing remaining for us to do. We need not stultify ourselves after that by going on having that title carried into a court to ascertain whether it is a good one or not. We declare that it is a title and we convey it to certain persons; we confirm it in the most solemn way. If that provision remains in the bill, let it stay there, and let the Senate then discard the rest of the bill which proposes to take that subject into court for litigation. What is the use of it?

I think that we are not acting with wisdom in this matter. Here is a subject in litigation between private claimants for this land, and the Senate of the United States comes in and makes a judicial declaration of the title and confers it upon certain persons. It has always seemed to me that that is a transgression of the provision of the Constitution of the United States, unless the title is in the Government. If we have got it, of course we can convey it; but to grant a conveyance and then go on in the next section and impeach it by saying we have not got it and will go into court to ascertain whether we have got it or not, puts the Senate in a category that I do not think is becoming.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

Mr. LAPHAM. I ask for the yeas and nays on this amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LAPHAM. Before the vote is taken I desire to say one word. It is obvious that if this proviso is to remain in the bill, covering every settler upon these lands prior to the 1st of January, 1880, after all these decisions of the Supreme Court, the second section of the bill is utterly useless, and the Government is to be put in the position by this legislation of taking authority to go into the courts and prosecute claims which it has in a prior portion of the same law declared are absolutely valid in the occupants of the land, and it is the duty of the Government to issue a patent.

I trust the Senate will not sanction any such legislation as that. If this proviso is to remain in the bill the second section ought to be stricken out. There can be no occasion for it; it would be a useless ceremony.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). I am paired on all questions relating to this bill with my colleague [Mr. VOORHEES].

Mr. WALKER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER].

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 14, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—14.

Blair,	Jones of Nevada,	Miller of N. Y.,	Sewell,
Groome,	Lapham,	Morgan,	Sherman.
Jackson,	McMillan,	Pendleton,
Jonas,	McPherson,	Pike,

Aldrich,	Conger,	Harris,	Plumb,
Allison,	Dawes,	Ingalls,	Saulsbury,

Call,	Fair,	Maxey,	Slater,
Camden,	Garland,	Mitchell,	Van Wyck,
Cameron of Wis.,	Gibson,	Morrill,	Williams,
Cockrell,	Hale,	Palmer,	Wilson.
Coke,	Hampton,	Platt,

ABSENT—31.

Bayard,	Dolph,	Hoar,	Ransom,
Bowen,	Farley,	Jones of Florida,	Riddleberger,
Brown,	Frye,	Kenna,	Sabin,

Cameron of Pa.,	Gorman,	Logan,	Vest,
Chace,	Harrison,	Mahone,	Voorhees,
Colquitt,	Hawley,	Miller of Cal.,	Walker.
Cullom,	Hill,	Pugh,

So the amendment was rejected.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the regular order, being the bill (H. R. 2550) to prohibit the importation and migration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia.

Mr. HALE. I am very desirous of having the Senate take up and pass during the day the agricultural appropriation bill. I know how anxious the Senator from New Hampshire is that this bill which has hung so long in the Senate should be disposed of, and if he thinks that by taking an hour or so he will be able to bring the matter to a head, I shall agree not to push the appropriation bill. I want to get through with it during the day, however.

Mr. BLAIR. In response to what the Senator from Maine says, I will try. That is all I can do. I hope we shall proceed with the bill.

Mr. HALE. I give the Senator notice that during the afternoon, some time before an executive session, I shall seek to call up the agricultural appropriation bill and have it passed.

Mr. BLAIR. I hope if this bill should not even then be quite disposed of, as I think it will be, the Senator meanwhile will reconsider his present resolution and let us go on and finish this bill.

Mr. HALE. I will try to get up the appropriation bill during the day.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2594) to change the name of the Manufacturers' National Bank of New York to the Manufacturers' National Bank of Brooklyn, N. Y.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7970) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. E. JOHN ELLIS of Louisiana, Mr. WILLIAM S. HOLMAN of Indiana, and Mr. THOMAS RYAN of Kansas managers at the conference on its part.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PLUMB. I desire to call up the report of the conference committee which I submitted yesterday on the bill (H. R. 8039) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes. The report is now on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas calls up the conference report on the District of Columbia appropriation bill. The report was made yesterday, the Chair understands. The question is on concurring in the report.

Mr. PLUMB. If any one desires, I can make a detailed statement of the points of difference which have been adjusted by reason of the conference. If not, I shall not take up the time of the Senate in doing so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the report.

The report was concurred in.

WINNEBAGO INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire who has charge of the pending bill to give way for a few minutes in order that the bill (S. 2592) to provide for the sale of a part of the reservation of the Winnebago tribe of Indians in the State of Nebraska, and for other purposes, may be taken up. I will state that the bill was drawn in the Interior Department, it was recommended by the Secretary of the Interior and by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs; it is favorably reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs of this body and is concurred in by the Indians and the friends of the Indians who represent them here, and also by all the members of the House of Representatives from Nebraska, in which State the reservation is situated. There will be no objection to the bill, I am satisfied, from any Senator, and it will lead to no debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to have the bill indicated by him taken up.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not understand that to be the request. It is that the pending order may be informally laid aside.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. That is the same thing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin asks that the pending order be informally laid aside for the purpose of considering the bill indicated.

Mr. BLAIR. I shall not object providing it does not lead to discussion; but if it does, I must reserve the right to call for the regular order.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2592) to provide for the sale of a part of the reservation of the Winnebago tribe of Indians in the State of Nebraska, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 7, after the word "Indians," to insert "situate;" so as to read:

That with the consent of the Winnebago tribe of Indians in Nebraska, expressed in open council, the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to cause to be surveyed, if necessary, and sold, all that portion of the reservation of said tribe of Indians situate in the State of Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 15, after the word "in," to strike out "such" and insert "each;" so as to read:

That after the survey and appraisement of said lands the Secretary of the Interior shall be, and he hereby is, authorized to issue proclamation to the effect that unallotted lands at the date of the passage of this act are open for settlement, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe. That at any time within not less than six months nor more than one year after the date of settlement under such proclamation each bona fide settler occupying any portion of said land, and having made valuable improvements thereon, or the heirs at law of such settler, who is a citizen of the United States, or who has declared his intention to become such, shall be entitled to purchase, for cash, through the United States land office of the district in which said land is situated, the lands so occupied and improved by him, not to exceed one hundred and sixty acres in each case, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 5, after the word "of," to strike out "said" and insert "the Winnebago;" and in the same line, after the word "Indians," to insert "entitled to the same under existing laws;" so as to make the section read:

That the proceeds of such sale, after paying all expenses incident and necessary for carrying out the provisions of this act, including such clerk-hire as the Secretary of the Interior may deem necessary, shall be placed to the credit of the Winnebago Indians entitled to the same under existing laws, in the Treasury of the United States, and shall bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, which income shall be annually expended for the benefit of said Indians, under the directions of the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, line 3, after the word "Indians," to insert "residing in the State of Nebraska;" in line 5, after the word "the," to insert "said;" and in the same line, after the word "State," to strike out "of Nebraska;" so as to make the section read:

That upon the completement of said allotments, and the issuing the patents therefor, each and every member of said tribes of Indians residing in the State of Nebraska shall have the benefit of and be subject to the laws, both civil and criminal, of the said State.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. In section 1, line 18, after the word "Indians," I move to insert "in Nebraska;" so as to read:

One of whom shall be selected by the Winnebago tribe of Indians in Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. In section 5, line 1, after the word "Indians," I move to insert the words "in Nebraska;" so as to read:

That, with the consent of said Indians in Nebraska as aforesaid, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to read: "A bill to provide for the sale of a part of the reservation, situate in the State of Nebraska, of the Winnebago tribe of Indians, and for other purposes."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its

Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 2123) for the erection of a public building at Wichita, Kans.; and

A bill (H. R. 6089) for the relief of Moses F. Carleton.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 2799) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn.; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, yesterday, approved and signed the act (S. 1705) to provide for the issue of duplicate checks.

FOREIGN-LABOR CONTRACTS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair). The regular order is now before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2550) to prohibit the importation and migration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is upon the motion to strike out sections 3 and 4 of the bill. The motion has been divided. The pending question therefore is on the motion to strike out section 3.

Mr. BECK. I rise to make an inquiry; I do not know whether it is a parliamentary one or not; and that is, What has become of the trade-dollar bill? I think it has lost its place in some way unknown to me. It was reported, and argued, and dropped. I supposed it was the unfinished business. I have never been able to understand why it is not.

Mr. SHERMAN. The chairman of the Committee on Finance is not present. As I have the floor when that bill is again taken up——

Mr. BECK. Of that I am aware.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Vermont said to me this morning that he expected to call it up after this bill is over. It is still a special order, but it has been displaced by the pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed by the clerks that the bill is displaced as a special order and has gone to its regular place on the Calendar.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Vermont will move to take it up.

Mr. BECK. It has lost its place?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has lost its place as a special order, and has gone to its regular place on the Calendar.

Mr. BECK. By consent of the Committee on Finance, or how?

Mr. FRYE. Under a rule of the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. It had no special place.

Mr. SHERMAN. Under a new construction of the old rule, which reversed the rule in my judgment.

Mr. BECK. The only remark I care to make is that the bill came from the House last April. A good many reflections were made on the Committee on Finance for not reporting it before the close of the last session. We endeavored to report it early at this session. It was held back for a long time and then reported. It was taken up by consent, and has been allowed to lose its place. If we are going to kill it, say so; but let it not be done by indirection. That is all I care to say.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the motion to strike out section 3 of the pending bill.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Mr. President, I was necessarily absent from the Senate several days ago when the bill was under discussion. I do not intend to detain the Senate at any length at the present time.

I desire to say that I am in full sympathy with the object of the bill, which is the prevention of the bringing into this country of foreigners under contract to compete in the labor market of the United States. Looking over the debate had upon this question the other day, I find that it was participated in by Senators on the other side of the Chamber who, two sessions ago, when we were discussing the tariff questions, and when the Senators upon this side were in favor of a protective tariff and legislating in that direction, met us with the taunting question whether we were in favor of protection to labor, charging that we were only in favor of protection to the manufacturers, the property-owners of the country, but that we proposed to leave and did leave the labor market of the country entirely open to foreign competition. I supposed from the questions then put to us, from the arguments they then made, that if a bill of this kind should come before the Senate they would be the first in its defense, and in advocacy of such a measure. I regret to find, however, that such is not the case; that several of the gentlemen who put that question to us at that time have now by their speeches placed themselves in opposition to this proposition, and have made extensive arguments here against it.

I believe that the system of bringing into this country labor under contract is entirely vicious. While the United States Government opens its doors to all voluntary immigration, it should most unequivocally close its doors against all involuntary immigration, or against any immigration which comes in here under contracts to labor for a period of years. Such immigration, such labor, is to all intents and purposes slave labor, and it can under no circumstances do anything else than degrade and debase free American labor.

You will remember, Mr. President, that during the colonial times much of this kind of labor came into some of the colonies, particularly into Pennsylvania, and under the laws which then prevailed there was absolutely white slavery in this country. Large numbers of white emigrants were brought here under contract for a term of years, and the owners of their labor were able to sell that labor and pass it from hand to hand.

I wish to say as a manufacturer myself that the manufacturers of this country do not desire to have this kind of labor brought into the country, that so far as my knowledge goes one and all are opposed to it. If skilled labor, manufacturing labor, desires to come to this country, let it come intelligently and voluntarily, and when it is here it will then be upon an equality and a par with American labor. Those laborers can make, as all free men can make, their own contracts. They may go and come as they please. But we have seen within the past few years, and see at the present time, when large numbers of American laborers are being thrown out of the market, that organizations and companies have been formed in this country which have brought in large numbers of ignorant and degraded foreigners to work in our mines and upon our railroads. It is in these two industries chiefly that the contract labor brought in from Europe is to-day employed. In the mines of Pennsylvania, and in some other portions of the country, this labor has been introduced, and it has brought with it crime and misery. It has driven out of employment large numbers of free American citizens, voters like ourselves, who have their rights as American citizens. They have been driven from their employment by the bringing in of cheap foreign labor under contract.

Large numbers of these contract laborers have been brought from Hungary. Still larger numbers have come from Italy. There has been and still exists, I believe, in the city of New York a regular organization, a regular company I may say, of Italians who have brought into New York within the past few years many thousands of Italian laborers, and they have been put upon our railroads and public works under contract, and always at prices ranging from 50 to 75 per cent. only of the ordinary wages paid to American citizens in the same localities where this labor has been employed.

Large amounts of this labor have been employed in my own State. I now particularly recall the conditions under what is known as the West Shore Railroad was built. The great majority of all the labor used upon that road for three or four years was Italian contract labor. The men came in gangs. They were not able to speak our language. The contracts were made with their masters or foreman, who staid with them and controlled them upon the works. They lived in rude huts or in dilapidated barns and houses which were found along the road. I will not here go into any description of the squalor and filth which was found in those habitations, or the manner in which they lived. Even at the reduced wages of not more than from 50 to 75 per cent. of ordinary wages, they expended upon their living, on an average, not more than 25 cents a day, and yet each laborer accumulated a sum ranging from $400 to $800. They have gone back to sunny Italy, there to enjoy the little competence which they obtained here, thus taking away from this country our money and at the same time depriving American citizens of labor. Of the fifty-odd million dollars which was put into the construction of the West Shore Railroad a very large portion has been carried out of the country by Italians, and is to-day in Italy. If this labor had not been brought here under contract it would not have come at all. The average Italian laborer who is brought here under contract has not sufficient intelligence or education to enable him to come to this country for himself and to make contracts or find labor for himself. It was done in all cases by an organized company, which sent their agents to Italy, there collected together the labor of that country, brought it here, and, by making favorable contracts, made large profits for themselves.

I believe this whole thing to be vicious. The result has been that in my part of the country where this road has been built the better portion of the Italian labor has gone back to Italy, but it left all through our counties the paupers and the criminals who came with it. They have filled our almshouses and our jails; and in my own county I think, at the present time, one or two of them are under indictment for murder, or at least they were. Very much of crime and of misery and of pauperism was brought with them, and everywhere they threw American labor out of employment, for Americans would not work at the wages which the Italians were willing to take.

The bill gives us a perfect remedy for that condition of things. It says that there shall no longer be white slavery in this country, and that the labor of our country shall be open only to the competition of free men, each one acting for himself and not controlled by any company or any master.

If such action as this is not had, I believe that there will be great labor troubles in this country. Statistics gathered by some of the great commercial houses, by the Bradstreets, shows that a very large percentage of all the labor of America is unemployed to-day; that manufacturing establishments are stopping; that the building of railroads is being discontinued; that mines are being closed; and certainly under such circumstances, when the market is overstocked, we ought to see to it that the labor of our own citizens is not interfered with in the manner which I have described.

If sections 3 and 4 are to be stricken out, the bill may as well be beaten at once; for there is nothing left of it. Section 3 prescribes penalties for persons and companies or corporations who shall engage in bringing out this labor, in making the contracts and inducing these men to come among us. If that section is stricken out, then you can punish no one, for certainly you are not to punish the poor, ignorant, and deluded laborer who may be induced to come here.

Section 4 furnishes the penalty for the master of any vessel who shall knowingly bring within the United States on a vessel any of the persons described in the bill. I see no objection to that, and I do not believe that any of the great steamship companies bringing immigrants to our country can be opposed to that section, for the word "knowingly," which is in the section, will protect them in all their rights, and if they bring such persons into our ports knowingly they ought to be punished.

We have had upon our statute-book for many years laws forbidding the importation of paupers as immigrants, but we all know how difficult it is to prevent it. Year after year in the port of New York attempts are made to exclude such persons. A short time ago, after some of them had been brought over, the court held that the steamship company could not be compelled to return them to Europe, because they had been allowed to land; and now the commissioners of emigration are compelled to go aboard every emigrant ship coming into port and make a full examination in regard to the character of the passengers before any of them are permitted to land, for, under that decision, if any of them should be landed they would not fall under the statute and they could not be returned. Thus it is that now the steamship companies are compelled to submit to this examination before the immigrants are permitted to land.

Even with all the strictness with which this old law is attempted to be enforced to-day, the fact is that scattered all throughout the length and breadth of the land we find that thousands upon tens of thousands of paupers were only a few years or a few months ago landed upon our shores. They were paupers to all intents and purposes when they landed. They should not have been permitted to come here.

For years it has been an open and well-known fact that the European governments have been attempting to send to this country, to dump upon our shores, their criminals and paupers. The time is rapidly approaching when the Congress of the United States will find it necessary to pass much more rigorous and strenuous measures against the importation of such people than we have now upon our statute-books. We shall be compelled for our own safety to know thoroughly in regard to the character of all persons who come upon our shores intending to make this country their home. We shall find it necessary to inquire in regard to their ability for self-support; we shall find it necessary to inquire in regard to their previous character, and whether they have ever been criminals or not.

I believe, I say, that this legislation will be demanded, I believe it is demanded now, in all justice to our own people; for go where you will throughout the Northern States you find that a large percentage of all the paupers in our almshouses and a still larger percentage of all the criminals in our State prisons and penitentiaries were only a few years ago subjects of some European monarchy, and in many cases, if you will follow their history, you will find that they were paupers and criminals when they came here.

The United States stands ready to receive at all times all good persons who may come to us from Europe, who may come here able to support themselves, able to maintain themselves, and who are to become good citizens and add something to the prosperity of our country. But I submit that we can no longer afford to leave our ports open to the pauper and criminal classes of Europe; neither can we afford to leave our ports open to contract labor brought in here to be used in our mines and upon our railroads and other public works as I have described.

It seems to me that there ought to be no division upon this question, and I am surprised that any Senator should have opposed this principle upon this floor, for we are here I hold to legislate first for our own people, and particularly are we called upon to legislate in the interests of the labor of this country. Capital, wealth, and education are usually able to take care of themselves under any form of government.

I trust that sections 3 and 4 will not be stricken out unless more stringent penalties are to be moved as a substitute for them.

In regard to section 4, I may say that yesterday I was called upon by an agent of one of the principal foreign lines of steamship companies which bring emigrants into our country. He had supposed that there was something in that section which would work a great hardship to the line which he represented. I took the bill and read the section to him, and he expressed his perfect satisfaction with it. He had understood that the word "knowingly" was not in it, and under such circumstances he said it would be likely to bring great hardship to the steamship companies. But section 4, as it is now drawn, I submit will work hardship to no honest steamship company.

The steamship companies will, undoubtedly, find it necessary hereafter, if this measure shall be passed and placed upon our statute-books, to require the emigrants taking passage by their lines to subscribe to a statement that they do not go out under a contract to perform labor in the United States. They will undoubtedly make such a regulation, and require all persons taking passage by their lines to subscribe to such a statement, and when they have done that they will have done their full duty. If it shall then prove that they have taken on board men who are under contract to perform service in the United States, the steamship company will not be punishable under this proposed law, but only those individuals or corporations who have been active in inducing such immigration.

I believe the bill is just in all its provisions. I hope that it will not be amended to any great extent, that it will pass the Senate, and that it may be returned to the other House for concurrence in such amendments as we have made, and that it may speedily become a law of the United States.

Mr. VEST obtained the floor.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the Senator from Missouri to allow me a moment. I should like to know if the Senator from New York will point out the section of the Constitution under which he thinks this measure could be maintained. Under what power of Congress is it?

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I do not care to go into a discussion as to the constitutionality of this or any other measure. If it is not constitutional, and it should become a law——

Mr. DAWES. I suggest the general-welfare clause.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. My friend from Massachusetts suggests the general-welfare clause, and as that has been used somewhat on the other side within the last few months, perhaps that might be a sufficient answer. I might ask the Senator from Alabama also to give me that section of the Constitution under which he thinks this class of legislation is prohibited. But that is neither here nor there. In the passage of laws here, where there is not a direct provision of the Constitution forbidding the action proposed, making it absolutely plain, I shall always govern my action by what I believe to be the best interests of our people, leaving the Supreme Court to decide if there shall ever be any question as to the constitutionality of any of the acts that we may pass. Believing that the best interests of all our people demand this legislation, I am unequivocally for it, and I have not troubled myself about the constitutionality question at all.

Mr. MORGAN. I thought that perhaps the Senator from New York put this proposed legislation upon the power of Congress to regulate commerce between this country and foreign countries. I did not know. In dealing with the question, of course I should like to know, as I am not satisfied that the bill ought to pass, whether in passing it we are laying down any rule that would be very inconvenient hereafter.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. If the Senator from Missouri will pardon me just a moment, I will ask is not this legislation precisely on all fours with the legislation which we now have upon the statute-book which prevents paupers or people who have been criminals in other countries from coming into our ports?

Mr. MORGAN. That may be, Mr. President.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. That has been upon our statute-book for a long time, and I am not sure that it ever has been passed upon by the Supreme Court; but certainly the inspection laws of the State of New York in inspecting immigrants and in levying inspection duties upon them have been sustained. I know that the head-money tax of New York was not sustained by the court, and that the United States Government did step in and pass a statute imposing a head-money tax. If Congress can impose a head-money tax of 50 cents upon each immigrant that comes in, it can of course impose one of $1,000 or $5,000, or $10,000 if it sees fit, and could in that way exclude the immigration. In the laws forbidding the importation or the coming in of paupers, of course the word "pauper" means simply a person who has no visible means of support, who has no property, no money. Such a contract laborer would certainly be excluded as a pauper. That has been on our statute-book for many years, and I think has never been questioned. It seems to me this legislation is directly in that line.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not wish to occupy the time of the Senate, as the Senator from Missouri desires to take the floor, but I beg indulgence to say that I have no doubt about the power of the Government of the United States, or of any State indeed, to exclude the immigration to this country of persons who are diseased, or persons who are paupers, or persons who are criminals, upon the general power of self-preservation or self-defense that any government is obliged to possess. I was only anxious to know, inasmuch as the Senator referred to the subject of a tariff, whether he thought the exercise of the taxing power was included in the bill, or whether the power to regulate commerce was included in it, whether he really thinks that this is a prohibitory tariff upon the incoming of foreign population under contract to labor in this country.

I was at a loss to know from the Senator's argument upon the subject of the attitude of certain persons on this side of the Chamber on the tariff question, whether he thought that we are now enacting a tariff law or something that is to be justified under our power to enact tariff legislation. I think that if it goes upon the idea of regulating commerce (inasmuch as that power seems to be equally in the authority of Congress) between foreign countries and the States and the Indian tribes, after a while we should in extending it get to preventing the negroes of the South from coming up among the people of the North and competing for labor on the railroads and other places where they might seek an opportunity to find employment.

I do not want to prevent that; I do not want to establish a precedent here by which that can be done, for I want those people to have free access to all parts of the United States to labor in competition with any white man anywhere. That is my view of it, and I should dislike very much to lay down a doctrine in this bill which might induce some person at some time or other to undertake to cut off the negroes from the right to emigrate to the North. I want them to go there if they wish to go.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRYE in the chair). The Senator from Missouri has been recognized. Does he yield?

Mr. VEST. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I am glad to notice that the Senator from Alabama is taking much greater interest in the labor of his own part of the country and that of the United States than he seemed to do some two years ago in discussing the tariff issue—I think my memory serves me correctly—when the Senator stated substantially upon this floor in speaking of the tariff question that he did not want a high tariff which might lead to a high rate of wages, for he did not think it would be profitable to his own State; that if great manufacturing establishments were built up at Birmingham, and other places and labor was paid high wages as it was in the North, it would necessarily affect the labor market of Alabama upon the plantations, and those working upon the plantations would be drawn away from them by the inducements of higher wages paid in great manufacturing establishments, and that might result in destroying the planting interest of Alabama. That I think was substantially the statement of the Senator at that time. I do not intend to do him any injustice, and I hope I do not, but I think I give substantially the idea which he presented at that time.

Now the Senator is very much alarmed, fearing that if the bill should pass, preventing contract labor coming from abroad, the North will undertake to protect itself against the free colored labor of the South. I think the Senator is very much mistaken in that. If it comes freely from the South of its own accord to the North it will undoubtedly be welcomed and will receive such rate of wages as is commensurate with its value.

I think the Senator may give himself no concern in regard to the labor interest of the North, or any interest in the North, ever attempting any such legislation as he suggests; and really I do not think that the Senator was in earnest in making any such suggestion as he did make.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator from Missouri will indulge me one moment more, I mentioned the other day in the argument I made before the Senate on this bill that I had been waited upon by a committee of laboring men of this District, and I asked them what would be the effect upon their affairs here of introducing the negroes of the South. They are not a very much better class of people than those described by the Senator from New York, a great many of them. Some of them are very much better, but a great many of them are not better. Well, they said they did not object to them; they said, "The negro speaks our own language, and when we wanted to get on a strike we could manage them, we could control them; so we do not object to their coming in."

The Senator has furnished me an opportunity of which I shall not avail myself at this moment of correcting a second-hand account that he has got from some newspapers—a very unjust one to me—about my attitude upon the labor question in my own State.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. The Senator will pardon me a moment. The statement I made was furnished by my own recollection of what I heard the Senator from Alabama state in one of his speeches on the floor of the Senate in the discussion of what is known as the tariff bill of 1883. I think my memory is substantially correct. It was not upon any hearsay or any newspaper account that I spoke.

Mr. MORGAN. I shall refer to the RECORD at the proper time for the purpose of defending myself against what is a very unjust statement of any remarks that I made or any attitude that I assumed upon that question here. I did ask in the course of the tariff debate, having two classes of people in my State to take care of, one the planters and the other the manufacturers, of what advantage it would be to the people at large if the manufacturers were encouraged by a high protective tariff levied upon the labor and earnings of the people and should thereby raise the wages of that labor to such a degree that the planters could not afford to carry on their business. I put that question again, and the people of the State of Alabama put it to me day by day. They want to know of what advantage it is to the people at large in that State to tax the planting interests very heavily for the purpose of building up a special industry which has no other effect, so far as they are concerned, than to raise the price of wages.

It does not compensate the laborer any more than the existing state of employment and the existing rate of wages. It merely produces a money demand for labor instead of a demand upon the plantations, which, when you come to count it up at the end of the year, is very much more favorable to the laborer upon the plantations than it is to the laborer at the iron-works or at any other place in that State. You may take a negro—I refer to that class of people because they constitute a large proportion of the labor in my State—and give him a dollar or a dollar and a half a day at the iron-works. Take him from his home, let him rent his shanty or place of living, buy his clothes and his food, and work the hours that are required at the different iron establishments in my State, and then compare what that man earns in a year with what the actual advantage of his earnings upon a plantation are, and the plantation service is very much more valuable to him than the other; but the temptation of a dollar or a dollar and a half in money per day is so great that those men are frequently drawn away from the plantations by this temptation and induced to give up good homes and good situations for the illusory opportunity of working in the iron establishments.

So I argued then, and I argue now that, so far as the specific price of labor is concerned, whether that is to be 50 cents a day on a plantation or whether it is to be a dollar at an iron-works, if you choose to make that difference, and there is not quite that difference between them, the advantage of the man's living, his prosperity, his morals, his Christianity, his peace, and his comfort, and the welfare of his family are decidedly promoted by his receiving a lower rate of wages upon the farm than by receiving a higher rate at the iron-works or at the lumbering-mills. It was in that light, and only in that light, that I was discussing this question, not having a desire to keep down wages by the repressive influence of law or by any other influence, but not wishing that any portion of the people of my State should be deceived by flattering arguments into the belief that, by the encouragement of any one particular line of industry by high protective duties levied on the rest of the community, the State at large or the people thereof were benefited either in their prosperity or their happiness. That is the attitude I took, and I can look up the RECORD and show that I said nothing contrary to that.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I expect to vote for this bill; but there are several provisions in it to which I shall give a reluctant assent. I think the bill is immature and crude, but I shall vote for it on account of the salient principle which it announces, hoping that time and experience may perfect this legislation hereafter. If I understand the principle enunciated in this bill and attempted to be enforced, it is the prohibition of contract immigration to this country, what is termed upon the Pacific coast the cooly principle, a principle the results of which on the Atlantic seaboard and in the Western States are significantly shown by the immigration to this country of the paupers, the abandoned, dangerous, and criminal classes of foreign countries who are unable to pay their own transportation and who become the instruments of greed and avarice on the part of speculators and corporations.

I have no doubt as to the constitutional power of Congress to enact this legislation. The Supreme Court of the United States has declared in two cases that the power to preserve its own life gives this Government the authority to exclude the diseased and criminal and pauper classes from our country, and authority is found under the commerce clause of the Constitution, without reference to that Sancho Panza constitutional blanket known as "the general-welfare clause," in which I have no confidence and upon which I place no reliance.

Mr. President, the men who formed this Government based it upon two great distinctive principles: one, local self-government; and the other their appeal under unparalleled difficulties and dangers to the sentiment of the civilized world in favor of personal liberty and political freedom. Our fathers invited to this country every bona fide immigrant who came here to take his part in the responsiblity and the danger which attended the problem of self-government in this western hemisphere. To the warm-hearted and intelligent Celt, to the industrious and economical German, to the self-reliant Scandinavian, let the doors of the Republic be thrown wide open. The party to which I belong has always held this doctrine and has always practically enforced it; but it should not be prostituted to the greed and avarice of men who seek to strike at the very life of the Republic by introducing the dangerous and pauper classes from abroad into our population.

The Senator from New York has eloquently portrayed the practical results of this abuse within the great State which he represents upon this floor. Who introduced this system of contract pauper labor into the legislation of the United States? The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] denounced it upon this floor but the other day, yet the Senator from Ohio is the father of the bill that inaugurated contract immigration into the United States. In 1864, upon July 4, the natal day of Independence, I find that a bill became a law, of which the Senator from Ohio was the father, which he reported to the Senate, and which he advocated, the second section of which reads as follows—it is "an act to establish the office of commissioner of immigration:"

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That all contracts that shall be made by emigrants to the United States in foreign countries, in conformity to regulations that may be established by the said commissioner, whereby emigrants shall pledge the wages of their labor, for a term not exceeding twelve months, to repay the expenses of their emigration, shall be held to be valid in law, and may be enforced in the courts of the United States, or of the several States and Territories; and such advances, if so stipulated in the contract, and the contract be recorded in the recorder's office in the county where the emigrant shall settle, shall operate as a lien upon any land thereafter acquired by the emigrant, whether under the homestead law when the title is consummated, or on property otherwise acquired until liquidated by the emigrant; but nothing herein contained shall be deemed to authorize any contract contravening the Constitution of the United States, or creating in any way the relation of slavery or servitude.

There is the germ of the cooly or contract-labor system now carried on, and that bill, introduced by the Senator from Ohio, reported by him from a conference committee, advocated by him upon the floor of the Senate, and passed by a Republican Congress, is now upon the statute-book, and it is the father of this whole system which the Senators from New York and Ohio denounce to-day.

Mr. President, I thank the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS], who, with characteristic eloquence and courage, portrayed the other day the appalling condition of this country under this legislation and other legislation of the Republican party. That Senator, in words whose eloquence I shall not undertake to emulate, said:

Sir, there are 500,000 wage-workers, willing to labor, out of employment at this particular instant of time in the United States. With their dependent women and children, not less than 3,000,000 people in all are to-day, amid the extraordinary rigors of an unusually inclement winter, suffering for the necessaries of life. They need shelter. They are in want of the clothing that might be manufactured from the surplus production of our factories now stored in warehouses and waiting for a purchaser. They are in need of the corn that is this afternoon being burned for fuel on the plains of Nebraska, and the wheat that is being fed to hogs in the valleys of Kansas. The gravity of the situation can not be exaggerated. It is an alarming paradox. In the midst of copious abundance there is haggard wretchedness and starvation. With all the elements of prosperity around us there is unprecedented depression and adversity.

If I were to venture to supplement this appalling picture, I should allude but in passing to the columns of the press to-day, which state that 75,000 laborers are now out of employment, hopeless, upon the streets of New York; and this after twenty-four years of a high protective tariff; this under the war or Morrill tariff, under which we have had a hot-house system augmenting the products of the country to the highest extent under the plea of protecting the laborers of the land. If we have heard anything on this subject in the press, from the rhetoric and logic of the Republican party for a quarter of a century, it has been that a high protective tariff would increase the wages of the laboring classes of the United States, would give them happy homes, and remove them from the squalor and wretchedness of the pauper labor of Europe; but after twenty-four years of that system this is the picture drawn by one of their most eloquent advocates, portrayed in words that simply fit the facts, and I thank the senior Senator from Kansas for the courage which evoked his utterance, and I point the laboring men of the United States to the results of the high protective tariff, to the fact that now additional legislation is being demanded in order to remove them from competition with the pauper labor of Europe poured upon our shores.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I shall make no apology for taking the time of the Senate for a few moments in the discussion of this bill. I have seen criticisms in the public press upon the Senate because it voted to consider this bill rather than some other bills the passage of which was supposed to be important to the welfare of the country; but to my mind there is no bill pending before Congress, there has been no bill pending before Congress during its present term of any greater or I may say equal importance with this bill; and so far as any responsibility is to be taken for displacing other measures and bringing this bill to the consideration of the Senate, I am very willing and very glad to accept my share of that responsibility.

This bill has been here since last June. It has been for one reason or another, largely because of our rules, debarred from a hearing until this time; and now in the closing hours of the session I am pained to observe that Senators whom I believe to be in favor of the principle of this bill seem to overlook that principle and to be directing their attention to what appear to be some crudities and informalities which appear in the bill. I agree that this bill is crude, that it has not been drawn with proper care. I think it illustrates the folly of a class of men who suppose that bills can be better prepared for the consideration of Congress and passage by Congress by those who are not familiar with legal phraseology and with the legal profession.

But if I were to criticise this bill I would criticise it because I think it is not properly drawn to effectuate the object and purpose which those who desire the passage of the bill, and which I desire, have in mind. I do not believe that these sections which have been criticised, that the phraseology which has been criticised is likely to work any considerable hardship or injustice. I think the bill, if it fails in effecting a wise and salutary object, will fail because it is not properly drawn to effectuate the purposes of those who believe in the principle of the bill. I said that I regarded this as an extremely important bill. I think there is no question to-day so serious before the American people as the condition and character of its wage-workers, both present and prospective, and I propose for a few moments to express my views upon that subject.

It is said that a republic rests upon the virtue and intelligence of its citizens, and that is true; but there must be another element taken into consideration. The element of the prosperity of its citizens and all classes of its citizens must be regarded, and that system of public economy which does not consider first of all the condition and the character of all classes of the citizens of a country is fatally defective, and that statesmanship is unwise which refuses to regard and consider the condition and character of every class of the citizens of a republic.

A majority of the citizens of this Republic are wage workers. Possibly the statistics of the census do not quite bear me out in that statement. I think, although I have not the statistics at hand, that the number of those engaged in gainful occupations, as they are called, is stated at 47 per cent. of the entire population, but there are many other persons to be added to that list who do not come within the census classification. So I think I am correct in my statement that more than one-half of the citizens of this Republic are engaged to-day in earning wages.

They are the majority of the voters of this land, laborers, men who earn their bread by the sweat of their brow. The most important problem presented to the American people to-day is what shall be the condition, what the character of that class of its citizens. Other government based upon other principles, monarchical governments, arbitrary governments, governments of the strong hand, may live and prosper and thrive to a certain extent, although the character, the social, the mental, and the moral condition of its laboring classes may be neglected, and may not be deemed proper subjects for legislation. But in a republic I believe, and I state as the result of mature thought, that it is impossible for the system of government long to survive unless there be passed such laws, unless there be adopted such policies as tend to elevate, to dignify, and to ennoble all its laboring classes. In this Government the working man votes, and hungry men do not vote intelligently. Men who can only receive as the result of their toil just enough to keep from starvation and the poor-house, are not patriotic, or if they are will not long be patriotic to the extent of being willing to fight for and defend the institutions of their government.

It becomes, then, the duty of all men who have to do with the legislation of the country to see, first of all, that such policies are adopted and such laws enacted as will tend to elevate the laboring citizens of the country. I said, therefore, that you must add to virtue and intelligence the prosperity of the citizen, if you expect the Republic to endure; and prosperity of the citizen means fair, remunerative wages for his labor. The tendency in a country which seeks to lower the standard of wages below fair remuneration is wrong and vicious and destructive of republican institutions. We owe our marvelous growth in this country more to the character of the men who have worked with their hands from the foundation of the Government to this time than to any other one cause. It has been so heretofore in this Government that the man who would honestly work could receive fair compensation for his work, by which I mean enough so that he could do something more than keep himself alive and keep his family alive, and avoid the poor-house.

Up to this time those who have been willing to labor in this country under our system of free labor have been able to obtain wages enough so that they could comfortably clothe themselves and families; so that they could properly educate their children; so that by thrift and prudence, by frugality, or self-denial if you please, they could lay aside a little something, establish for themselves a little competency, secure a little home; attach themselves to the soil, and thus become conservative, patriotic citizens of the country. Anything that tends to change that system in the United States presents an appalling danger, and a danger, I think, more appalling than we now understand.

There is another condition of labor which must be observed. Labor in this country, in a republic, must be free. The laborer must have no master but himself in the sense that he is not free and independent. It was the bondage of labor in the system of slavery which wrought so much of disaster to the section of country within which it prevailed, that retarded development, that kept back that country; and those sections of the country in which free labor prevailed, where workingmen were their own masters, were enabled to advance more rapidly in the march of civilization and prosperity than that section of the country where the system of slave labor prevailed. And we shall have but half won the fight against slave labor and in favor of free labor in this country if we do not so legislate as to continue a state of things in this country where labor shall be free and independent, and where it shall receive fair, even generous, compensation.

It is quite a mistake to suppose that a nation in which labor receives an incompetent reward can be really or permanently prosperous. I know in these days there seems to prevail a theory that that nation is to be strongest upon the face of the globe where the rate of wages for labor is least. The idea seems to be that that nation will be strongest which can manufacture its goods cheapest, and that involves the least rate of wages.

It seems to be taken for granted that such a nation can obtain in some way what are called the markets of the world, and thus surpass other nations in strength and prosperity and power. I believe it to be a great mistake. I believe that the nation which seeks only the expansion of its trade by cheapness of production is on the road to weakness and decay and dissolution. I would not degrade the labor of this country by 10 per cent. to secure all the markets of the world, as they are called. I prefer to give up trade if thereby we may educate and ennoble and dignify labor and make laborers more honorable in this country.

I do not propose to give this discussion a partisan turn. It is above politics. I do not propose to be drawn into any discussion of the tariff, but I want to say just this: I do not want to see this country engage with other countries in a scramble and strife as to which can obtain most of the markets of the world by lessening the wages of the men who produce goods. Cheapening production should be avoided if we must cheapen men in order to secure it.

Now, we all agree to this. It is said that laboring men are out of employment in this country. They are out of employment in all lands, no more so here than they are in other countries. I will not stop to discuss the causes which have limited the field of labor and thrown persons out of employment. The papers to-day tell us of three thousand men in the streets of London hungry and besieging the office of the prime minister demanding work. It is not in this country alone that people are out of employment.

We all recognize the fact that a condition of things where there is no labor for men who live by labor is a condition which weakens and endangers a government, whether it be a monarchy or a republic; and we must also understand that when labor does not obtain a fair reward a condition of things exists whereby government is as truly weakened and endangered. The difference is only in degree. It is the same danger and the results will be in the same direction.

We must have intelligent laborers in this country. The foundation of our whole governmental and social fabric is the intelligence of the man who works; and the majority of our men work. I have no patience with that philosophy or that statesmanship which does not regard the worker as the equal of the man of leisure. I have no patience with that kind of legislation which does not seek to ennoble the worker in this country.

I hear a great deal said about this Senate being in some way committed to the corporations of the country and the wealth of the country, said unjustly as I believe; but it having been said, I want to take this opportunity, standing here in my place in the Senate, to say that my life has been a life of work, hard, unremitting work, and that fortune has never dealt lavishly or generously with me; and I am glad of the opportunity, therefore, to stand here and declare the dignity of labor and to plead for the equal rights of the honest toilers of the land.

I would be just to capital as I would be just to labor, though I have never been fortunate in the acquirement of wealth. I feel no antagonism to it. The wealth which re-enforces labor is as necessary to the country as labor itself, but my whole life experience leads me to sympathize with that portion of our citizens who are compelled to earn their living.

I do not believe that these criticisms upon the Senate are just. I believe that the Senate of the United States is as ready to recognize the rights of laboring men as the rights of the rich who employ labor. I do not believe that there is any danger that at the hands of the Senate of the United States men are to become lordly if not titled in this country, or that the workingmen are to be reduced to the condition of a peasantry.

Mr. President, these thoughts have been running in my mind as this discussion has proceeded, and I felt that they were thoughts which were worth submitting to the consideration of the Senate.

Now, what is this bill? It is a bill which proposes to declare, as I understand, two things, and therefore I am in favor of it: First, that the policy of this Government is to protect its laboring men, its workers, to protect them to the extent that they shall be elevated rather than degraded, that they shall be educated rather than made ignorant, that they shall be honored rather than despised; and second, I understand the principle of this bill to be that labor in this country belongs of right to the laborers who are now resident here, and to such other laborers as shall voluntarily come here to join those resident here in the performance of that labor, and I have no hesitation in saying that a practice which contradicts and violates these principles is a crime against the Republic, a crime against its social order, and a crime against its system of government.

It is impossible to bring foreign laborers here under contract without assailing all these principles which I have been enunciating. I am opposed to importing laborers as we import horses and cattle. I am opposed to what may be called involuntary immigration into this country. I am not opposed to voluntary immigration. I regard voluntary immigration as one of the chief sources of our strength, as a factor which has developed and is further to develop the grandest civilization that this continent or the world has ever known, and to make our own the most prosperous, the most powerful, and the most beneficent of all the nations of the earth. I believe that the admixture with our native races of those who come here imbued with the principles of this Government, seeking to better their condition, honestly desiring to work in this land of freedom, tends to build us up as a people and to ennoble the whole of our citizens.

I have never been in favor of involuntary immigration. I voted against the Chinese bill, not because I was in favor of Chinamen being brought here under contract for labor, but simply because I thought there were in that bill sections and clauses which prohibited voluntary immigration into this country, which shut out the man who desired of his own accord, of his own free will, to come here and become a part of us; because men were shut out from this country by that bill, as I understood it, simply on account of their being laborers who wanted to labor in this country. I will go as far as any other man to prohibit bringing contract labor here, whether it be Chinese, or Italian, or Hungarian, or English, or French, or Irish.

It is that principle which I contend against, and in so doing I recognize and uphold the right of any human being on this globe who himself, of his own motive, of his own desire, his own free will, wishes to come here and become part of us, and honestly partake of the benefits of labor in this country, to come without hindrance or restriction. My doctrine is that no importation of laborers to lower the rate of American wages should be permitted, and no voluntary immigration of honest laborers should be prevented.

So, Mr. President, I shall vote for this bill. I believe that the whole tendency of the system which it seeks to cut up by the roots and to destroy is vicious, is degrading, is destructive to our Government. The Senator from New York has depicted the condition of the men who are thus brought here. He has depicted the way in which they live, their social relations. They are in no sense, under such circumstances, the peers of the American laborer, and they do not intend to become the peers of the American laborer. They are in no sense under such circumstances fit to partake of the responsibilities of our Government as the American laborer must partake of those responsibilities. They are in no sense under such circumstances calculated to become the defenders of our Government in the hour of its trial. They do not come here under circumstances, they do not live here under conditions which can make them intelligent, patriotic, voting citizens of this country, and I want no other immigration into this land. I welcome to it all that will come under conditions which will enable them to become such citizen-voters of this Republic. Mr. President, I trust that none of these amendments will prevail. I do not believe that any of the provisions of the bill will work hardship or do any substantial harm, but I do believe that we shall do infinite harm if we fail now, this subject having come to the consideration of the Senate, to put on record our adherence to the principles which I believe are contained in this bill and give them here in the American Republic the sanction of law.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, it is not my habit to discuss the question of the tariff when it is not before the Senate. The Senator from Missouri with his wonderful facility and felicity has seen fit to bring in that subject on the present occasion. I wish to say a word or two, and to advise him that whenever that subject comes up properly for our consideration he had better be prepared to take some blows as well as to give them.

It may be that some of the distress which now prevails throughout the country in our various workshops has arisen from an apprehension that some protection hitherto given is to be withdrawn by the coming administration. It may be observed also that in the winter season there are always in this country as well as in others a large number thrown out of employment, and the present winter has not been an exception. It is also true as observed by the Senator from Connecticut that this depression in the industries of our country is not singular here; it prevails throughout the entire world at the present time, as much and probably more in England and Germany and France than in the United States.

But the Senator from Missouri would unquestionably pursue a policy that would throw a large number of the wage-receiving men of our country perhaps into Nebraska to raise corn merely for fuel. That is not the policy that I should advocate. But as the Senator refers to the long time in which protection has had sway in this country, and yet has failed to produce the effects of prosperity throughout the entire land, I desire to call his attention to a message sent here by a Democratic President in 1857, that he may see whether the conditions now are any different from those described by a Democratic President after a long season of the domination of that party in this country. I read from the first annual message of President Buchanan of December 8, 1857:

> The earth has yielded her fruits abundantly, and has bountifully rewarded the toil of the husbandman. Our great staples have commanded high prices, and, up till within a brief period, our manufacturing, mineral, and mechanical occupations have largely partaken of the general prosperity. We have possessed all the elements of material wealth in rich abundance, and yet, notwithstanding all these advantages, our country, in its monetary interests, is at the present moment in a deplorable condition. In the midst of unsurpassed plenty in all the productions of agriculture and in all the elements of national wealth, we find our manufactures suspended, our public works retarded, our private enterprises of different kinds abandonded, and thousands of useful laborers thrown out of employment and reduced to want.

I ask the Senator from Missouri to look on that picture as well as the one that he has presented.

Mr. PLUMB. I observe that this bill has been amended in some particulars, so that I presume it is in order to still further amend it, although I should have been willing to vote for it as it came from the House, not because I thought it embodied in every respect the best form of language to accommodate the idea, but because it seemed to make more certain the probability that it would become a law. The motion to strike out the third section, I suppose, will be postponed to a motion to perfect it. I want to suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire having the bill in charge whether that section might not be improved in line 3 by inserting the word "knowingly." He will observe that the word "assisting" occurs in line 3, and that that applies to the migration or importation of any alien or aliens under contract; and therefore the person who assists in bringing such persons into this country might be liable to the penalties provided in that section, whether he did it knowingly or not.

Mr. BLAIR. I think the suggestion is without objection. I should be very glad to have the word inserted.

Mr. PLUMB. I propose to amend by inserting before the word "assisting," in line 3 of section 3, the word "knowingly." That would not apply of course to the word "soliciting," because solicitation must necessarily be with knowledge, but the word "assisting," as applicable to the importation of aliens or foreigners to perform labor or service, is without any qualification whatever. I think that ought to be amended, and I make the suggestion, because a number of amendments have been made and because I want to have this bill as perfect as we can well make it, for if it should happen that we should pass a bill which should, by reason of its crude provisions, encounter obstacles in its enforcement, it would probably not be enforced or might lead to such amendments to it hereafter as would in some way destroy the purpose which is in view.

I wish while on my feet to call the attention of the Senator having charge of this bill also to that provision of section 5, commencing in line 7, which declares:

> Nor shall this act be so construed as to prevent any person or persons, partnership, or corporation from engaging, under contract or agreement, skilled workmen in foreign countries to perform labor in the United States in or upon any new industry not at present established in the United States.

I think I see the idea that the person who drew this bill had in mind, but at the same time the provision is very broad, and is not only liable to defeat itself but to defeat the object of the entire bill as I understand, because if a person can be imported under contract to do something which is not now done in the United States, being once imported he may be used for an entirely different purpose, and that may be in view at the time the contract is made. If this bill is intended to strike thoroughly and finally at the evil of contract labor, it seems to me that it should forbid it entirely, that there should not be a loophole of this kind.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to inquire of the Senator if his hostility is to anybody contracting in this country his labor upon specified terms, or is his hostility against a contract abroad that binds him here?

Mr. PLUMB. My hostility is to any contract whatever whereby any person comes to this country moved by an impulse set in motion by somebody else, and not on account of his own disposition.

Mr. DAWES. What does the Senator mean by that? Any contract that a man may make abroad to come to this country and perform labor upon terms fixed abroad, without his having anybody in this country to determine the terms with him here, or does the Senator propose to say that no free man in this country shall make any contract, express or implied, about his labor in this country, that whatever he does shall be thrown upon the common-law measure of a quantum meruit?

Mr. PLUMB. I do not exactly understand what the Senator from Massachusetts is driving at; but I wish to say this——

Mr. DAWES. I can tell the Senator.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to say this: My object is to prevent the importation of labor coming to this country of men having been induced by a contract made abroad—that is to say, a person desiring to procure labor from the other side of the water enters into a contract with a man on the other side to come here for the performance of that labor on this side. In other words, I propose to distinguish between that immigration born of the expectation of bettering his condition in the individual mind and that which is incited by a contract or a proposition upon the part of some one on this side who seeks to avail himself of that labor in order, as he believes, to obtain that labor at a cheaper price than he could get it at the hand of the laborer already here.

My remarks are addressed to the provision of section 5 which I have read. Suppose some person desiring or pretending to desire to establish a new industry in the United States goes abroad and contracts with persons to come over here to perform labor in that industry which they can not perform, perhaps in regard to an industry which does not exist, but for which the purpose of contract he assumes to exist, or that it will exist. Those persons thus brought here under that contract come within, I think, the fair inhibition of this bill—that is, they contravene the idea which is at the foundation of it. In other words, it is the solicitation, it is the inducement that is held out. It is the distinction that necessarily exists in this case between persons who come of their own motion seeking to benefit their own individual condition, and those who have hopes incited in them by persons who seek to get them here for their own purposes. I think the idea of this bill is therefore largely if not wholly undermined by this provision. I would not only make all contracts of that kind absolutely void, but I would bring them within the provisions of this bill.

As I said before, I should have been willing to vote for the bill as it came from the House in order to make more sure that it might be enacted, but since it has been amended and must go back to the House, this provision ought either to be stricken out entirely or more fully guarded.

Of course, this is but the first step. We are on the threshold of not only legislation, but of the formation of public opinion perhaps preceding such legislation in regard to the very intimate relations between labor and capital; and it is proper, I think, that in the beginning of this controversy, and as the first step toward the settlement of the question, we should inhibit the importation of labor under contracts, in order that this question may not constantly be disturbed by the introduction of large numbers of people from the other side of the water, whether at one price or another, which shall introduce new and disturbing elements in the settlement of this question and consequently postpone its settlement just that much longer.

For these reasons I am in favor of the bill; but inasmuch as the bill has been amended, as I have said, it seems to me that the Senate ought now to so further amend it as to better carry out the idea which is evidently at the bottom of this proposed legislation. I therefore suggest to the Senator who has the bill in charge whether or not an amendment of that provision would not be judicious. For myself I would be willing to strike it out entirely. I can not conceive of any good to come from it at all. I can perceive only evil, and, as it seems to me, under that clause the entire purpose of the bill may be avoided and set at naught.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I did not intend to ask the indulgence of the Senate upon this bill. I only desire to state as briefly as I can the reasons which induce me to support it.

I support the bill upon the ground that it is legislation intended, as far as its scope will reach, to break down the shackles that are put upon labor. I support it as a part of a great work in which I have been engaged here for the last twenty-five years, assuming different forms and directed in different ways to the same purpose; and that is that all labor in this country shall be absolutely free; that so long as the laborer shall conform to the laws of the land he shall be absolutely free to determine for himself what shall be the kind and the nature of his employment and what shall be the terms and measure of his compensation.

In whatever field, in whatever way, and by whatever means the domain of free labor in this country shall be invaded, there, so far as I am able, I will make my humble endeavor to thwart the purpose and to break down the shackles and strike off the fetters from the limbs of labor; and so far as this bill shall contribute to the end that the free laborer when he steps upon the shores of this land shall be like the man who breathes the air of England, a free man, to determine for himself under the laws of this land into what fields of labor he will essay to work out the problem of his life, and upon what terms he will devote his life and labor, I will support it, and upon no other principle whatever.

I have never been afraid of the competition of any man who may come here from any of the nations of the earth to try his hand with the free educated labor of this country in the paths of industry opened here. I have never feared the result of his competition, and I shall never myself knowingly vote for a bill that will put one above another of those who labor for a living in this country because of his complexion or previous condition or place of birth or clime; and therefore it is, sir, because there has come to be a new phase of slave labor in this country, that we are called upon to devise new means and enact new penalties and to make new efforts to strip it again. I regret to see opposition to any such measure as this arise from any quarter, much more do I regret to see it from any section of this country.

Sir, labor must be free here, and the laborer here must have all the opportunities for labor that this country and its exigencies and its demands and its broadening enterprises shall afford him. Because at this moment there are more laborers in this country than at this moment can find profitable and remunerative employment, I will not take away from them any part of the labor that is to be performed for this country and turn it over to laborers outside of its boundaries, under the pretense that that will benefit laborers in this country; nor will I say to any laborer who comes here free to determine for himself, according to the measure of his intelligence and capacity, what part of the labor that is to be performed for this nation he will take it upon himself to perform, "I will exclude you from your share," for any reason of apprehension that he will compete with the laborer who is born upon our soil or has lived here educated up to its necessities and its requirements, for I hold that the laborer will make his own level in a free country and work his own way and make his own fortune and character in spite of your laws.

But, Mr. President, a man who before he comes here and knows the opportunities, and the facilities, and the protection of law that a laborer here can have in that effort, binds himself to conform to any condition of servitude in this country, I do not care what its character or under what name it shall go, is not a free laborer. He is but very little removed from the condition of those over whose bodies we might at any time in the history of this country have asserted a right of control. He who sells his effort sells his life. He who ties his hands, winds about the muscles of his body the chains of a contract made abroad, is a slave, and it is against slavery that this bill is aimed.

But, sir, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] thinks there is danger that we shall injure labor in this country if we be permitted to go abroad and get skilled labor to come here and introduce here new industries, to the pursuit of which we are not yet educated. To my mind hardly anything can contribute more to furnishing employment for labor in this country than that very process. If all the avenues of industry are now crowded, and if all the pursuits of known industries in this country are now full and the products of industries more than supply our demands, it is only by introducing new industries, it is much by introducing new industries at least, that we can relieve labor by giving it new employments not now known, and no more healthy provision of this bill exists than the very suggestions in it of encouraging enterprise and capital in this country in the idea of setting up here as many as possible of the thousand industries of the world not yet introduced into this new country with which we are unfamiliar and for the performance of which we have now no skilled labor. Any one of these industries not only furnishes employment for those who come here under such encouragement as is contemplated by this bill, but it furnishes at the same time in proportion to its value and the amount of capital and labor necessary to carry it on employment for ourselves, manifold multiplied always by our demand for the consumption of the product and by the demand for the production to compete in new markets.

Sir, those are the best friends of the laborer in this country who make it a study to find something new for him to do, some new enterprise for him to engage in, some new industry not yet fully employed in this country into which he can embark and in which he can employ his energies and his soul. I look, sir, for relief to the labor of this country, not to inhibition of immigration into the United States. I hope we shall never less than now make it the home of the poor man, and make it an attraction to him. I hope the tide of immigration will never reverse itself and turn from these shores to European and Asiatic shores in the idea that there are better homes, better opportunities, better society, and better hopes and aspirations in the old effete condition of other parts of this broad world than in this new, growing country of ours. It is because of the established truth, the conviction, all over the world that here are better homes, better opportunities for work and labor, and better rewards for it than anywhere else, that here more than anywhere else concentrate all these streams of immigration. Sir, I hope that never will be less in my day, and I hope in order to meet the exigencies and necessities thus imposed upon us we shall turn rather to developing new opportunities and bringing here new industries described in this bill, and in the very section which has called down the criticism of the Senator from Kansas; and that we shall be ourselves that nation of all others in which every honest and honorable way of rewarding industry known to the laboring world shall find its best and richest and highest reward.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWLEY). The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] suggested but did not actually propose an amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to amend section 3 by inserting after the word "by," in line 3, the word "knowingly."

Mr. FRYE. There is an amendment pending now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an amendment pending, but the Senator from Kansas claims the right to amend the text before the question is taken on striking out.

Mr. FRYE. Of section 3?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Of section 3.

Mr. FRYE. Undoubtedly that is in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas proposes to insert the word "knowingly," in line 3 of section 3, after the word "by."

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I understand that during my absence momentarily from the Senate Chamber the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] called attention to the act to encourage immigration passed on the 4th of July, 1864. That act was in its nature a temporary act, intended to meet a condition of affairs in which we were then engaged. The Senator from Missouri ought to have remembered that at the date of the passage of that act this country of ours was making the most memorable struggle in history, in a civil war. We were then engaged with all the power that we could command, with all the resources that could be called from our own or from foreign lands to put down the most formidable rebellion in history. At the time that law was passed the Senator from Missouri did not know the motives that influenced Congress to pass such legislation; he was doing all he could to break up the Government; and this was one of the means selected by us, one of the methods designed and framed for the occasion to meet the emergency, a bill that was passed by the unanimous vote of both Houses of Congress.

The bill originated in the Senate, and contained a few provisions to encourage immigration. It was amended in the House by a substitute which contained the second section of the bill; and as the second section of the bill did tend greatly to strengthen our country in that memorable war, the Senate agreed to the amendment in a committee of conference; and it became for the time being ingrafted on the law of the land. What was that provision? A temporary provision designed for war, at a time when millions of men were under arms. Nearly all the laboring men of our country were engaged in fighting enemies, and our industries languished. At the same time there was a demand in this country for all kinds of products. We therefore did pass that law to encourage immigration, and among the provisions of it was the second section, which the Senator from Missouri thinks was the fountain-head of all the evils which have overtaken our country since—a law that lasted three or four years. And here is the section to which he referred, passed during the war:

That all contracts that shall be made by emigrants to the United States in foreign countries, in conformity to regulations that may be established by the said commissioner, whereby emigrants shall pledge the wages of their labor, for a term not exceeding twelve months, to repay the expenses of their emigration, shall be held to be valid in law, and may be enforced in the courts of the United States, or of the several States and Territories; and such advances, if so stipulated in the contract, and the contract be recorded in the recorder's office in the county where the emigrant shall settle, shall operate as a lien upon any land thereafter acquired by the emigrant, whether under the homestead law when the title is consummated or on property otherwise acquired, until liquidated by the emigrant; but nothing herein contained shall be deemed to authorize any contract contravening the Constitution of the United States or creating in any way the relation of slavery or servitude.

The next section provides:

And be it further enacted, That no emigrant to the United States who shall arrive after the passage of this act shall be compulsively enrolled for military service during the existing insurrection, unless such emigrant shall voluntarily renounce under his oath of allegiance to the country of his birth and declare his intention to become a citizen of the United States.

It is well known that during the civil war immigration to this country largely ceased, fell off to a very small number, and we therefore lost the benefit of the laboring men who naturally came in the course of immigration by the civil war, and the labor of those men became vital and necessary to us in July, 1864, when we were engaged in such a momentous struggle; and therefore we did invite those people to come here, and we did say that if they came here under contract by which the money for their passage should be advanced, that money should be paid back by the laborer within twelve months after that time. It was a wise provision under the circumstances; but mark it soon after the war ceased, when we had no longer enemies to fight, the whole of this act was repealed. It is not to be found in the Revised Statutes. It was one of those measures demanded by the war and the exigencies of the times. It was right, and I have no doubt that under it many an immigrant was encouraged to come to this country.

Immigration had been deterred in a great measure for fear that when they came over and landed on our shores the men would be drafted into the military service; but when they were assured by the terms of this law that they were to be protected from enforced military service, that unless they chose to put themselves voluntarily in a condition to be enrolled and enlisted they were in no danger of being called into the military service, they came. Under the operation of that law a commissioner of immigration was appointed and was in active duty for some time, and induced laboring men to come to this country to aid us in one way to supply the place of the laboring men who had gone into the field.

That bill was voted for by every Democratic member of either House of Congress. The record shows that there was no question about its provisions. It was like the enrollment or conscription act and all those great measures which were adopted in the exigencies of war, and this was one of the minor measures of that great occasion. After the war was over the law was repealed, disappeared, and long before the revision of the statutes there was no such law upon the statute-book.

Before arraigning me here personally for being inconsistent in supporting this bill, the Senator from Missouri ought to have recalled the circumstances that surrounded us at that time; he ought to have recalled the history of this legislation, the motives for it, the reasons for it; and I have no doubt that in the Southern confederacy they adopted similar measures, or probably much more enforcive measures, to encourage immigration into the Southern States. It was an act of war designed to strengthen and invigorate the armies of the Union. But after the war was over the law disappeared. Here I may say that all the measures intended to protect laboring men in this country emanated from the Republican party.

It is the policy of the Republican party to develop and build up the laboring men of our country; it is the policy of the Republican party to diversify our industries, to make us independent of all foreign nations, to manufacture here everything that is necessary for human life; and no law can be shown passed by a Republican Congress intended to prevent free and voluntary immigration. This law did not do it. This law intended to encourage the free immigration that was necessary then to strengthen our armies and enable us to manufacture the vast supplies needed for the support of our troops. All the policy adopted by the Republican party has been with an eye single to the development of our laborers, to their protection, to their support, to their encouragement and building them up, to giving them fair wages and honest pay for honest labor.

I will vote for this bill, not that it is framed with the precision that I think it ought to have been by a committee of lawyers limiting it to words meet for the occasion. I will vote for this bill because it was sent to us from the House of Representatives, I believe, without division of party, in a House composed of two-thirds Democrats—sent to us to defeat a class of contracts that have sprung up in the last eight or ten years.

Until after the close of the war the immigration to this country was a healthy European immigration. Since that time it has become the policy of Congress to prevent the immigration from Asiatic and other countries of races not akin to our own. I have nothing to say about that. Perhaps in passing those laws we went beyond the ordinary bounds of the old policy of the Government, but that is now the policy. But this bill does nothing to protect our laboring men from the importation of free immigration, of men who come here as individual citizens to mingle their blood with ours, and to contribute with us in building up a great, free country, but men who are not free, who are slaves. I read this morning in one of the Philadelphia papers a statement of the condition of 2,000 of these people now in the city of Philadelphia. It is abhorrent to all the notions of an American free laborer that men are bought and sold, who can not understand our language, who do not expect to remain here, who do not mingle with us, who do not share with us, yet are brought here in masses under contracts with corporations to drive out of their fields the honest laboring men of the country. That is the thing we are to deal with.

Now, sir, that a bill which has been passed by the House of Representatives, composed of two-thirds Democrats, should be made the occasion of an arraignment of the Republican party, it seems to me passes beyond the ordinary bounds of debate. This bill does contain good features, and I desire to see them preserved; let any that are bad be stricken out.

If the Senator from Missouri will hold me responsible for legislation that he disapproves, I hope he will look at the date of that legislation and see whether it was framed to meet his efforts on the other side to overthrow this Government, and whether we were not justified, under the circumstances, in passing that law and laws much more severe in their character for that purpose, and, when the object has been accomplished, to repeal the law as unnecessary in a time of peace to encourage the ordinary immigration that flows into our country, and has been a fruitful source of our wealth and thrift and unexampled progress in the race of nations.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, to the latter part of the speech of the Senator from Ohio, in which he makes personal allusion to me and to my course during the war, I have simply to say that whatever may be his opinion as to the position I then occupied I have no apology to make to the Senator from Ohio. That has nothing whatever to do with this discussion legitimately.

Mr. President, I know very well and I knew when I quoted this statute that it was enacted about the close of the war in 1864, and I read the date in my argument this morning, and I read it to show that the principle of contract immigration had been adopted by the Republican party. The Senator in his argument here a few days since denounced the principle and said he proposed to support the bill now before the Senate because he condemned in toto the principle of contract immigration to this country. Now, the Senator changes his position and says that that principle was applied by the Republican party under the emergencies and contingencies of a great civil war. In other words, he adopts the principle when he states that the emergency justified it. I said, and I repeat it now, that that principle was ingrafted on the legislation of the United States Government first in 1864.

Now the Senator says it was temporary. Mr. President, if temporary why was it not repealed at the close of the war? It was upon the statute-book unrepealed until 1874. It has not been expressly repealed; it is now held to be repealed by implication because not found in the Revised Statutes; but from 1864 to 1874 it was the law of the land, and during all this time the Senator from Ohio and the leaders of the Republican party were proclaiming to the working people of this country that they were their peculiar guardians and champions, and they proclaimed upon every stump and in every paper "We are the guardians of the poor men and the laboring classes of the United States against the pauper and vicious labor of Europe," when their own law was in existence all these years inviting people to make contracts with the paupers of Europe, and a lien given on their homesteads in order to pay the cost of their transportation to this country.

I said nothing in regard to the reason of this legislation. It is not pertinent to this debate because the principle was announced, and now it is only a question according to the present position of the Senator from Ohio whether the emergency justified it or not, and that is the whole of it, and that is all I propose to say on that.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, just a word. I have not had time to look up the repeal of this law, but I have no doubt it was repealed long before 1874. The Senator is mistaken, but I am not prepared to give him the date, because I have not had time to look it up. My attention is just called to it. My impression is that this law remained only two or three years in force and was dropped out, probably repealed in an appropriation bill, or at any rate there were no appropriations made after, I think, 1866, or somewhere along there, for the Commissioner of Immigration and the officers created under the law.

Because we resorted to measures of this kind justifiable in war it is not therefore to be inferred that we approve them as measures of peace. We have repealed the whole class of war legislation one act after another, in many cases by mere implication. If the Senator had said that this was passed during the war and merely for an exigency, as now turns out to be the fact, I should not have thought it necessary even to reply. We did many things during the war that we would not do now. There were many things that we deemed to be constitutional then which I would not regard to be constitutional in time of peace. War makes its laws and war compels congresses and others to make their laws conform to the necessities of war. We did so in this case, and the provision we enacted was a proper one under all the circumstances, and justifiable. It was not at all harsh. It was to encourage immigration, not to discourage it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] to the third section.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I shall vote for this bill, but I wish to express my entire dissent from many of the arguments upon which it is advocated.

I think the bill will fail to have any effect upon the laboring people of this country, that it is impossible that it should be of any service to them. I base my support of the bill entirely upon the fact that it is demanded universally by the laboring people of this country. But to say that because the laborer contracts abroad to give some portion of his earnings when he comes here, that is a crime; to affirm that there is any great economic benefit to the people of this country in prohibiting the small number of persons, whether good or bad, who are imported here under contracts, and preventing the competition on the part of that small number of people with the great body of laborers in this country, is in my opinion an unworthy proposition on which to base a great public policy.

To suppose that we are to help the laborers of this country by permitting the whole body of voluntary immigration not under contract to come here and enter into competition with their labor, and that we shall benefit them by preventing a small portion coming here under contract to labor, does not appear to me to be reasonable. Why, sir, a man is not a bad man because he contracts to labor after he gets here to pay for being brought here, nor is the public significance of the fact, because of the small number of people, of any consequence. It is not the fact that they come here under contract that makes them unworthy of American citizenship. There is nothing servile in a man's contracting to labor, neither in Europe nor in America. It seems strange that we should have such ideas as striking the shackles off of American labor by prohibiting a few men from coming here under contracts to labor.

I am prepared to go a great deal further than this for the protection of the laboring people of this country. Certainly all public policies, whether they are for protection or free trade, are advocated upon the theory, whether right or wrong, that they are for the benefit of the laboring people of the country, that they are to advance their wages and increase their proportion of the results of capital and labor or production. If we never have another laborer from abroad coming into this country, we shall have poorly paid labor unless there shall be some arrangement made by which the proportion which the laborer, the wage-worker, is to get of production shall be larger than it is under unrestrained competition. The difficult problem is to adjust these relations that the laborer shall be paid a reasonable proportion of the results of his labor, whether by State action or national public policies. Anything that falls short of this, in my opinion, is utterly futile and utterly unreasonable.

I shall support the bill not because it strikes any shackles from labor, not because it prevents the competition of a few contract laborers brought into this country, which is going to be of any benefit, but simply because it is demanded by the voice of the laboring people of this country. And I do so with the conviction that the bill will be of no benefit to them.

Mr. BLAIR. I hope that the amendment perfecting section 3 which has been moved by the Senator from Kansas will be adopted. That should be done of course before the question is taken on striking out the section itself. That amendment is the insertion of the word "knowingly" between the words "by" and "assisting" in the third line.

Mr. FRYE. Nobody objects to that amendment.

Mr. BLAIR. But there was a question as to its being in order. I hope the vote will be taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no question that it is in order.

Mr. BLAIR. Before the question is taken on this section, I wish to say that I consider it as a vote involving the fate of the bill. There is very little use in passing the bill if this section is stricken out. If this is stricken out, the fourth section ought to be; and if the third and fourth sections are taken out of the bill, there is no bill left. There is simply a prohibition of a practice now existing, but no penalty is provided in case of the violation of the law, and therefore the bill might as well be defeated, and had better be defeated by a direct vote than by this indirection.

Now, as I am on my feet, I wish to place in possession of the Senate the substance of an open letter which has been addressed to myself since the debate of the other day, and which has appeared in one of the journals of this city, and the information contained in which is of an important character and bears upon the question of the existence of an evil that should be removed by legislation. The immigrants who have been brought here under contract are chiefly from Hungary and countries in that immediate vicinity and from Italy. This letter relates to the question of the immigration from Italy and the abuses that arise under it. It is addressed to myself as chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor:

Hon. H. W. BLAIR:

DEAR SIR: Signor Celso Cæsar Moreno, one of the noble workers in the cause of humanity, appeared before the Federation of Labor Tuesday evening and made a complete exposé of the nefarious trade in men, women, and children from sunny Italy by the padrones in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Elizabethtown, Chicago, Washington, and other cities in the United States.

Signor Moreno stated that his protests and labors in behalf of his countrymen were of no "mushroom" growth, as he had in 1874 entered his protests against this accursed system in the American Congress through Hon. Charles Sumner and General Negley, and bills were then offered, and passed by the Senate and House of Representatives June 23, 1874, and known as the Moreno bills.

The infamous padroni (slave-holders), if unaided by other low Italians, would not have carried on their nefarious traffic so long and so extensively. They are aided by persons who, with them, grow lazy, rich, and fat upon the blood and sweat of the poor, unfortunate, and deceived Italian slaves. This traffic in human beings began in 1867, when the consul-general for Italy, Signor Ferdinand Deluca, came to this country, and from that time until very lately the Italian consulate in New York has been the headquarters of the padroni and their accomplices.

The padroni have "friends" everywhere in the United States—in cities, towns, villages, and rural districts.

The writer then goes on and gives the names of sundry individuals in this country who are associated in this work. I omit them because I do not care in this way to make them unpleasantly conspicuous. He then goes on to say:

Altogether there are in the United States nearly 80,000 slaves of both sexes and all ages.

The padrones, or slave-holders, subject them to the most abject slavery; they are not allowed to converse with their fellow-countrymen or strangers, and are kept in total ignorance as to the rates of wages current in the United States. These victims of greed and avarice get one-third of their wages and the other two-thirds go to the padrones. They are under constant fear for their lives, and cases are known where the stilleto has been used to frighten them into submission.

The only Italian paper they read is published by "Friend" de Casali, in New York city, which asserts, day by day, that if they do not fulfill their contracts they will be sent to jail.

The workingmen of America will find in the Italian a dangerous competitor under the ownership of the padrones; but if allowed to come here as freemen, they will become co-operators with our laborers and mechanics. The people of America, he says, have no idea as to the extent of this slave-trade, and proper steps should be taken at once by our law-makers to suppress this traffic in human flesh and blood.

The Federation of Labor some time since exposed Dr. Verdi; he is the "friend" of the padroni in the city of Washington.

These worse than slaves can be found at work on the Government reservoir. Contractor Peterson will probably answer all questions if brought before the Senate committee. Thirty thousand are owned in New York and 15,000 in Chicago—and yet slavery was abolished in the United States, the land of the free (?).

This scandalous business of enslaving men, women, and children is an outrage on humanity and a burning shame for America and Italy, and the sooner this comorra (ring) of malefactors is driven from our shores the better.

Let the "Old Liberty Bell" toll long and loud until this iniquitous system is abolished.

Honorable Senators, take up and pass H. R. 2350. The evidence is all in; the verdict has been given—the contract system must go!

Very respectfully,

W. S. WAUDBY.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 3.

I have also a letter addressed by this same Italian, who seems to be a gentleman of character and ability, with whom I have conversed myself on the subject, addressed last July to the King of Italy. It is a letter which may be very useful to the country, and therefore I take the liberty of spreading it on the record:

[The Craftsman, Saturday, February 14, 1885.]

THE ITALIAN SLAVE TRADE—THE INFAMOUS PADRONI AND THEIR SHAMELESS ACCOMPLICES.

Only the evil of the Italian slave trade has been exposed by the press, but never the shameless evil-doers—the accomplices—who are all of the lowest class of Italians in America. Some are fugitive birds from the Italian penitentiary, and some others have run away from Italy to escape penitentiary punishment, and most of them are in New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Boston, and Washington, as editors of Italian newspapers, as sensali and notaries public, as night watchmen in a museum, as small hotel-keepers and bankers, as barbers, druggists, barkeepers, quack and homeopathic doctors, painters, interpreters, teachers, and even self-styled counts and generals; as professors, opticians, cooks, dancing-masters, musicians, waiters, clarionet players at Niblo's, &c.; but all these professions and trades are only for delusion.

The reality is that all this canaille (rabble) get lazy, rich, and fat, and dress like gentlemen upon the sweat and blood of the poor Italian slave laborers of both sexes. The oldest of this gang of malefactors and accomplices has his lair in Elizabethtown, N. J. The Craftsman began the exposure of this scandalous evil and the evil-doers in its issue of February 7, and will continue the warfare until the imported-contract-labor bill becomes a law. Following is the letter of Signor Moreno to the King of Italy on this terrible trade:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 3, 1884.

YOUR MAJESTY: Thousands and tens of thousands of deceived and unhappy Italian peasants of both sexes and of all ages are now in the cities, towns, and rural districts of the United States in the utmost squalor, misery, and degradation, under the control of heartless padroni and shameless connivers. The condition of these peasants is worse than that of the late negro slaves in the Southern States.

Your Majesty, the abject and deplorable situation of so many thousand Italians to-day in such inferiority (not through their own fault) to all nationalities in this vast, rich, and free country is a foul stain and a terrible and undeserved stigma upon the prestige of the Italian name on this side of the Atlantic.

I always remember the courteous reception which Your Majesty accorded me on my arrival in Italy in the month of March, 1881, at the Quirinal Palace. I take the liberty to send direct to Your Majesty and to Her Majesty the Queen several American newspapers, in which are portrayed all the wrongs and sufferings which torment thousands and tens of thousands of my unfortunate countrymen, and the malefactors who inflict these wrongs:

The New York Herald of June 22, 1884.
The New York Staats-Zeitung of June 30, 1884.
The New York Star of July 1, 1884.
The Il Progresso Italo-Americano of July 1, 1884.

The inclosed are articles taken from the patriotic Italian journal, Roma, which is published in New York.

Your Majesty, the weakness and lack of influence of Italy have not their source in the patriotism and resources of the Italian nation, or in the ministry of war, nor that of marine; but arise from the maladroit, little patriotic, and unauthoritative ministers and consuls in foreign countries, and from the Consulto, where the ignorant bureaucracy rules supreme, and drags the timid and incapable ministers into the deep vortex of blunders.

A good name for a nation is a universal majesty, but the ministers and consuls of Italy abroad contribute much to the contrary, and it will never be through their ability if the Italian name will become a title of consideration in the world at large.

The Moreno bill, which was discussed and approved in June, 1874, by the American Congress—Senate and House of Representatives—has abolished forever the nefarious traffic in little Italian slaves in the United States; now have arrived the turn and the duty of the Italian Government to abolish the traffic in adults, and the sooner this dealing in white slaves will be prohibited, namely, emigration under contract from Italy to America, the better it will be, and in this way will be washed away a foul stain from the Italian name, a long story of grief and tears will be brought to an end, a story of demoralization, of shame, and of crime, which are an outrage upon humanity and an insult to this age of progress and liberty, and the cause of all these wrongs will forever be abolished, which our enemies keep in their hands like a weapon to assail and disgrace us.

Your Majesty's most respectful and obedient servant,

CELSO CÆSAR MORENO.

To His Majesty HUMBERT I, King of Italy.

Mr. LAPHAM. The object of this bill, as its title imports, is to prevent the evil of importing laborers here in groups, in colonies, in shiploads. It is to prevent the practice of bringing classes of laborers here under contract to perform service, and I am in full sympathy with that; and if this bill reached no further than that, I should be in favor of it without changing a letter; but I beg to call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to its provisions, reading the first section in the singular number, so that he may see exactly the import of the bill:

That from and after the passage of this act it shall be unlawful for any person, in any manner whatsoever, to prepay the transportation or in any way assist or encourage the importation or migration of any alien or foreigner into the United States, its Territories, or the District of Columbia, under contract or agreement, parol or special, express or implied, to perform service or labor made previous to the importation or migration of such alien or foreigner, to perform labor or service of any kind in the United States, its Territories, or the District of Columbia.

There are thousands of individuals in the United States, naturalized citizens and persons not naturalized, who have immigrated here who are saving annually from their scanty wages the means with which to send over to their acquaintances abroad the facilities for coming to this country, thousands upon thousands of them who are actually denying themselves the comforts of life in order to aid their acquaintances at home to come here to this land of the free and make it their residence; and this section as it is now drawn would strike at every such case.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. LAPHAM. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIR. The fifth section removes all the objection.

Mr. LAPHAM. I beg the Senator's pardon. That is precisely what I am going to call attention to. It does not touch the case at all. If it did I should not have raised this question. The proviso in the fifth section is this:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed as prohibiting any individual from assisting any member of his family or any relative to migrate.

That is the limitation. It does not include at all the large and numerous class of cases to which I have referred; and unless the Senator in charge of the bill will make this last proviso of the fifth section broad enough to cover all the cases to which I have referred, I can not support the bill. I am in sympathy with its object; but to leave it as it is now and subject every servant girl and every hired man who has come here from the Old World to a penalty of a thousand dollars for sending the money to help a poor acquaintance to come here and to permit that acquaintance to turn common informer and get one-half of the thousand dollars, is a kind of legislation that I can not sanction.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator from New York allow me a word?

Mr. LAPHAM. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator seems to overlook the limitation in the section that there must be coupled with the aid or encouragement a contract to labor. The bill does not prohibit such cases as he has described, unless the person who is aided by his friend in this country to come to our shores is required by that friend to enter into a contract to labor for him or for some one else under his direction, with a view of returning the money advanced. It does not at all prohibit, as I understand it, any person who is interested in a friend abroad, even if that person is not within the exception of the fifth section, not a member of his family, from extending aid to any one to come to this country, provided only he does not bind the friend to whom he thus extends his aid by some contract to labor after he arrives in this country.

Mr. LAPHAM. The answer to that is very obvious. In all these cases, in every case with probably scarcely an exception, the person who is thus aided to come here pledges himself or herself in advance to refund this money out of his or her first earnings.

Mr. HARRISON. That is not prohibited by the bill.

Mr. LAPHAM. Most certainly it is.

Mr. HARRISON. Not at all.

Mr. LAPHAM. It is prohibited by the very letter of this section. Let us read it:

That from and after the passage of this act it shall be unlawful for any person to prepay the transportation or in any way assist or encourage the importation or migration of any alien or foreigner into the United States, its Territories, or the District of Columbia, under contract or agreement, parol or special, express or implied, to perform service or labor.

They are all under that contract; and there is no difficulty in avoiding this by making the proviso at the end of the fifth section broad enough to include all this class of cases, and I only call attention to it for the purpose of having that proviso amended.

This is a penal statute, Mr. President, and great care should be observed in its enactment. It will not do to have its provisions so that by the construction of it it may strike at innocent persons, and it is so easy to avoid it by enlarging the proviso at the end of the fifth section that I have chosen to call attention to it.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I still think the Senator from New York misconceives entirely the scope and effect of the language which he has read. I affirm again that there is nothing in this section to prevent any person in this country interested in any friend abroad from loaning to that friend the means to pay his passage to the United States. It does not take hold of him unless with that loan (which may be secured in any way, except that under the bill it may not be secured by a contract of labor) there is a contract to labor. The man may give his note, and promise to pay it in money; he may get the money in any honest way and pay the debt after he comes to this country. The Senator says it is implied that he can not get it in any way except by working for somebody; but this provision was intended to prohibit a contract for labor between the person furnishing the money and the person to be brought to this country. It was not intended in that case to tie the hands of a man who gives his note to a friend in order to raise his passage-money, from working for somebody else in order to get the money to return it. It has no such effect; and if the section is modified as the Senator desires it to be, it simply opens a way by which the bill itself and its beneficial provisions can be entirely avoided.

If I understand the evil sought to be guarded against by this bill, it is that men living in foreign countries where the rate of wages and the condition of labor is so different from what it is in this country shall not there under the strain that is upon them make a contract, which of course is governed by rates of wages there that put them in the power of the person furnishing the money when they come to this country and have a tendency to import the rates of foreign labor and establish them here. I see nothing to prevent any person who is benevolently disposed, who has no personal interest in an individual, from aiding any one to come here, provided only he does not attempt to secure the money which he advances by a mortgage on that man's labor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] to the third section, to insert the word "knowingly" after the word "by" in line 3.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the motion to strike out section 3.

Mr. HARRISON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

Mr. RANSOM. I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. VANCE] has been called temporarily from the Senate to attend to some very urgent business.

The result was announced—yeas 12, nays 40; as follows:

YEAS—12.

Butler,	Garland,	Harris,	Saulsbury,
Coke,	Groome,	Maxey,	Slater,
Colquitt,	Hampton,	Morgan,	Williams.

NAYS—40.

Aldrich,	Fair,	Lapham,	Platt,
Blair,	Frye,	McMillan,	Plumb,
Brown,	George,	McPherson,	Pugh,
Call,	Gibson,	Mahone,	Ransom,
Camden,	Harrison,	Manderson,	Sawyer,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hill,	Miller of N. Y.,	Sewell,
Conger,	Hoar,	Mitchell,	Sherman,
Cullom,	Ingalls,	Morrill,	VanWyck,
Dawes,	Jackson,	Palmer,	Vest,
Edmunds,	Jones of Nevada,	Pike,	Wilson.

ABSENT—24.

Allison,	Cockrell,	Jonas,	Pendleton,
Bayard,	Dolph,	Jones of Florida,	Riddleberger,
Beck,	Farley,	Kenna,	Sabin,
Bowen,	Gorman,	Lamar,	Vance,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hale,	Logan,	Voorhees,
Chace,	Hawley,	Miller of Cal.,	Walker.

So the motion was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the motion to strike out section 4 of the bill.

The motion was rejected.

Mr. LAPHAM. In section 5, line 18, after the word "relative," I move to insert the words "or friend;" and at the end of line 19, after the word "States," to insert the words "for the purpose of settlement here;" so as to read:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed as prohibiting any individual from assisting any member of his family, or any relative or friend, to migrate from any foreign country to the United States for the purpose of settlement here.

That will relieve the provision to a great extent from the criticism which I made on the first section.

Mr. BLAIR. Say "personal friend."

Mr. LAPHAM. I wish to make it apply to any individual who chooses to send money to a native of his own country to help him come here for the purpose of settlement.

Mr. BLAIR. When the Senator uses the word "friend" he means "personal friend."

Mr. LAPHAM. Of course I do.

Mr. BLAIR. Then put in the word "personal."

Mr. LAPHAM. Very well; I will say "personal friend." I supposed that was implied.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New York will be read.

The SECRETARY. In section 5, line 18, after the word "relative," insert "or personal friend;" and at the end of the section add the words "for the purpose of settlement here."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question will be first put on inserting the words "or personal friend."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the second amendment, proposed by the Senator from New York, to insert at the end of section 5 the words "for the purpose of settlement here."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. In section 3, line 3, after the word "by," I move to strike out the words "assisting, encouraging, or soliciting or," and to insert "the;" so as to read:

That for every violation of any of the provisions of section 1 of this act, the person, partnership, company, or corporation violating the same by the importation of any alien, or aliens, &c.

I will state——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will take the advice of the Senate; but the present occupant of the chair is of the opinion that that amendment is not in order now. The Senate has refused to strike out section 3, thus virtually adopting it. The amendment, however, may be offered in the Senate after the bill shall have been reported to the Senate.

Mr. CALL. I withdraw the amendment if it is not in order now to amend the section.

Mr. SAULSBURY. In section 5, line 16, before the word "Provided," I move to insert the words "nor laborers in agricultural pursuits;" so as to read:

Nor to persons employed strictly as personal or domestic servants, nor laborers in agricultural pursuits.

Mr. BUTLER. I call the attention of the Senator from Delaware to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE], which possibly meets the case more fully.

Mr. SAULSBURY. That amendment has not been incorporated in the bill.

Mr. BUTLER. It has not been reached yet. Notice has been given that it would be proposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I desire to say that the bill doubtless has been inspired by a purpose to correct what has been acknowledged to be an evil in this country, caused by the action of corporations who employ large numbers of laborers. Railroad companies and large manufacturers have, in order to obtain the service of persons in their employ at reduced rates, made contracts with persons abroad to come to this country to labor in their employ. That is an evil, and is acknowledged to exist in this country; and I suppose that the bill was inspired by the idea of correcting that evil; but the bill illustrates the tendency of the human mind to go to extremes. In order to correct an admitted evil, we are adopting a measure which is very sweeping in its character.

Under the operations of this bill no man can aid the immigration to this country of a person from a foreign country to labor, with the understanding that he is to remunerate him for the advance which he has made, in any pursuit whatever. It so happens that in many agricultural sections of this country there is a scarcity of labor at times. There is a great disinclination on the part of a great many people in this country to work on farms. As soon as the sons of farmers come to manhood they are inclined to seek some other employment. Thus in many sections of the country agricultural pursuits labor under a great disadvantage from the scarcity of laborers necessary to their employment.

At this very time there is in my State an association of farmers, I believe commissioners, appointed for the purpose of trying to secure help upon the farms. A farmer needs a man to labor in his service, and some person will say, "I will get you a man from abroad if you will pay for his transportation here." He is to be brought here not to work in mines, not to work upon railroads, not to work in large factories, but to labor on the farm. A farmer makes the advance in order that some man may come and help him perform manual labor upon his farm; and yet this bill would prohibit him from doing that. There is no harm in doing that; it is bringing an industrious class of people here. I admit there is an evil where large importations of foreign labor are made for the purpose of reducing the wages of employés and where the contracts for labor are made abroad. That is an evil which I would help to correct, but we are too sweeping in all these provisions.

I desire that the amendment which I have offered, excepting agricultural laborers, may prevail, because, living in an agricultural community, I know the fact myself that there is often a necessity for agricultural labor which is not to be commanded, and no harm can result from the provision. I hope the amendment which I have suggested will commend itself to the favorable consideration of the Senate, as I am sure it will prove beneficial in many agricultural sections of the country.

Mr. COKE. Two days ago I gave notice of an amendment similar to the one that has just been proposed by the Senator from Delaware. It has been printed and laid on the desks of Senators, and comes in at the end of section 5. It reads thus:

And provided further, That labor to be employed in agriculture and stock-raising shall not be included in the prohibitions and penalties of this act.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I was not aware until just now that the Senator from Texas had proposed such an amendment. I will withdraw my amendment in order that he may offer his.

Mr. COKE. I am entirely satisfied with the Senator's amendment as far as it goes, but I think perhaps mine is a little broader.

Mr. SAULSBURY. My amendment is confined simply to agricultural laborers.

Mr. COKE. Then I will offer my amendment, the Senator from Delaware withdrawing his.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Delaware withdraw his amendment?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Yes, sir; I withdraw it to enable the Senator from Texas to offer his amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn. The amendment of the Senator from Texas will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to section 5 the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That labor to be employed in agriculture and stock-raising shall not be included in the prohibitions and penalties of this act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. COKE. One word, Mr. President, as to this amendment.

As I understand the bill, it is directed in its effects especially to the Northern and Eastern States, which are said to be overstocked with labor, whereas in the country from which I come, and the same may be said generally of the country west of the Mississippi River, there is a great scarcity of labor. The bill without the proviso that I have offered as an amendment will prohibit the importation of labor, which means people who become honest traders and land-owners, as well into the South and West and Northwest, where labor is needed and scarce, as in the North and East, where it is not needed. I therefore ask that this exception may be made in favor of labor needed in agricultural and stock-raising pursuits.

It is very well known that the owners of large bodies of land in the South and West frequently go to foreign countries and bring in people who desire to engage in agriculture, and settle them on their lands, making contracts with them under which they acquire homesteads of their own on the lands. This practice could not be pursued under this bill.

It is a fact also well known, I presume, to my colleague as it is to myself that when we make very large crops of cotton in the State of Texas, as we frequently do, the laborers who make the crops are unable to gather them, and many of our people go over into Mexico and gather up large numbers of laborers and bring them into Texas, where they pick and save the cotton. That would be prohibited under this bill.

In short, Mr. President, the great agricultural areas of this country are not overstocked with labor, and the theory of this bill as applied to them is a false one. If you will go upon the farms of the South and Southwest and West you will find that there is a great scarcity of labor. The labor problem is the one most difficult of solution there. Go, for instance, to my State, and you will find vast areas of rich land, much of it under fence, much of it broken, that is not in cultivation because there is no labor there to cultivate it. Especially is it the case that we have an insufficiency of labor for gathering our cotton crops. With the aid of machinery we can cultivate large areas of land in cotton which can not be gathered by the labor which makes it, because the cotton must be picked with the fingers, and in order to save it we must have human labor; there has been no machinery invented by which it can be saved.

While I have no doubt that the bill corrects a great evil in the northern and eastern portions of this country, it will be productive, as the Senator from Delaware has well said, of a very great hardship upon other sections of the country. We in the South and West want labor; we need men, women, and children to labor in our fields, to take homesteads upon our lands, and to grow up and constitute a part of the landholding citizenship of the country, as the people who go there do. We do not desire to see any of the avenues of immigration closed. We are not overstocked. If you are overstocked in the East and North, take care of yourselves, but do not create obstructions to that which is absolutely necessary to our prosperity.

We can not cultivate our country, we can not gather our crops, we can not develop as we ought and as we desire to do without human labor, and a great many of our laboring people and our best citizens came from Europe, and immigration from that quarter still flows in daily with increasing volume.

In Texas there are entire counties populated with Germans and Bohemians. We have whole sections of country populated with immigration of that class, and they are our very best immigrants. They produce more, they add more to the wealth of the country than any other people who come there. This bill will be a prohibition in a great measure upon many of the methods through which those people come to our country, and it will be a prohibition upon the same methods in the Northwest. The Germans come to Texas and get land; they go to work on it and make a little money. They send it back to Germany to pay the way of others of their countrymen out. They get more land than they need themselves, and they will send on to the fatherland and bring out a family and put them on the other end of the tract, and in a little while that land will be improved and that family will take it and pay a good price for it. That is the process through which our country is being settled. This bill will be a great obstruction to the settlement and improvement of the country in that way.

Gentlemen who desire to put a stop to contract immigration of mining and manufacturing people can do that in the bill without interfering with the class of agricultural immigration which we desire to see fostered and encouraged by the adoption of this amendment. The Southern and Western country under this amendment will be left free as it is now to acquire the population we desire, which our rich lands invite—lands which if cultivated by an intelligent population will add vastly to the general wealth. If my amendment is adopted we will be left free; the Southwest and the Northwest will be left free to acquire population as we do now, while the evils which Senators from the East and North complain of will be remedied.

Mr. HARRISON. I wish to ask the Senator from Texas a question. Does he desire that the bill shall be so left as that farmers and stock-raisers in Texas may go or send to Italy or Germany, or to any other foreign country, to make contracts with people there upon the advance of their passage-money to work for them at certain rates of wages in Texas?

Mr. COKE. No, sir; I do not.

Mr. HARRISON. Then if the Senator from Texas does not wish to accomplish that, his agricultural labor is left perfectly free under the bill as it stands. If his amendment should be adopted it would be lawful for the farmers and the stock-raisers in Texas to send an agent abroad and make a contract there at European rates of wages, and bring the men here under bondage to perform those contracts.

Mr. COKE. I simply desire that our people should be let alone in this regard, because they need no legislation. There has never been any complaint there by immigrants; they all do well who come there. There is no law there under which the specific performance of a contract for labor can be enforced. When they get to Texas they are free in this regard to comply with their contracts or not comply with them, as they choose, if they have made any. An immigrant can not land upon that soil and breathe that atmosphere without feeling that he is a free man. The servile labor Senators speak of in the North and East does not and can not exist there. Homesteads are too easily acquired for that. There is too much competition among land-owners, anxious either to rent or sell. The man with labor in his muscles is more independent there than in any other country under the sun.

I simply desire our people to be let alone, not interferred with, not obstructed by legislation which is totally inapplicable to their condition. This legislation may be needed in the North and East. I am willing to give gentlemen in the North and East such remedies as they think are needed in their country; but I ask them to listen to me when I say to them that we need nothing of the sort in the country that I have the honor in part to represent.

I hope that the amendment that I have offered will be adopted.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I ask to have the pending amendment read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to section 5 the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That labor to be employed in agriculture and stock-raising shall not be included in the prohibitions and penalties of this act.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I trust that the amendment will not prevail. It will be readily seen that if the amendment should be added to the bill, under the guise of agricultural laborers or stock-breeders, all the labor of Europe could be brought in, and thus the provisions of the bill would be entirely invalidated. I believe the bill should apply to agricultural labor as well as to any other.

For one, I am opposed to the whole system of large farms in the West and in the Southwest. I believe the best interests of this Government require the division of the land among the actual settlers and tillers of the soil, and the great farms which have grown up in Texas, in California, and in many of our Western Territories are opposed to our institutions; they are dangerous in every respect.

Our legislation, in regard to the importation of Chinese labor, I believe is to do very much toward breaking up the immense land holdings in the State of California. It is only by cheap contract labor that any man or corporation can afford to hold the great farms which are cultivated in California and in the Northwest. That can only be done by cheap labor; and when cheap labor is not to be had those immense holdings of land must be broken up and must be sold to actual settlers.

Any one who will look at the history of the State of California for the past ten or fifteen years will discover that it has grown very little in population. The reason is that nearly all of the available land in the State of California has come into the hands of a very few individuals. It is held by single individuals to the amount of hundreds of thousands of acres, and they have been only able to hold that land and make it profitable by employing cheap Chinese contract labor. When the labor of California shall have come to the same rate that is paid in the East, the capitalists now holding those vast areas of land will be compelled to distribute them, and when that shall be done the State of California will take on a new growth and energy. For the past five years immigration has been passing from the East through the State of California and going up to Oregon and Washington Territory, and why? Not because the lands are better and more desirable, but because nearly the whole land of California to-day is in the hands of a few great land monopolists. This is true to a large extent in Texas and in many of the Western Territories. It is true also that great capitalists in England have come over here and have organized great cattle companies, which have seized upon vast amounts of our Western Territories, and they are able to maintain their business and to make it profitable, and they will be able in the future only to go on with it in case they can have cheap labor.

My friend from Texas desires to have them left free to import this labor under contract if they see fit. I want to stop it here and now, and I should be glad if we could devise any means which would compel the great landholders of the West to break up their great farms and holdings and sell them out to individual citizens in amounts of one hundred and sixty acres. Undoubtedly they have now secured a legal title to their lands, and that can not be done so long as they shall find it profitable to hold them and farm them in these large amounts. If we prevent them from importing contract labor, as we have prevented the people holding the land in California from importing cheap Chinese labor, we shall within a few years compel the division of those great farms and great holdings in the West. I believe that to be for the best interests of the country.

When there comes a time of depression upon labor in the East, as there is to-day, the Eastern mechanic and laborer ought to find an abundance of public land in the West upon which he can settle under the homestead act; but it is a fact well known to the Senate and the country that nearly all the available and desirable public lands have been seized under one form of law or another until to-day nearly all the public lands which have been surveyed are covered over by pre-emption claims, or by desert-land-act claims, or by tree-culture claims, and there is little or nothing left for the actual, bona fide settler from the East who would go out and take up the public lands.

If this bill will do anything to break up that system of farming let us have it and make it as stringent as possible. Let us see if we can get rid of the great foreign corporations which are holding to-day more than 20,000,000 acres of our lands in the Western Territories.

I hope the amendment may not prevail, for if it does I feel that there is nothing left of the bill.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, I have very little to say in addition to what was said by my colleague [Mr. COKE], but I desire to call the attention of the Senate to what appears to me to be a very important consideration.

There can be no question, I take it, from what I hear from gentlemen much better qualified to speak than myself, that in the North and East there is a superabundance of labor which can not find employment; that there are, according to what we have heard here, several hundred thousand laborers out of employment. In that condition a proposition is made to prohibit the importation of labor from abroad under contract. The reason for that is entirely apparent to me; but if the bill passes, according to the first section it applies to every character of labor and to every section of the country.

Take the country west of the Mississippi River. There is a scarcity of labor there; there is nothing like so much as we need, and the character of labor needed there is agricultural labor. The bill prevents making a foreign contract for any character of labor whatever. Now, let us see the practical operation of that. Take my State. We began there fifty years ago, and we offered a head right of 4,605 acres of land to the head of every family who would come into Texas and settle. Under that provision we received a large number of settlers from the old States of the Union, Texas not then being in the Union, and a large number from Europe. As our land gave out we reduced the amount from 4,605 acres to the head of a family to 1,280 acres, and then to 640 acres, and then to 320 acres, until now we have no public land left.

But what has been the effect of that policy? Fifty years ago we had in Texas but 53,000 people; in 1870 we had a little over 800,000, and in 1880 we had a population of 1,593,000. In other words, notwithstanding what the Senator from New York has said, we nearly doubled our population in the decade between 1870 and 1880, and we largely increased that population by the inducement—you may call it by any name you will—which we gave to people to come into our State and settle by offering them a homestead for themselves and their families; and, under the laws of Texas, that homestead, once secured, is free from debt of any kind, character, or description. Under our homestead laws, however profligate the husband may be, the wife and her children are secured in their home; it can not be touched by forced sale, levy, or execution.

As I said, a large portion of the population coming to Texas came by inducement of the land which was offered to them. In the very county to which my colleague refers, where there was a very large Bohemian settlement, those people came largely to get the land which they got by coming, and until a year or two ago, under the census of 1880, it was the finest cotton-producing and the first cotton-producing county in the State of Texas. To-day the county in which I live is the first, but that was the first cotton-producing county in the State of Texas. Under the census of 1880 that county produced twenty-four thousand two hundred and odd bales; while the county of Lamar, in which I live, produced twenty-four thousand six hundred and odd bales.

I say what we need in Texas is population. On the same ratio of population of the State of Massachusetts, which under the census of 1880 was one hundred and eighty-six to the square mile, the State of Texas is capable of sustaining a population of 50,030,000 people. You may make the calculation. Take the 7,800 square miles of land in the State of Massuchusetts and the 274,356 square miles in the State of Texas, and multiply the amount in Texas by 186, and you will find that the State of Texas is capable of sustaining a population of 50,030,000 people upon the same ratio as the State of Massachusetts; and we are a better population-bearing people than they are, because our entire area of land is susceptible of cultivation. Besides that, we have water-power enough in Western Texas to turn the machinery of the entire world to-day.

So what we need is population. The strength of a nation is not in great wealthy nabobs; it is not in the few who have grasped the wealth of the many, but it is in a strong, freedom-loving people.

I have always thought that in matters of this kind the people in a country know better what is good for them than people at a distance know. I concede that proposition; and I say to the overburdened States of the North and East, having more labor than they can employ, take such measures within the limits of the Constitution as to you may seem best, and I shall not stand in your way; but when you come to that great country west of the Mississippi River, all of which needs population, an agricultural population, needs labor because labor is the great need of that country, we understand how to deal with the problem better than you do.

Therefore I can not see why the Senator from New York, who knows nothing whatever about the situation out there personally, should step in to interfere with a just and fair proposition made concerning a section of country which in no wise affects him. I do not consider that it is my duty to interfere in this bill so far as the North and East are concerned; they understand their interests better than I do; but I do think that I understand the interests of the country where I live better than they do, and I know that we do not need any legislation in respect to the introduction of labor in that State, either to aid it or to prohibit it.

The United States Government has been for years holding out an inducement for foreigners to come to this country to settle. When a foreigner arrives at Castle Garden and takes his way to the Northwest and makes his homestead claim, he has only to file his declaration of intention to become a citizen, and that instant he has the same right of homestead that the native-born American citizen has. Your Government has been inducing foreigners to come into this country under your homestead law. We have in Texas done that, and we have done it by wholesale, and, as I said, it is one of the greatest things we ever did do.

Take the Rio Grande district, which was so ably represented in the other House a few years ago by a foreigner, an educated man, a man of brain, a man of the highest order of talent, a graduate of the University of Giessen, in Germany, the late Hon. Gustave Schleicher, now dead. He represented that district, and was one of the ablest representatives we ever had from Texas. A large portion of that district is composed of Germans, and we have no better population than that, and the larger portion of it came in there under colony contracts, settled under colony contracts, and thereby they got land for coming to settle. That was an inducement for them to come.

How are you going to stop this thing? You propose here by your section to fine in the sum of a thousand dollars any person or corporation that makes a foreign-labor contract. That can not be done unless the corporation is within the jurisdiction of the United States. Do you not know that the people who will make these contracts will do so through European corporations, and you will never reach them? It will be a European corporation that will make the contract with those people, not an American corporation, and you will never reach them. You can not reach them because your laws do not reach them.

The whole measure, in my judgment, is not well considered; but notwithstanding that, so far as that part of the bill is concerned which reaches, as undoubtedly every one knows the purpose is to reach, the manufacturing, overburdened labor—the point is to protect that—so far as that branch of it is concerned I do not propose to interfere, but when you come to our part of it, the agricultural part, I beg that you will extend to us the same privilege that we cordially extend to you.

Mr. BLAIR. I am sure that I am the last person in the world who would do anything knowingly to interfere with the growth and development and magnificent future of the great State of Texas or any other State or portion of this country. Yet I sometimes think that our friends who have in the course of their experience at some portion of their lives entertained a less stringent and vigorous purpose than we have in the northern part of the country to preserve the integrity of this great nation, its continental proportions, lose sight of the fact that we are after all one. Not intentionally, to be sure, but nevertheless we often hear from them in regard to their country as though they lived in some other portion of the United States, or in some other country from that which I inhabit. This ought not so to be, and I think every citizen of the United States in Congress at the present time should decide upon his duty as a public official, as a member of the House or of the Senate, with reference to the general interests of the country at large.

In acting upon this principle, if I thought that the bill which is now before the Senate was likely to seriously injure the interests of Texas, I should be willing to see, I should be glad to see, I should insist upon seeing, this amendment made. I can not, however, believe that to be the case. If there does exist in the State of Texas a practice such as is prohibited by the bill, if Texas is being populated under the contract system, under the cooly system, under precisely the same practice which we prohibited with reference to the Chinese, and which we undertake to prohibit with reference to other races and other classes of people by means of this proposed legislation, then the sooner that practice is broken up the better for Texas, and the better for the whole country, because it is conceded to be in its essence slavery, tending in that direction, and it ought to be removed.

The bill does not undertake to interfere with any of those State inducements, those which are held out to the world under our national or under State law to induce immigration. It does not undertake to interfere with any of those broad and general inducements which are common alike to national and to State legislation, and it is to that sort of inducement, as I understand the Senator, that the increase of our population and our agricultural development is mainly to be attributed.

Mr. MAXEY. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly.

Mr. MAXEY. I am satisfied from my knowledge of the Senator from New Hampshire that he would not wish to pervert or misrepresent anything that my colleague or myself may have said. I never said a word in regard to the contract system or the cooly system. I said that we held out land inducements, and by those land inducements our State had been largely settled up, the same as was done by the United States. To that extent I said it, and no further.

Mr. BLAIR. I did not understand the Senator to say that the contract system, which the bill prohibits, had been practiced in the State of Texas.

Mr. MAXEY. I think the Senator will find on looking at his remarks when published that that is about the idea his language conveyed.

Mr. BLAIR. I understood the Senator from Texas to say that the population of that great State had been increased, that its prosperity had been greatly promoted by the inducements in the way of land chiefly, which had been held out to immigrants from abroad.

Mr. MAXEY. Certainly; I said that.

Mr. BLAIR. Now, that is by public act; that is by public law. That is in the State of Texas precisely what the United States has done by its homestead law; and it is no such practice as that, no such thought or idea as that, which is prohibited by this proposed legislation. Therefore it follows that the contract system not having been introduced into Texas, not having been made use of as a means of her development, she has really no interest whatever in this proposed legislation. She can not complain that this provision injures her, because she never has received an immigrant, she never has received a dollar's worth of development by reason of the existing practice which the bill undertakes to prohibit.

Then why should our friends from Texas oppose this legislation since it has no effect whatever upon their interests? On the other hand, as I was saying, if the practice does exist, the remarks of the Senator from New York are certainly pertinent. I am not at liberty by the necessities of the session to pursue the subject any further than did he, nor would it be necessary, for what he said was sufficiently elaborate and covered the whole subject with reference to the foreign ownership of vast tracts of land in this country, in the Territories, and in the newer States especially, which are and can only be kept profitable by means of cheap labor, and that must be contract labor, labor of the precise kind which the bill is designed to prohibit the introduction of. Any one will see that if the amendment suggested by the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE], which proposes to forbid the extension of the provisions of this legislation to labor employed in agriculture and stock-raising, is adopted, then the evil will continue; we shall not have stopped it at all, because it is perfectly easy to introduce all the labor which we are trying to prohibit as agricultural labor or as labor to be employed in stock-raising, and once within our country, as the agricultural interests embrace some thirty millions of our people——

Mr. COKE. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly.

Mr. COKE. Would it not be easy, under another portion of the proviso, not objected to by the Senator, which allows the introduction of experts from foreign countries, to make it a cover for the introduction of labor not experts as much as the amendment I propose would allow that to be done?

Mr. BLAIR. That is an objection to the bill which was raised by the Senator from Kansas when that section was reached, or it was put in the shape of a formal amendment. I propose to say a word in regard to it. That is a provision for the introduction of skilled labor for the establishment of new industries. It does open the way to a possible evasion of the law, it is very true; but it ought not to be urged by the opponents of the bill as an objection to it that it is less restrictive than it might be made. That the bill is more as they desire it to be ought not to be a reason for their objecting to it.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield?

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly.

Mr. MAXEY. I want to call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire to the fact that we are all very apt to take care of our own interests. The Senator from New Hampshire, I understand, is perfectly willing to admit into New England what he calls expert or skilled labor from abroad. Why? Because they have not got enough of it. Yet he would refuse to let us bring in agricultural labor when we tell him that we have not got enough of that kind of labor. I can not see any consistency in such a course.

Mr. BLAIR. That provision is put in the bill in order that by means of export labor new industries may be established in the State of Texas. There is now no manufacturing of importance done in the State of Texas. There is practically only the necessary amount of skilled labor in the country to maintain the industries already established. In Texas the iron industry would be a new industry; the glass industry would be a new industry; cotton manufacture and woolen manufacture are in Texas new industries; and does the Senator complain of a provision in the bill which will enable those industries, new to the State of Texas, to be established there, and enable Texas also to secure the necessary skilled labor from across the water? For it will be difficult to get that skilled labor at the North or where those manufactories and industries are already established, because skilled labor is, of course, the rarest of any kind of labor.

Mr. MAXEY. Will the Senator allow me to answer that question?

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly; but I thought I was raising a question.

Mr. MAXEY. I say what we want to do is to develop the immense agricultural country that we have there, which I have stated to the Senator could maintain a population of 50,030,000 upon the same ratio as Massachusetts. We are doubling it every ten years, and we shall turn into the next century with the largest population of any State in the American Union. When we accumulate money there not needed for developing our agricultural resources it will be put into manufactories there, with that water-power which, as I said, is the best in the world and is capable of turning the machinery of all the world. But you come in with this provision and say you will not let us develop the country in order to do that.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator says the contract system which we are prohibiting now has never been worked in the State of Texas, and yet the development of the State of Texas has gone on in the manner he describes; so that the argument is irrelevant so far as Texas is concerned, to judge from the representation of the Senator from that State.

Mr. MAXEY. We simply want the laws as they are.

Mr. BLAIR. But the laws as they are and as they have been in this regard have not affected Texas otherwise unfavorably, and the evil which the Senate is undertaking to prohibit does not exist in Texas. She may go on, she may grow and develop as she has done hitherto, she may multiply her resources, and if she needs more labor, if she needs a further inducement by contract for the immigration of labor within her borders, she has all the enormous mass of surplus labor such as we are objecting to in the North. Let her exercise her skill, let her make her contracts with the surplus of labor in the Central and Northern States. She has that right, she has that power. It seems to me that until she has exhausted the 500,000 idle laborers in other portions of our own country by what would be a legal process and which we do not undertake to interfere with and do not prohibit by the bill, certainly she ought not to complain that we undertake legislation, and that stringent legislation, which is necessary to remedy the evil where it does exist in other portions of our own country.

If this amendment should be adopted, thus opening the way to the introduction of thousands and hundreds of thousands it may be of laborers from abroad under the guise of being agricultural laborers, the bill will be evaded; it will be the idlest chaff in the world to enact it into legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE].

Mr. COKE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote will be withdrawn if there be no objection.

Mr. MITCHELL. My colleague [Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania] is absent sick, and is paired with the Senator from California [Mr. FARLEY]. If my colleague were here he would vote "nay," I have no doubt.

The result was announced—yeas 14, nays 37; as follows:

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7970) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereto.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and accede to the request of the House for a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. DAWES, Mr. PLUMB, and Mr. RANSOM were appointed.

REPORT OF SOUTH AMERICAN COMMISSIONERS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I herewith transmit, as desired by the act of Congress approved July 7, 1884, a letter from the Secretary of State with accompanying report from the Central and South American commissioners.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, D. C., February 13, 1885.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate of the United States:

Referring to my message of the 13th instant, concerning the report of the Central and South American commissioners, I have the honor to inform the Senate that the report therein stated as accompanying the message was transmitted with a like message to the House of Representatives.

A note of explanation to this effect was inadvertently omitted from the former message.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 17, 1885.

PETER LENNON.

Mr. CONGER. I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. 796) to increase the pension of Peter Lennon was postponed indefinitely, and that the bill may be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the vote of the Senate indefinitely postponing the bill indicated by him, taken in June last, be reconsidered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered.

Mr. CONGER. I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT TO APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds:

A bill (H. R. 2123) for the erection of a public building at Wichita, Kans.; and

A bill (H. R. 48) providing for the erection of a building to contain the records, library, and museum of the Medical Department United States Army.

The bill (H. R. 6407) to regulate the letting of mail contracts was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The bill (H. R. 6089) for the relief of Moses F. Carleton was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair). The bill will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CONGER. The bill should go to the Committee on Claims from what I know of the character of the case. It should be referred to the Committee on Claims here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is a bill giving certain pay and allowance to a second lieutenant of infantry. It should go to the Committee on Military Affairs. It is so referred.

FOREIGN-LABOR CONTRACTS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2550) to prohibit the importation and migration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to suggest to the Senator in charge of the bill a mere verbal amendment in section 2.

Section 2 reads:

That all contracts or agreements, expressed or implied, parol or special, which may hereafter be made by and between any person, company, partnership, or corporation, and doing business within the United States, and any foreigner or foreigners, alien or aliens, to perform labor or service of any kind, &c.

The word "and" where it first occurs in line 4 should be stricken out, so as to read:

Persons, company, partnership, or corporation doing business within the United States, &c.

Mr. BLAIR. That word ought to be stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to this amendment? The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. I move to add as an additional section to the bill:

SEC.—. This act shall not apply to any agent of a State acting under the authority of law who shall induce immigration to such State from any country in Europe, or from Great Britain, Canada, Mexico, or any Central or South American state; nor shall it apply to any person who in good faith shall assist persons or families to come from any of those countries for the purpose of permanent settlement in any State or Territory of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the amendment may not be opposed to what is intended to be the spirit of the bill; but there is some language in the bill that causes me to feel that it may be necessary in order to preserve the rights of the States, and also the rights of those persons who may seek to bring in permanent immigration. I notice in the first section of the bill the following language:

That from and after the passage of this act it shall be unlawful for any person, company, partnership, or corporation, in any manner whatsoever, to prepay the transportation or in any way assist or encourage the importation or migration of any alien or aliens, any foreigner or foreigners, into the United States, its Territories, or the District of Columbia, under contract or agreement, &c.

Similar language also is employed in the third section, which is the punitive section, and reads:

That for every violation of any of the provisions of section 1 of this act, the person, partnership, company, or corporation violating the same, by assisting, encouraging, or soliciting the migration or importation of any alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, into the United States, its Territories, or the District of Columbia, to perform labor or service of any kind under contract or agreement, &c.

Many of the States have had their agencies abroad for the purpose of getting immigration, and, as was remarked by the Senators from Texas who discussed the matter relating to their own particular locality, inducements of various kinds have been held out to those immigrants to settle up the country. The purpose was to get a permanent population, to get immigration; but the means used to secure that end I think would be means that are denounced in the bill; they are means that are calculated to give some assurance to emigrants before they come here that they will receive employment, that they will receive homesteads, that they will be well treated, &c.

I know that in the State of Alabama organizations have been engaged in inducing immigrants from foreign countries with very great success, and they have offered inducements in the way of homesteads and also in the way of advances upon crops to be made, provisions and farming implements, tools and the like, for the purpose of getting those persons to come in and occupy waste and unproductive lands.

The State of Alabama has an area of 50,000 square miles, and I suppose that very little more than one-half of it is actually occupied in agricultural industry or in any other. We have a great deal of what is called now waste land in that State, timbered land, and lands in the hilly country, not mountainous, but hilly country, that are not fertile as compared with other broad valleys and savannas, where the lands are very rich. The consequence has been that our population has gathered chiefly upon the streams and in the alluvial valleys of that State, and the hills have been heretofore somewhat neglected, though they are very excellent lands.

In later years, and particularly since the black population have congregated in the lowlands and in the richer parts of the State, the white immigration to Alabama has gone chiefly to the hilly lands. The truth is that that is one of the main elements in the development of that surprising growth, the city of Birmingham, which has sprung up there of late, and other large towns which are going into a rapid state of growth.

The State of Alabama has only been deprived of the opportunity of increasing this immigration by the fact that we had debts to pay, and that our system of taxation was as we thought comparatively heavy. Otherwise that State would have resorted to a regular system for the introduction of immigration, particularly German immigration, from foreign countries.

Many years ago, before the late war, a railroad company was chartered to run a line south and north, that is now called the South and North Road, from Decatur, Ala., to Montgomery. The Congress of the United States made a large donation of lands to that railroad corporation on what is called the Sand Mountain. That is an elevated country of about seven hundred feet elevation, on an average, above the level of the sea. At the same time it is a plain at the top of this elevation, a sort of mesa. It is a hundred miles across perhaps, in one direction, and fifty or sixty miles in the other; and that great mesa or elevation contains the mineral or coal lands of that country, and beside very valuable timber. But nearly all the lands in that portion of the State are adapted to agriculture, particularly to the cultivation of cotton and corn and fruits by white labor. The soil is light and friable and easy to manage.

This railway company, for the purpose of inducing immigration there, made a contract with a gentleman by the name of Cullman, who was a German of wealth and of distinguished family. He engaged that if they would sell the lands to immigrants, as he brought them over, at a minimum price, and would also furnish to that colony transportation at reduced rates for a series of years, he would undertake to settle that country.

Before that time the population was about five or six to the square mile in what is called the Sand Mountain region, a very scattered population, living upon the wild productions of the earth mainly. The men who settled out in that region supported themselves chiefly by the chase. In 1872 Mr. Cullman commenced his operations in that colony, on the railway company carrying into effect this contract, which has not yet expired, but which this bill will destroy. In 1876 I was invited to the town of Cullman to make an address to the people of that colony, and I met 3,000 Germans there and made my address to them. They had built their town, a considerable town; they had churches and schoolhouses; of course they had breweries and lager-beer saloons. They had vineyards around the town and steam tanneries, steam furniture factories, and various little manufactories of that kind, and the country around was considerably settled up.

That was in four years after the colony was first planted at Cullman. That colony has gone on to increase until now it is a county organized under the State and called by that name, the county of Cullman. It pays quite a revenue to the State of Alabama now—some $15,000 a year to the State treasury, and more than that for county purposes. The annual taxation for local purposes in that country must be at least $30,000 a year. The population is thrifty. Mr. Cullman is still going on to bring immigrants there upon the contract which he made with the railroad company, and there is not a more respectable or thrifty community in the State of Alabama than that. I have always pointed to it with pride as an evidence of the fact that we had within us the elements of prosperity and a disposition to encourage the migration of people into our State.

Now I desire to protect that colony and the contracts made for its settlement. I desire also to protect similar arrangements that are made in the State of Alabama, particularly in Lauderdale County, on a very valuable tract of land there of which General Jackson was once the owner and upon which there is assembling now quite a large colony of Germans, and indeed throughout the whole valley of the Tennessee River in North Alabama there is growing up a strong German population.

Those people make arrangements with each other. They send back to the Fatherland and there they make contracts for laborers and families to come over. They agree that they will supply them for a certain time with provisions and with farming implements. They of course are entitled to take from the railway company under Mr. Cullman's contract a certain proportion of land, for which they are to pay in installments that are postponed.

I do not wish to chill or break down an industry in my State of which I am so justly proud as I am of that; and yet this bill can not fail to do it, and no man can point out how it can fail to destroy all similar enterprises in Alabama.

I should like to know by what right the Congress of the United States undertakes to say to a State of this Federal Union, "You shall not bring over population into your State, honest immigration, for permanent settlement," unless it may be persons who are diseased and therefore not fit to come to any community, or criminals. But suppose the State of Alabama wants to import paupers into her borders; suppose her resources are sufficient to justify her in saying to the pauper communities of foreign countries, "Come here and we can furnish you a home, and instead of your remaining paupers during the remainder of your lives you can get to be thrifty people." I want to know what Senator can lay his hand upon the power that is given to him under the Constitution of the United States to say to the State of Alabama, "You shall not do it; although you may legalize such contracts and out of your treasury pay a bonus to have people come into your midst, we can prohibit you from having it done."

But suppose you have the power; we are now more than a hundred years old, and our States have grown with great rapidity. There are millions and millions of people in this country at this day whose forefathers were brought here under contract in some form or other. Senators have alluded in debate here to the fact that men were brought from abroad who were unable to pay their passage-money across the ocean, and were put up upon the block and sold in order to pay the passage-money; and those men were the founders of excellent families in the United States at this time.

Why is it that we should reverse the great policy which has brought about such useful results throughout the length and breadth of this whole country, and why should we lay our hands upon the States of this Union and say to them, "You shall not import labor here; you shall not have your agencies to go abroad; you shall not offer to any person an inducement to come to your States; you shall remain in your present state of barrenness and nakedness until you have grown population upon your own lands to occupy the whole country and fill it up?" Why shall we reverse that? Shall we do it for the mere sake of gratifying any set of men in the United States who feel that in the particular locality where they live there is an overcrowded state of labor?

The Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] has reminded the Senate that in his part of the United States, and it is equally so in the part that I have the honor to represent here, there is a great want of labor and population in some departments of business. Your men who are going to the South now to cut down the pineries there for the purpose of manufacturing them into lumber, and who are making a great deal of money out of it, and I trust will make a great deal of money, are eager for labor. They are anxious to transfer their industries from some worn-out or exhausted fields in the North and the Northwest to go to the South, and they are anxious for labor. I do not feel disposed to repress the desire of those men to go there and make money and build up that State, yet this bill does it.

What is the pretext now that has been urged for the bill? Let us look at it in the light of honest truth. It is that some Hungarians and Italians have been brought here by railway and coal-mining companies and perhaps by a few of the rougher manufacturing companies in large numbers under contracts of hire; that they come, and they are a filthy, dirty set; they remain but a short time until they work out their contract, and then they take their money, as the Chinese used to do, and they go back home. Instead of coming right to the question that we met in the case of the Chinese and saying to the Hungarian Government and to the Italian Government, "Your lazzaroni and your paupers and your criminals are being collected and sent to this country under labor contracts, under a sort of boss or cooly system; we object and protest against it, and we are going to legislate them out of this country," the President of the United States will recommend, or if he does not some Senator will recommend by a bill he introduces, that Hungarians and Italians shall be excluded from the United States for the reason that I state, that after having tried them experimentally we find that they are an unfit class of people to come into this land. Senators in their eagerness to gratify a supposed desire on the part of certain influential people or societies to control the labor market of this country, instead of confining the application of their law to the evil which they mention, spread it over all foreign immigration, and old Scotland, Wales, England, Germany, and France, that have furnished us millions of our most enlightened and excellent people, are put under the ban by this legislation along with Italy and Hungary. We find in the evil which came in from Italy and from Austria a pretext for attacking all the foreign immigration to this country and putting every bit of it on the same footing with the cooly system.

That is all that is complained of here. Why not bring in your bill to attack the very people you complain of? Why spread it all over foreign countries when you admit that the evil exists only in certain localities and in reference to certain people?

I beg to remind Senators that while they are insulting the Irish people, and the English, and the Scotch, and the Welsh, and the Germans, and the French, by this measure, they need not lock themselves up in the security that they may feel that they are pandering to a sentiment which will support them for offices hereafter. No, sir, the reaction will come from those great masses of population, and they will make the Senate of the United States feel their weight when they come to resent this insult to great states and communities and races of men, because the Senate has not got the courage to pick out the people that it wants to attack.

Mr. President, I appreciate the peril that I put myself in by daring to attack anything at all that appears to have the sanction of the great masses of certain classes of people who are organized in societies in this country; but I appeal to their honor and to their sense of justice. When they come to realize that Senators are here willing to serve them at the expense of justice and reason, they will turn to me with a welcome hand as they turn their back coldly upon those who are afraid to do what they know is right.

There is but one way to manage a matter of this kind, and that is to find where the evil is, and to strike at that, get through with the business, and then let it alone. It is quite a disagreeable thing to do under any circumstances; but when it is admitted on all hands that we are not suffering from Ireland, or England, or Wales, or Scotland, or Germany, or France, but that we are suffering only from Hungary and Italy, let us reduce our attack to the point from whence the injury comes, and not include all classes of people abroad on that account.

It has been argued in the course of the debate upon this measure that Chicago and New York, perhaps other large cities in the American Union, were being endangered, at least very much agitated, by the communistic expressions of certain societies found in their neighborhoods, and because certain communists, like Herr Most and Justus Schwab and O'Donovan Rossa and the like, have organized their secret societies in hostility to the whole human family, and have perpetrated wrongs and given advice and encouragement to the perpetrators of wrongs and injustice, murder and arson, in a way to shock the sensibilities of any man in the world, and every man in the world—because they have done that an argument is adduced why the bill should become a law.

The Congress of the United States proposes to punish all the great nations of Europe and disgrace those people by its solemn declaration because they have sent to us in one way and another a Herr Most and a Justus Schwab and an O'Donovan Rossa and the like. The injustice of that is simply inexpressible. Are those the honest workingmen of foreign countries who come here thus to plot treason against human life, against women and children, to plot assassination and arson? Are they the men who come here to toil and to labor? No, sir; when you denounce the importation of laborers under contracts from foreign countries, you do not touch Herr Most or Justus Schwab or O'Donovan Rossa. The utmost of their labors is in setting up the beer upon the counters of their saloons, editing newspapers, and preaching all manner of outrageous encouragement to vice and crime in the country. That is the extent of their labor.

A bill is brought in here and we are informed in the argument that in order to reach malefactors like these you strike at the whole honest, industrious laboring classes of foreign countries. That is your bill, and that is the way you do it. You insult labor by associating it with those malefactors, by identifying it with them, and saying that it is necessary, in order to keep such men as those out of the country, to prevent honest, industrious laborers from coming here.

I have not any doubt that the bill will pass; it will rush through this House as it did through another. It is admitted to be an ill-begotten and a misshaped thing. The framers of the bill when speaking on the floor, some of the ablest lawyers in the Senate, have said that it was a crude, unsatisfactory bill; and yet the Senate is going to pass a crude and an unsatisfactory bill. What pressure is there upon us, either of time or opportunity, or from outside through political influence, or otherwise, to cause us to dash to a conclusion in this case and to pass a confessedly crude, ill-shaped, unsatisfactory bill?

Why can not the Senate take time to pass a decent bill upon this question, not one denounced out of the mouths of its own friends and apologized for as one that is laboring under such an immense pressure of public demand as that the Senate can not wait to put it into shape? The country will inquire of us about our haste in this matter. They will want to know why it is that we did not have time to prepare a better bill, but prepared one in such a form as that its own friends could not refrain from denouncing it as a crude and an ill-shaped measure.

These States will want to know of us, if we vote down this amendment, why it is that we deny to them the power to conduct their own municipal affairs. What is it that most concerns the States of the American Union at this time after many of their most majestic powers have been trampled to earth and their real sovereignty has been rebuked until it is ashamed to show itself in the councils of the country, and Senators are almost afraid to avow that they are from States, or that they represent sovereignties? What power is it that most deeply concerns the States now in the condition almost of orphanage in respect of their former inheritance of glory and power from our ancestors? The municipal power. Go to the Supreme Court of the United States, and once in a while you will find an opinion coming from that august body in which they declare that States have a right to exercise certain municipal powers.

What are among the municipal powers of a State of this Union? One is to judge of the people that shall come into it; and unless there is some great and pervading national view of the question that excludes a people from coming here, you can not prevent them from going to any particular State of this Union, nor can you prevent the States of this Union from inviting them into their midst.

The State of Alabama, if she has the money, can vote lawfully and properly $100 per capita to every immigrant that shall come to her borders from the State of New York; she has a perfect right to induce them to come there. That right you are going to take away from her in this bill. I propose now that this law shall not apply to an agent of the State, authorized by law, acting under the law of the State, who shall make contracts for the importation of labor, and in connection with those contracts shall offer inducements such, for instance, as to say, "If you come to the State of Alabama we will see that your family is supported for a year after the time that you get there in order that you may get a chance to live, get acquainted with the people, and get used to the laws of the country and to its climate."

I propose that we shall not interfere with a State when she is honestly engaged in getting a migration of people into her borders in that way; and I propose also that where societies or individuals desire to import people for permanent settlement in the country, they may connect with their propositions to this effect the reward to be held out to the immigrant, saying to him, or to her, or to the family, "Come to my colony," as Cullman has said to the colonists who settled in that county in Alabama, "Come to my colony that I have prepared for you, and you shall have your land for good, and you shall have your expenses advanced to you or paid to you; you shall have provisions for a certain length of time; you shall have animals to plow with and tools for the cultivation of the soil." Is there any reason why we should cut off these privileges or these benefits? My amendment provides that where the immigrant is coming in good faith for permanent settlement this law shall not apply to him.

Without saying more, I ask the Senate to vote on it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. BUTLER called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, can the amendment be divided?

Mr. MILLER, of California. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks the amendment is capable of division after the word "States." Does the Senator desire that it be divided?

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask that it be divided.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question will be first put on the first branch of the amendment, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

This act shall not apply to any agent of a State, acting under the authority of law, who shall induce immigration to such State from any country in Europe, or from Great Britain, Canada, Mexico, or any Central or South American state.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to this branch of the amendment.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to inquire of the Senators who support this amendment if the State agents they speak of bring immigration to this country under contract to labor? If there are no such contracts made by the agents of States, what is the use of making this addition? It may be a troublesome addition to the bill, for under the guise of the action of agents of States these same contracts may be entered into and the evil perpetuated.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that in my own State we have colonies of foreigners, and they all come under contract. We have in a dozen counties of our State most flourishing colonies established and brought here by State agents.

Mr. BLAIR. For whom do they work when they get here?

Mr. WILLIAMS. They organize in Europe; somebody in Europe contracts with them; they buy immense bodies of land, as they have done in my State already. There are several large settlements of Swiss.

some of Swedes, some of Norwegians. Men make contracts with the immigrants and pay their expenses out, saying, "You shall have so much land and you shall work and out of your wages pay the money advanced to you."

Mr. BLAIR. Are the parties who enter into these contracts abroad agents of the State itself?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No, sir; the parties are usually foreigners.

Mr. BLAIR. Then they are not covered by that amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But the inducements are held out by the agents of the States, and they are brought to particular localities according to the price of land and the price of labor, as described to them. They come in under these inducements. They have already a dozen colonies established in Kentucky which have been making the land blossom like the rose.

Mr. MORGAN. There is the colony of Rugby, in Tennessee, another very important colony of that description.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the first branch of the amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. I dislike very much to engage in the discussion of the bill at this late hour. I have been very much in favor of the bill all along, and I hoped I might be allowed to cast a silent vote upon its passage; but the proposition made by the Senator from Alabama so misconceives, as I understand, the objects and aims of this bill, that I feel I should not do justice to myself and the vote I shall cast here if I did not say something upon this subject. The divided proposition now before the Senate is to exempt from the operation of this bill the acts of State agents in introducing and inducing——

Mr. RANSOM. I ask——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield?

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly.

Mr. RANSOM. I ask if it would be more agreeable to my friend from Mississippi to speak to-morrow? If so, with his consent I will move an adjournment.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not desire to occupy the attention of the Senate long. Of course I do not want to keep the Senate here when it wants to adjourn.

Mr. RANSOM. It is altogether at the pleasure of the Senator himself.

Mr. GEORGE. I have not a great deal to say. ["Go on!"] I will go on, Mr. President.

I mean to say that there is not a single provision in the bill which authorizes the amendment, or that portion of the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama—which authorizes it to be offered as an exception to the provisions of the bill. There is nothing in the bill which prohibits a State from having its agency in Europe or in any foreign country to induce foreigners to come within its borders and settle there; there is nothing in the bill which prohibits a State from offering moneyed inducements, landed inducements to any foreigner or alien who will settle within its borders.

The argument of the Senator from Alabama upon that branch of his proposition was a mere attack upon a man of straw. He conjured up in his fruitful imagination a difficulty which does not exist in the bill, and then struck it down. There is no attack upon State sovereignty; there is no attack upon any action which any State in this Union may see proper to take for the purpose of enlarging or increasing her population.

The whole scope of this bill is directed not against inducements held out by States to increase their population, not against inducements held out by individuals or corporations in States for the purpose of increasing the population of those States. The whole point of the bill is this, and there is not a single provision in it which looks beyond this, and that is, you shall not introduce people into this country under a contract previously made to serve somebody after they get here.

Mr. MORGAN. The bill does not say so.

Mr. GEORGE. That is the meaning of the bill, and there is not a provision in it which goes beyond it. It is simply a provision against introducing servile labor here.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator will indulge me a moment——

Mr. GEORGE. I will.

Mr. MORGAN. I will say to him that my construction of the language of this bill is just as candid as his. I am not as good a lawyer as he, I never was on any bench or anything like that, but I believe that there is not a lawyer in the Senate who will take this bill down deliberately and study it over and will not say that there is no provision in it that the labor shall be for the person making the employment. It is not in it; and if we have got to amend it so that it has to go back to the House, why not make the bill so that it shall be clearly intelligible?

Mr. GEORGE. That is a very immaterial difficulty. I do not know whether I said that the party was to be under contract to work for the particular party contracting with him, but it makes no real difference, so far as the evil is concerned, which this bill is intended to remedy, whether the contract be to work for the party making the contract with the foreigner, or whether it be to work for somebody else. In either view it is equally servile labor.

Mr. MORGAN. Now will the Senator indulge me again?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORGAN. Does not the Constitution of the United States expressly prohibit any importation of servile labor into this country or any servitude of any man at all? The Senator does not want to assist the Constitution of the United States by a bill.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not know that there is any provision in the Constitution of the United States upon the introduction of any sort of labor into this country. There is a provision in the Constitution of the United States which prohibits slavery within the limits of the Union, and it is the object of this bill to prevent a species of slavery, not exactly legal slavery.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator allow me a moment to ask him the definition of "slavery;" whether he considers labor performed under a voluntary contract to be servile labor? If he does there is no man who works in this whole Union who is not a slave. Everybody works in pursuance of a contract.

Mr. GEORGE. The difference between servile labor or slave labor and labor performed under a contract made with an ignorant foreigner, unacquainted with our language, unacquainted with the price of labor here, is very little in its practical effect. It is very true that this ignorant foreigner can not be held by any law to a specific performance of his contract; but being ignorant of our laws, being ignorant of our language, having made a contract to serve here at a price or for wages largely less than is paid our own laborers, he serves out his contract without knowing what his rights are, and in doing that he inflicts as great an injury upon the other laborers of this country as if he was a slave.

Now, Mr. President, I want to vote for this bill with a fair understanding of what it means. I do not want to be mistaken about its meaning I think the argument of the Senator from Alabama was based upon a misconception of its meaning, and I rose simply for the purpose of contradicting that impression and that construction. I say, sir, and I challenge the Senator from Alabama to put his finger upon the clause which contradicts that, that there is no provision of this bill which prohibits the State of Alabama or any other State from introducing as many foreigners as she pleases within her limits. There is no provision in this bill which prohibits the State of Alabama or the State of Texas or any other State from giving pecuniary or landed inducements to foreigners to come and settle within her borders.

The sole provision upon that subject is to prevent the introduction of persons who are under contract to serve either the person with whom the contract was made or some other person for whom they act after they arrive here. If the bill can stand upon that, then it is right; but it must not be put down upon the idea that it does something beyond that, for it does nothing more than that; and because I think that is the true construction of this bill I shall vote against the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. RANSOM rose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANSOM. If my friend from Alabama will yield to me, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. BLAIR. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion. We can finish the bill to-night; and the condition of the business——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order. Does the Senator from North Carolina withdraw his motion?

Mr. RANSOM. No, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. HOAR. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 23, nays 26; as follows:

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not wish to delay the Senate by a long speech, though I have no doubt they refused to adjourn in order that they might have the benefit of my remarks.

I candidly disagree with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] in his construction of this bill. Perhaps I have no just cause for the disagreement at all, but as I have it, it is for the want of power to comprehend it. A contract, whether it is express or implied, under this act, whether it is parol or special, whether it is made by a State or the agent of a State, or by any other person, is not only void, but it is made punishable by law if it is made previous to the immigration of such alien or foreigner, and he is made to perform labor or service of any kind in the United States, its Territories, or the District of Columbia.

It is not required to be a contract made with the employer abroad; not a contract to labor for somebody else or for the employer, but a contract to labor in the United States at any kind of labor or service to be performed in the United States. You can take any person or any number of persons, it makes no difference what their character may be, and prepay their passage, or make any agreement or contract with them that they will come here and remain, it may be to take out naturalization papers and vote, or to do any other thing; but if you put it into that contract that they are to labor in the United States, then the contract is not only made void by this statute, but the party who makes it is amenable to a penalty to be recovered in a qui tam action, I suppose it is, in some court of the United States, and a forfeiture of $1,000 to the person with whom the contract is made.

I do not wish to be hypercritical about this, but I think it is one of the duties of the Senate to make laws that are so plain in their meaning that they can not be misunderstood. The honorable Senator from Mississippi I think concedes that the amendment I have offered here, the part now under consideration at least, is a proper amendment, a proper thing to do; but he says that it is unnecessary, barely unnecessary. This bill has been descanted upon, as I have remarked before, by several Senators, and they have taken occasion to say that it was a crude bill.

The Senator from Ohio who is in front of me now said the other day that he did not attach much importance to the words, but he would like the words "special or parol" stricken out of this bill. The Senator did not see the value of those words in this bill. I myself had pointed out that there was some occasion for misunderstanding in consequence of the presence of those words in the bill. Other Senators have criticised it. The honorable Senator who occupies the chair now [Mr. PLATT], if I remember, when he took the floor this afternoon for the purpose of advocating this bill led off by saying that the bill was such a one as a body of lawyers would not have prepared, and the bill ought to have undergone the scrutiny, if I understood him aright, of the Judiciary Committee, or some committee of this body that could put it in shape.

I but participate in the common sentiment when I declare in my place in the Senate that I can not understand this bill as the Senator from Mississippi understands it. His vision about it is so much clearer than mine that I regret that I can not participate in the very lucid manner in which he understands this bill to his own satisfaction. To me it is cloudy and murky and muddy; to me it is ill-shaped, and it does not express any correct or clear idea.

It may not have been the purpose of the committee in reporting this bill to prevent a man from laboring after he got here, and yet apter words could not have been used for that very purpose, even to prevent him from laboring after he gets here, for if the contract is to perform labor or service of any kind in the United States, its Territories, or the District of Columbia, that contract subjects the party to a penalty if he prepays, or assists, or encourages the migration or importation, as the language of the bill is, of the person with whom the contract was made.

I must be pardoned under all these circumstances for venturing, presumptuously, if you please, to draw the attention of the Senate to this language and to try to correct it by the amendment which I have had the honor to introduce. I yield to the honorable Senator from Mississippi, and his superior capacity as a lawyer over me, very cheerfully; it is nothing to my discredit to do that, but——

Mr. GEORGE. I never asked it.

Mr. MORGAN. No; but, Mr. President, it strikes me that the honorable Senator in his zeal for this particular bill has lost sight of the real construction of its language. Why shall the Senate of the United States send out a lumbering affair like this into the world for the criticism of the bar of the United States? Sir, they would laugh at you when you have done it. When you try to bring your qui tam action based upon it, the bar with a broad smile of laughter will wonder why it was that the Senate of the United States had ever got its consent to put before the country a form of words that expresses anything in the world but the meaning attributed to it by the Senator from Mississippi.

Now I will take the other section:

That all contracts or agreements, express or implied, parol or special, which may hereafter be made by and between any person, company, partnership, or corporation, doing business within the United States, and any foreigner or foreigners, alien or aliens, to perform labor or service, or having reference to the performance of service or labor by any person of any kind in the United States, its Territories, or the District of Columbia, previous to the migration or importation of the person or persons whose labor or service is contracted for into the United States, shall be utterly void and of no effect.

There is no stipulation that the contract shall be for the benefit of the employer. If it is for the benefit of anybody whatsoever, that contract is denounced as a contract that is void. The third section is:

That for every violation of any of the provisions of section 1 of this act the person, partnership, company, or corporation violating the same, by assisting, encouraging, or soliciting the migration or importation of any alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, into the United States, its Territories—

There is the act by which this law is to be violated.

Mr. BLAIR. I beg the Senator's pardon; that is not the act.

Mr. MORGAN. What is the act?

Mr. BLAIR. If the Senator will read further he will know.

Mr. MORGAN. I beg the Senator's pardon; then he has two acts.

Mr. BLAIR. Not at all.. Let the Senator read on and he will see what the act is.

Mr. MORGAN—

That for every violation of any of the provisions of section 1 of this act the person, partnership, company, or corporation violating the same, by assisting, encouraging, or soliciting the migration or importation of any alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, into the United States, its Territories, or the District of Columbia, to perform labor or service of any kind under contract or agreement, express or implied, parol or special, with such alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners——

Mr. BLAIR. "Previous." There is still more.

Mr. MORGAN. There is more rigmarole, of course.

Mr. BLAIR. If there is, it is no reason the Senator should misconceive the bill by failing to read it.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not misconceive the bill by failing to read it. It is the reading of the bill that causes any man to misconceive what can be the meaning of it—previous to becoming residents or citizens of the United States, shall forfeit and pay for every such offense the sum of $1,000.

Now, let us see what are the objectionable words in that third section, "the violation of the provisions of this act," the general clause. How is a man to violate them? What is to be a violation?

By assisting, encouraging, or soliciting the migration or importation of any alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, into the United States, its Territories, or the District of Columbia, to perform labor or service of any kind under contract or agreement, express or implied, parol or special, with such alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners.

That is the whole of it. Now I have got every word out of it that means anything.

Mr. BLAIR. No, not all—"previous to becoming residents."

Mr. MORGAN. That merely designates the time at which the offense is to become complete. We are describing an offense for which there is a very heavy penalty here. The last thing that is in the description of it, but the first thing to be considered, is at what time was this offense committed? It was committed previous to the alien or foreigner becoming a resident or citizen of the United States. That is the time, "previous to becoming residents or citizens of the United States." Thus we have got the time fixed. In what manner is this violation to occur in order that the penalty may be inflicted upon the party violating the act?

By assisting, encouraging, or soliciting the migration or importation of any alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, into the United States, its Territories, or the District of Columbia, to perform labor or service of any kind under contract or agreement, express or implied.

If you assist, or encourage, or solicit the migration or importation of any alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, into any part of the United States to perform labor or service of any kind under contract or agreement, express or implied, parol or special, with such alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, then you violate the act. That is to say, you must have a contract with the alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, that he or they will come into the United States, or some part of it, to perform service or labor of some kind under contract or agreement, express or implied, parol or special.

If I solicit by writing a letter or by sending a telegram or otherwise saying to a man abroad, "There is a chance here for you to labor and get good wages; you have nothing to do but to come here and perform the labor in the United States; there is plenty of it; I do not name the man you have got to labor with; it is not with me; it is not with any particular individual; but I inform you that there is a good labor market here, first rate, and I encourage you to immigrate yourself or become immigrated or imported into this country for the purpose of doing that work under contract, and I give you a guarantee that when you come here, if you are dissatisfied, I will pay your expenses, I am entirely willing in order that you shall have the benefit, my friend, not my kinsman, of a good labor market; that you come here and do this work, and I am even willing to make a guarantee you shall be whole and sound;" that would cover the whole act beyond question.

Do we intend to do that? Is that the way in which we intend to prevent Hungarian and Italian bandits and lazzaroni from coming into this country by putting a trammel upon all freedom of traffic in respect to the importation of labor of every kind and character? That is not the meaning, say the committee, and yet that is the meaning according to the broadest interpretation that can be put upon this act.

Sir, I am not wrong about this. If an agent of the State of Alabama shall go abroad and say "the State of Alabama will pay your expenses, or will advance your expenses, to come into her borders and settle on her unoccupied land"—I will take the swamp lands, if you please, that are granted out and out to the State of Alabama—"if you will come here and labor upon these lands, if you will come and assist the State of Alabama in performing the duty she has got to perform of ditching and draining these lands in order to perform the duties the Government has put upon her, we will advance to you the money, and out of your wages you can pay us back," the Senator from Mississippi will say that it was not intended to prevent the State from doing that; and yet there it is in the bill, and until the bill is amended it will be in there, and all of the argumentation that can be brought to bear upon it will not get it out of the bill. There is nothing that will get it out but an amendment, and it was this very perplexity which disturbed the minds of Senators so much that almost every one who has risen to advocate the bill except the Senator from Mississippi, who seems to have great satisfaction with it, has got up and explained that the bill was crude and imperfect. It is, and I am trying to get it, as far as I am concerned, for the protection of the people that I represent here, into a certain shape which shall exclude a certain interpretation that is perfectly legitimate on the face of this bill. That is the whole object of my amendment. I know the bill is going to pass; I do not wish to delay it, but I do wish to make it so that the State of Alabama at least will not suffer a detriment in consequence of the imperfect form in which it is.

I wish to ask the Senator one more question about this. There is no punishment here except for the employer. The party employed, the party who comes here to labor in competition with our American laborers, is not punished at all for coming in violation of this act. Whenever he is landed at the wharf in Boston, or in New York, or in Philadelphia, the ship-owner or the ship-master becomes responsible in very heavy damages to be paid to the party who informs. When he gets out into the country, if he can find some man who by contract, express or implied, special or parol, in some manner or other, has given encouragement to this migration or this importation, you can get hold of him and you can punish him; and if he happens to be the agent of a State acting under State laws, it makes no difference, you can punish him also, but you can not punish the party who comes here.

You can not punish the nuisance; you can not put the nuisance on board ship and send it away. You have no law to prevent its landing here. You allow this nuisance to be landed. You allow it to scatter itself out through the community, and then you go to hunting up the man to whom by his express or implied agreement it can be imputed that he had some agency by encouragement, or advice, or persuasion, or the advancement of money, to induce this nuisance to come over here. That is the shape of the bill.

Now, sir, suppose that your labor-broker happens to reside in London and he wants to make his money out of this immigration? Suppose, like the six Chinese merchants in San Francisco, or like the boss system of introducing coolies or inferior labor in any part of the world, they make their organization and all their arrangements aboard? A man in London organizes a force of a thousand laborers, we will suppose, and he says: "Now, I have got no contract at all, but I know that they are building a railway between Baltimore and New York and they are in a great hurry to get it through to compete with the Pennsylvania Railroad;" or, "I know they are digging a railway through the Alleghany Mountains to get to a new coal-field;" or, "I know they are building a railway to connect the Southern States with Mexico, or elsewhere. Now I bind you here in London, a thousand of you, that you will go to the United States, and you will go to that railway company, and you will offer yourselves for hire; and they will give you a dollar a day, $30 a month, and find you with everything, and after you have earned your money, your families remaining in Italy or Hungary, with every inducement for you to return after you have earned your money, you will bring me back 5 per cent. or 10 per cent. of the amount you receive to pay me for the advance I make in getting you there, besides paying me back the advance I make." There is a contract made in a foreign country, the Senator says. It is a contract completed between the employer and the laborer. Is there anything in this bill that prevents its being executed in the United States? None whatever. This bill clearly abandons the question of brokerage.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to say right there that there is this in the bill which prevents it being executed in the United States, that agreement is declared by the bill to be utterly null and void and not binding on the party?

Mr. MORGAN. What does your foreign broker care about that? It is a good contract in England, a good contract in London, perfectly good between the employer and the employé, and the employer has no more risk there than he has here. If a man makes a contract in the United States that these men will come over here and work for him, he has got to take the risk of their performing the contract after they get here, of course, and the risk is no greater with the man who makes such a contract in New York than it would be if he made it in London.

Now here is a case that is totally unprovided for, and the whole door of mischief that is intended to be closed out by this bill is left wide open. I can go to London if I am so minded, or I can go to Rome in Italy, and I can make a contract for 10,000 Hungarians or 10,000 Italians, and send them here to work upon a railroad in the United States. The railroad contractors would have nothing in the world to do with it, no complicity with it at all. I can merely throw that amount of labor organized under overseers and bosses upon that railroad track for the purpose of being there employed, with as perfect certainty that they will be employed, as much as a man has that he can sell sugar at twenty pounds for a dollar when his neighbor is selling sixteen pounds for a dollar; and if this law can be thoroughly violated by a contract and an agreement and an organization made abroad, we shall get the whole evil upon us without the power of restraining or correcting it at all.

The honorable Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] suggested to me to-day that this bill was all in the wrong direction. If we want to have a success of it the thing to do is not only to punish the employer but to punish the party who is employed; not merely to make his contract void, so that he can not enforce it, but lock him up in jail if he comes here and lands upon these shores under a contract to be performed in the United States. Then you get the man who is the real party to it. This bill, instead of doing that, opens the way to his coming here absolutely, and if the employer happens to be an American or a man who is under our jurisdiction we bribe him by giving him $500 to peach on his employer, put the money in his pocket, and go back to Europe a rich man for that country. That is the whole case, and yet this is a bill about which so much is said and about which every Senator's judgment is challenged when he presumes to make a criticism upon it.

Mr. RANSOM (at 6 o'clock p. m.) If the Senator will yield, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANSOM. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. HOAR. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary called the roll.

Mr. GROOME. I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER].

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—20.

Beck,	Hampton,	Lamar,	Ransom,
Butler,	Harris,	McPherson,	Saulsbury,
Call,	Jackson,	Maxey,	Slater,
Coke,	Jonas,	Morgan,	Vest,
Colquitt,	Jones of Nevada,	Pendleton,	Williams.

NAYS—25.

Allison,	Edmunds,	Manderson,	Sawyer,
Blair,	Frye,	Mitchell,	Sewell,
Brown,	George,	Morrill,	Sherman,
Cameron of Wis.,	Harrison,	Palmer,	Wilson.
Conger,	Hoar,	Pike,
Cullom,	Ingalls,	Platt,
Dawes,	McMillan,	Pugh,

ABSENT—31.

Aldrich,	Fair,	Hill,	Plumb,
Bayard,	Farley,	Jones of Florida,	Riddleberger,
Bowen,	Garland,	Kenna,	Sabin,
Camden,	Gibson,	Lapham,	Vance,
Cameron of Pa.,	Gorman,	Logan,	Van Wyck,
Chace,	Groome,	Mahone,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Hale,	Miller of Cal.,	Walker.
Dolph,	Hawley,	Miller of N. Y.,

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I have just one more point to make on this bill.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask the Senator to make one point which I shall suggest, if he sees it as I do. As I understand this bill the unlawfulness is not in the introduction of this labor, but in the introduction of labor under a contract of employment made abroad. Now, suppose we go to Germany or England and we hire 10,000 men to come to the United States under no contract whatever, but on an assurance that when they get here they will be employed and they are employed when they reach here; they get here lawfully; the contract is made after they get here and not in Europe. Is not that contract a lawful contract?

Mr. MORGAN. I do not think the bill denounces a contract in that form at all. The Senator from New Hampshire called my attention to the fact that this contract must be made previous to the importation or immigration of such alien or aliens, &c., to be void. If made subsequent, as a matter of course it is a good contract. It must be made previous to their importation, previous to their starting to come to the United States. Well, Mr. John Smith makes a contract and he brings a thousand of these people to this country.

The moment they are landed Mr. John Smith becomes liable to this penalty and the contract becomes void; but Mr. John Jones who stands by—there are always plenty of gentlemen of that name to illustrate anything in the way of talent and ability—Mr. John Jones stands by and he says to this same thousand people, "My contract is made with you now subsequent to your coming here, and not before; I will take you and put you to work, just as Mr. John Smith intended to do." Mr. John Smith's contract is void because it was made before the importation; Mr. John Jones's contract is valid because it was made afterward.

That is a perfectly plain case. The Senator from New Hampshire emphasized the fact that the contract must be made before the importation in order that it shall be void. All right, they are brought here under a void contract, and the man that really wants their labor looks around Castle Garden and he says, "Here is a large number of laborers coming in; I am on the qui vive; I am looking out for them; here are a thousand of you; I will take you all; my contract is perfectly valid," because, as the Senator from Texas suggests, it is not the importation of laborers that is prohibited; that is not the point; but they must come under a contract made before the importation commenced. That is the only point I want to make on this bill now, and I am satisfied to let the matter alone.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama. A division having been called for, the question is on the first branch of the amendment on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GROOME (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER]. If he were here, I should vote "yea" upon this proposition and he would vote "nay."

Mr. MANDERSON (when the name of Mr. JONES, of Florida, was called). The Senator from Florida [Mr. JONES] was paired with me on this question, but the pair has been transferred to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN].

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). On this amendment and on the bill I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. If he were present, he would vote "yea" on this amendment and I would vote "nay."

Mr. RANSOM (when his name was called). I am paired on this amendment with the Senator from California [Mr. MILLER]. I do not know how he would vote. I would vote "yea," if he were here.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. ALLISON. I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD]. Otherwise I should vote "nay."

Mr. JACKSON. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] requested me to announce his pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN]. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND], if here, would vote for the amendment.

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—18.

Beck,	Coke,	Jonas,	Slater,
Brown,	Colquitt,	McPherson,	Vest,
Butler,	Hampton,	Maxey,	Williams.
Call,	Harris,	Morgan,
Cockrell,	Jackson,	Saulsbury,

NAYS—24.

Blair,	Frye,	McMillan,	Platt,
Cameron of Wis.,	George,	Manderson,	Plumb,
Conger,	Harrison,	Mitchell,	Sawyer,
Cullom,	Hoar,	Morrill,	Sewell,
Dawes,	Ingalls,	Palmer,	Sherman,
Edmunds,	Jones of Nevada,	Pike,	Wilson.

ABSENT—34.

Aldrich,	Farley,	Kenna,	Ransom,
Allison,	Garland,	Lamar,	Riddelberger,
Bayard,	Gibson,	Lapham,	Sabin,
Bowen,	Gorman,	Logan,	Vance,
Camden,	Groome,	Mahone,	Van Wyck,
Cameron of Pa.,	Hale,	Miller of Cal.,	Voorhees,
Chace,	Hawley,	Miller of N. Y.,	Walker.
Dolph,	Hill,	Pendleton,
Fair,	Jones of Florida,	Pugh,

So the first branch of the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll upon agreeing to the remainder of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. The Chair understands as of course that the yeas and nays having been ordered upon the whole amendment the order applies to the last division of the amendment upon which the vote is now to be taken.

Mr. HARRIS. What is the remainder of the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Nor shall it apply to any person who in good faith shall assist persons or families to come from any of those countries for the purpose of permanent settlement in any State or Territory of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLISON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD].

Mr. GROOME (when Mr. GORMAN'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. GORMAN] is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE]. I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I should vote "nay" if I were not paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY].

Mr. RANSOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from California [Mr. MILLER]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SAWYER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 17, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—17.

Beck,	Colquitt,	Lapham,	Vest,
Brown,	Hampton,	McPherson,	Williams.
Butler,	Harris,	Maxey,
Call,	Jackson,	Morgan,
Coke,	Jonas,	Slater,

NAYS—23.

Blair,	George,	McMillan,	Platt,
Cameron of Wis.,	Harrison,	Manderson,	Plumb,
Conger,	Hill,	Mitchell,	Sewell,
Cullom,	Hoar,	Morrill,	Sherman,
Dawes,	Ingalls,	Palmer,	Wilson.
Edmunds,	Jones of Nevada,	Pike,

ABSENT—36.

Aldrich,	Fair,	Jones of Florida,	Ransom,
Allison,	Farley,	Kenna,	Riddleberger,
Bayard,	Frye,	Lamar,	Sabin,
Bowen,	Garland,	Logan,	Saulsbury,
Camden,	Gibson,	Mahone,	Sawyer,
Cameron of Pa.,	Gorman,	Miller of Cal.,	Vance,
Chace,	Groome,	Miller of N. Y.,	Van Wyck,
Cockrell,	Hale,	Pendleton,	Voorhees,
Dolph,	Hawley,	Pugh,	Walker.

So the second division of the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to inquire of the Senator from New Hampshire if it would not be just as convenient for him—I think it would be very much more convenient for the Senate—to vote to-morrow at 2 o'clock on this bill. It is very late in the evening, sir.

Mr. BLAIR. The objection I have to such an arrangement is that I have been notified by the Committee on Appropriations—I was notified by them to-day that they would interrupt us in the course of an hour or two after we began; and there will be an appropriation bill right on the back of this bill to-morrow.

Mr. BUTLER. I am satisfied that if the Senate were to agree to vote to-morrow, say at 2 o'clock, the Committee on Appropriations would not interfere with any arrangement of that sort.

Mr. BLAIR. If we can have unanimous consent to take the vote on the bill to-morrow at 2 o'clock I shall be quite willing to consent to an adjournment now.

Mr. MORRILL and others. Say 12 o'clock.

Mr. BLAIR. That would interfere with the business of the morning hour. We can not interfere with that.

Mr. HARRISON. The routine morning business will be over by 12 o'clock.

Mr. LAPHAM and others. Say 12 o'clock.

Mr. BLAIR. The bill will be in order as unfinished business at 1 o'clock, and if we can take the vote on the bill at 2 o'clock, it being understood that the hour from 1 to 2 o'clock will be given to its consideration, I should be very glad to make that arrangement, and I would request the Chair to ask unanimous consent for such an arrangement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire, at the request of the Senator from South Carolina, desires the Chair to ask if there can be unanimous consent that this bill shall be voted on to-morrow at 2 o'clock.

Mr. CONGER. Say at 12 o'clock. There will be no objection to that.

Mr. BLAIR. The bill will be the unfinished business at 1 o'clock.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire if it is understood that the bill is to be taken up at 1 o'clock to-morrow?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be the unfinished business at 1 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. BLAIR. The bill will go over as unfinished business. There will be no difficulty about its right of way if the Committee on Appropriations will keep off its hands, as I understand it will.

Mr CALL. That is satisfactory to me. I have one amendment to offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to the understanding that the vote on the bill shall be taken to-morrow at 2 o'clock? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask leave to submit an amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be printed. Does the Senator from South Carolina desire to have the amendment read?

Mr. BUTLER. I shall not insist upon its being read at this hour. I offer it as a substitute for the pending bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 17, 1885.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. JOHN S. LINDSAY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PATRICK V. DOLAN.

Mr. BREWER, of New York, from the Committee on Accounts, reported back favorably the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be requested to provide for the payment to Patrick V. Dolan in one of the general appropriation bills the difference between the pay as laborer and that of messenger, at the rate of $3.60 per day, from June 6, 1884, to June 30, 1885.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. BREWER, of New Jersey, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BAYNE. I rise, Mr. Speaker, to a privileged question. From what was said yesterday I inferred the rule which precludes the consideration of any business on the day for the suspension of the rules except motions to suspend the rules might possibly exclude the consideration of the appropriation bills during the last six days of the session. I understood from the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], whose attention I would like to have, that a motion would not be entertained by the Chair to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of appropriation bills if a recess should be taken on Monday from 5 o'clock until 8 o'clock or immediately after 5 o'clock, when the consideration of the suspension of the rules should cease, that a motion of that sort would not be entertained. If that be true, I take it a motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of appropriation bills during the last six days of the session would not be in order. I desire to know whether I am right in that or not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that question will properly come up in a parliamentary inquiry when the last six days of the session is reached. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. BAYNE. I rise to a privileged question. I desire to propose for reference to the Committee on Rules the following proposition:

Resolved, That clause 1 of Rule XXVIII be amended by adding thereto, "Provided, That it shall be in order at any time during the last six days of the session to consider general appropriation bills."

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. BAYNE. Why, it is in the interest of the business of your own committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has always been held to be a privileged question to receive and refer propositions to the Committee on Rules in reference to the business of the House.

Mr. WILSON. There are plenty of precedents for it.

Mr. HOLMAN. The proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is undoubtedly the rule now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks not. This proposition is introduced for reference to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. BAYNE. I will ask for its consideration at the present time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not in order.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I now demand the regular order of business.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE SAINT CROIX RIVER.

Mr. WASHBURN. I rise to submit a privileged report. I am directed by the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3258) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Saint Croix River at the most accessible point between Stillwater and Taylor's Falls, Minn., to submit the report which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The report of the committee of conference will be read.

The report was read at length.

Mr. WASHBURN. I move to concur in the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. ANDERSON. Where is the statement accompanying this report? I think the rule requires that a statement shall be made showing the effect of the various amendments agreed to by the committee of conference. I would like to hear that statement read if I am correct in my assumption that such a report is required by the rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is correct; the rule requires it.

Mr. ANDERSON. Then I should like to have that statement read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that no statement is furnished in connection with this report.

Mr. WASHBURN. I will state in a moment the changes which are made by the adoption of these amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands the gentleman from Kansas demands a submission of the statement required by the rule from the conferees.

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes, sir; and hereafter in all cases I give notice that I shall demand that statement. I do not know anything about this bill, but I propose that the conferees in all cases shall give us a statement as to the effect of the various amendments upon which they agree.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that since no statement accompanies this report it had better be withdrawn for the present.

Mr. WASHBURN. I will withdraw the report.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I demand the regular order.

Mr. COBB. I ask unanimous consent to take up from the Speaker's table House bill 7004 with a view to non-concurring in the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. NELSON. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the gentleman is now asking unanimous consent to take up a Senate bill and act upon amendments, which is not in order under the operation of the special rule without unanimous consent.

The gentleman from Illinois demands the regular order.

RANGE AND RANCH CATTLE TRAFFIC.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to submit a privileged report.

I am directed by the Committee on Commerce to report back a resolution submitted to that committee and ask its adoption.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to transmit to this House such information as he may be able to communicate at an early day in regard to the range and ranch cattle traffic of the Western, Northwestern, and Southwestern States and Territories, with special reference to the bearings of that traffic upon the international and foreign commerce of the United States.

Mr. KEIFER. Is this reported by a committee?

Mr. REAGAN. Yes, sir; unanimously reported by the Committee on Commerce.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. REAGAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois demands the regular order.

Pending that the Chair desires consent to lay before the House certain executive communications.

EMOLUMENTS OF CUSTOMS OFFICERS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with law, an abstract of emoluments of officers of customs service during the last fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGIA SHOALS, CAPE COD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Light-House Board, and asking an appropriation for an examination of Georgia Shoals, Cape Cod; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS, LYNCHBURG, VA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a recommendation of the Supervising Architect for an increase in the limit of cost of public building and site, Lynchburg, Va.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

TESTS OF SHIPS' COMPASSES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a resolution adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of New York, recommending the establishment in the principal seaports of the United States of stations for the determination of errors of compasses on iron and steel ships; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MOSES F. CARLETON.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour set apart for the consideration of bills, resolutions, &c., under the special rule begins at twenty-seven minutes past 11 o'clock.

The Clerk will report the unfinished business coming under this hour from the last day's session.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6089) for the relief of Moses F. Carleton.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that one minute remains for debate in favor of and five minutes against this bill.

Mr. GEDDES. I am informed that the objections have been withdrawn, and as far as I know there will be no objection to the bill. Under the circumstances I do not desire to occupy the remaining time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GEORGE D. WISE. When I took the floor on yesterday to object to this bill it was under a misapprehension. Since then I have conferred with the gentleman from Michigan, who calls it up; and hope the bill will pass.

Mr. HOLMAN. Has this bill been read?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill and report were both read on yesterday.

There being no objection to the consideration of the bill, it was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. YAPLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JAMES BELGER.

Mr. WAIT. Mr. Speaker, I call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 149) for the relief of Maj. James Belger.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That Maj. James Belger, a retired quartermaster in the United States Army, restored to his position as major and quartermaster by the act of March 3, 1871, be considered as having been continuously in the service from the 30th day of November, 1863; and the said James Belger is hereby declared entitled to all the rights, privileges, pay, emoluments, and promotion pertaining to such continuous service, deducting from pay due him the amount he has received while employed in the civil service subsequent to said 30th day of November, 1863; and the President is hereby authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to promote him to the rank to which his continuous service entitles him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Five minutes, under the rule, are allowed for debate on either side.

Mr. WAIT. I ask that the report made by the Committe on Military Affairs be read.

The Clerk commenced the reading of the report (by Mr. ROSECRANS), which is as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 149) for the relief of James Belger, submit the following report:

That Maj. James Belger, United States Army (retired), has the following record in the Army Register for 1884:

James Belger entered from State of New York in 1832; was private, corporal, sergeant, Company H, and sergeant-major Second United States Infantry, 7th November, 1832, to 15th October, 1838.

Second lieutenant, Sixth Infantry, October 15, 1838; accepted 15th October 1838.

First lieutenant February 27, 1843; captain, assistant quartermaster 18th June, 1846; accepted 26th August, 1846.

Acting major and quartermaster department 3d August, 1861.

Appointed colonel and additional aid-de-camp 3d July, 1862; accepted; out of service November 30, 1863.

Major quartermaster March 3, 1871; accepted April, 1871.

Retired 19th June, 1879; over sixty-two years of age.

2. That, being an officer of high standing for ability, integrity, and efficiency, he was placed in charge of the quartermaster's depot at Baltimore on account of its immense business of purchasing, of employing transports, and forwarding supplies and troops, one of the most important in the service. (See Affidavit A annexed.)

3. That while so employed his services were regarded as of such importance that the Government declined to allow him to accept a commission of major-general volunteers, which Governor Curtin, of Pennsylvania, desired him to accept, to command United States volunteers, Pennsylvania troops.

4. That he was also chief quartermaster of the middle department, under General R. C. Schenck, in addition to his duties as general depot quartermaster above named, and, under careful observation and criticism, performed the duties of that position so as to command General Schenck's entire confidence and approbation. (See General Schenck's letter of the 18th February, 1884, to chairman, hereto annexed, marked D.)

5. That in February, 1863, seeing in a Philadelphia newspaper its Washington correspondent's intimation that there was crookedness in the management of the quartermaster's department at Baltimore, he immediately applied to the War Department for a court of inquiry, although the newspaper in question in a subsequent issue disclaimed the statement aforenamed. (See A, annexed.)

6. That the Secretary of War sent for General Schenck to consult with him about the matter of the charges, and appeared to be strongly prejudiced against Belger, disposed to believe all the charges, and that instead of a court of inquiry a court-martial ought to be immediately ordered to try him on them.

"This (says General Schenck) I declined to do. I represented to him that such a trial could result in nothing but acquittal, and that the most thorough investigation would, in my opinion, discover not an act of corruption or serious irregularity on the part of the quartermaster, and that he would be found more sinned against than sinning. * * * I said I would rather be relieved from the command of my department than to order, against my judgment, a court-martial which I believed uncalled for and would be fruitless. I preferred, if there was to be a trial under such circumstances, it should be ordered by the Secretary himself or the President; and I remember, at the close of the conference, saying to the Secretary, 'If you do try Belger I think he will beat you.'" (See D, appended.)

In spite of the foregoing information and expressed judgment given to the Secretary, he ordered a general court-martial, composed of officers of high standing, and presided over by General E. A. Hitchcock, to try Major Belger, on a charge with thirteen specifications that, on various occasions, by doing business through certain agents, he paid more for coal and hire of vessels than the same could have been obtained for at the specified dates, by doing business through other parties; but in no specification was there the slightest intimation that Major Belger derived any pecuniary benefit from the alleged transactions.

8. The court, after a month's examination, during which the prosecution did its utmost to secure conviction, found Major Belger not guilty on each and every specification and on the charge, and honorably acquitted him. (See General Order 385, War Department, year 1863.)

9. That instead of submitting these proceedings as required by law to the President for his orders thereon, or of returning them to the court with his disapproval, the Secretary of War, without warrant of law and in defiance of justice, issued General Order, War Department, 385, 1863, dismissing Major Belger from the Army, and thus cut off his chances of promotion and support in the service in which he had been trained and earned his living by thirty years of most honorable service, and subsequently, without calling the President's attention to any circumstances of the illegalities by which it was made, presented the place as vacant, and had the next junior officer of the Quartermaster's Department, Capt. (now Maj. Gen.) W. S. Hancock, nominated and confirmed to fill it, thus, under existing law, preventing Major Belger's restoration to his place without the action of Congress.

10. That after being thus unjustly branded before the Army and the country, this gallant officer, deprived of his professional employment, without means of supporting his family, which sometimes lacked even the necessaries of life, the major set about the closing of his vast accounts to the Government. But such was the confidence felt in his integrity, that work was so often postponed to settle those which were regarded as requiring more prompt attention, that it was two years and a half before these accounts were finally and completely closed, and the accounting officers bore honorable testimony to their exceptional thoroughness and accuracy. During all these two years and a half, and for a year and a half thereafter, Major Belger, steeped in poverty, was unable to go into any business.

11. Meanwhile always protesting that he was as guiltless as the court found him, and cut off from the Army by an outrageous exercise of arbitrary power, he found among all who knew him a general conviction of his innocence, and on the 11th of November, 1867, the President, satisfied that Major Belger's dismissal was wholly illegal, issued an executive order restoring him to duty. But a captain, W. S. Hancock, had been nominated and confirmed to the place from which he had been thus unlawfully thrust; it was held that this executive order required legislation to give it effect.

12. Accordingly, in 1871, after careful investigation, the Military Committee of the Senate unanimously instructed its chairman, Hon. Henry Wilson, to report favorably a bill restoring Major Belger to his position in the Army, with rank, pay, emoluments, rights, and privileges the same as if never dismissed, providing only that out of what would thus become due to him should be deducted what the Government had paid to him for services in civil employment between 1867 and the date of the act. This bill, modified on motion of Senators Howe and Nye, so as to restore him to his rank from the date of the act, became a law. But it is in evidence that those Senators expressed their regret for having procured the amendments offered on general principles, and as soon as made aware of the special circumstances of the case, and that Mr. Wilson advised Major Belger to take what the bill allowed, making subsequent application to Congress for the further redress he now asks, and for which this bill provides. (See A, parts annexed.)

13. Moreover, the letter of the Adjutant-General of the Army states that had Major Belger remained in the service, at the date of his restoration, in 1871, he would presumably have reached the rank of colonel in the Quartermaster's Department.

14. Besides the honorable acquittal by the court-martial, the honorable testimonials to his rectitude and efficiency by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department on the settlement of his accounts, the issuance of the executive order in 1867 for his restoration, and the unanimous report of the Senate Military Committee in 1871 that he ought to be restored to rank, pay, allowances, rights, and privileges, as if never dismissed, we have also evidence in the affidavits and statements of the Rev. Dr. Charles H. Hall, General R. C. Schenck, and of Mrs. and Major Belger that subsequently even Mr. Stanton himself became convinced of Major Belger's innocence and expressed his deep regret for the wrong he had done him and his wish to do what he could to repair it.

From these facts and considerations your committee are led to the conclusion that while no such reparation as justice commands is now practicable, this bill will give all that Major Belger asks or expects, and therefore earnestly recommends its passage.

Before the reading was concluded,

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time allowed for debate in support of the bill has expired.

Mr. WELLER. I desire to be recognized in opposition, and ask the Clerk to complete the reading of the report.

Mr. STEELE. I object to that way of opposing a bill. The gentleman from Iowa desires to be recognized in opposition and asks the reading of a favorable report. That is not opposing the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Iowa having been recognized to control the time in opposition has the right to use that time as he pleases.

Mr. STEELE. I do not think it is opposition to a bill to have a favorable report read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not think the objection is well taken.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the report.

Mr. WELLER (interrupting the reading). I desire to withdraw my demand for the reading of the report and yield my time to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Three minutes of the time in opposition to the bill remain.

Mr. STEELE. I yield one minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SLOCUM].

Mr. WAIT. The gentleman from New York will not say anything against the bill.

Mr. STEELE. This man went out of the service and was in civil life for a long time. He was restored to the Army as a quartermaster and placed on the retired-list. This bill proposes to give him additional pay as though he had been in the service all the time. It also proposes to give him pay in addition to what he is now receiving for additional rank. Not satisfied with being restored to the Army he seeks promotion out of the regular order. I do not think the bill ought to pass.

Mr. ANDERSON. Has a previous bill been passed for the benefit of this officer?

Mr. STEELE. A previous bill was passed, and by it he was restored to the Army. Now they seek to promote him on the retired-list.

Mr. WAIT addressed the Chair.

Mr. STEELE. I do not yield to the gentleman from Connecticut. The time for debate in favor of the bill has been exhausted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point made by the gentleman from Indiana. The gentleman from Indiana is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana a question. Does the bill propose to pay this man for the time he was not in the service?

Mr. STEELE. No, sir. But it proposes to pay him continuously, except while he was employed in the civil service. For all the rest of the time it is proposed he shall get pay.

Mr. WAIT. And it is perfectly right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time for debate on this bill has expired. Is there objection to its present consideration?

Objection was made by more than the requisite number.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. 7970) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

CHANGE OF NAME OF BANK.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of New York. I call up for present consideration the bill (S. 2594) to change the name of the Manufacturers' National Bank of New York to the Manufacturers' National Bank of Brooklyn, N. Y.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the name of the Manufacturers' National Bank of New York, a corporation whose location was changed from the city of New York to the city of Brooklyn, in the State of New York, by an act of Congress approved July 27, 1868, shall be changed to the Manufacturers' National Bank of Brooklyn whenever the board of directors of the said bank shall accept the new name by resolution of said board of directors, and cause a copy of said resolution, duly authenticated, to be filed with the Comptroller of the Currency: Provided, That such acceptance shall be made within six months after the passage of this act, and that all expenses incident to such change, including engraving, shall be borne and paid by said bank.

SEC. 2. That the debts, dividends, liabilities, rights, privileges, and powers of the said Manufacturers' National Bank of New York shall devolve upon and inure to the said Manufacturers' National Bank of Brooklyn whenever such change of name is effected.

SEC. 3. That nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as in any manner to release the Manufacturers' National Bank of New York from any liability, or affect any action or proceeding in law in which said bank may be or become a party or interested.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of New York. I ask for the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unless some gentleman claims the time allowed for debate on one side or the other the Chair will ask for objections.

Mr. BEACH. I do not feel exactly like opposing this bill; and yet I think in the time it would take to pass it the House might take up and pass a general bill which I introduced last session for the same purpose, giving the Comptroller of the Currency the power to change the names of these national banks. We have a large number of this class of bills before us. It is special legislation, and the time taken to pass this bill would pass the one I now send up to be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman ask to have the bill read in his time as part of his remarks?

Mr. BEACH. As part of my remarks in opposition to the bill called up by my colleague.

The bill sent up by Mr. BEACH was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5362) authorizing the Comptroller of the Currency to change the names of national banks.

Be it enacted, &c., That the Comptroller of the Currency is hereby authorized to change the name of any national bank, upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe for the protection of the public interests.

Mr. BEACH. Now I request my friend from New York to substitute that bill for the Senate bill and put it on its passage.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I make the point that it is not in order for the gentleman from New York to send up that bill and ask for its passage. He has not been recognized for the purpose of calling up a bill for consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Neither bill is yet before the House. But the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEACH] had the bill sent up read as part of his remarks.

Mr. BEACH. If the other bill comes before the House for consideration I will move to substitute this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill called up by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CAMPBELL]?

Mr. WELLER. I object.

Further objections were made by three members.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is not objected to by the requisite number, and it is before the House for consideration. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. BEACH. Now, Mr. Speaker, I offer as an amendment in the nature of a substitute the bill which I have had read from the desk.

Mr. BUCKNER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BEACH] wants to have a substitute passed. That can not be done.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks he knows what the gentleman from New York wants. It is to offer another bill as an amendment in the nature of a substitute to a bill which is pending here for its third reading.

Mr. KEIFER. I make the point of order that it is not in order to offer an amendment which has the effect to convert a private into a public bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT WICHITA, KANS.

Mr. PETERS. I call up the bill (H. R. 2123) for the erection of a public building at Wichita, Kans.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the post-office, United States courts, and other Government offices at the city of Wichita, State of Kansas. The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed for the site and building complete the sum of $100,000: Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than forty feet, including streets and alleys; and no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be invested in the United States, nor until the State of Kansas shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill for the erection of a public building in the southwestern portion of the State of Kansas, in what is known as the seventh Congressional district, which has a population of about 240,000 people.

Mr. MORSE. The town or the district?

Mr. PETERS. The seventh Congressional district.

Mr. MORSE. What is the population of the town?

Mr. PETERS. The place at which the building is sought to be erected has a population of about 15,000. The United States court is held at Wichita, and in addition to the usual jurisdiction conferred that court has also criminal jurisdiction of all that portion of the Indian Territory north of the Canadian River and west of the Five Tribes; which gives it a very large and extensive additional criminal jurisdiction. There is also a land office located at Wichita. The gross receipts of the land office there for the Wichita land district were during the last year over a half million dollars. The gross receipts of the Wichita post-office during the past year were about $18,000. Unless there are objections to the bill or unless some gentleman desires to make some further inquiry in relation to it I will reserve the remainder of my time. I will, however, add that there are four railroads, and at two points on the Territorial line the roads running to this place can be reached. I will reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time for debate in favor of the bill has expired.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to oppose the bill. When the proper time comes I shall offer an amendment providing that this appropriation be made and paid in standard silver dollars. I shall do that because I want to impress upon this House at every opportunity the benefits that will come to the country by the distribution of the silver dollars that are in the Treasury to-day, annoying the Treasury officials to the extent that they are asking an appropriation of $500,000 to build more vault room. In this way the Treasury can be relieved of that annoyance so completely that not another dollar need be appropriated for vault room. Then, Mr. Speaker, there is another reason. This building is proposed to be located in a place which is in the neighborhood of the large silver-producing sections of the country. There is a demand that the silver product of that region shall be coined, and I am of the opinion that the silver product should be coined on the same basis as gold. Now, I say, let us give them a dose of their own medicine. Let us make this appropriation which is to go into that section payable in actual standard silver dollars.

There is another reason. I venture to say if you put a thousand marked silver dollars into that locality to-day, two-thirds or more of them will be found at any time within the next five years within fifty miles of the point where they were put out; so that the community will never suffer for want of present cash, which to-day is the great curse of the business men of the great Northwest, West, Southwest, and South. On the other hand, if you put the appropriation out in paper dollars, drafts, or checks of deposit, and if these are paid, as almost all appropriations are, by counter-checks upon the Treasury of the United States or other banking institutions at money centers, you will find that the money or bills, if such are used, will go into that locality and stay there for but a very short space of time, and then return to the money centers. I tell you, sir, that the great curse of the Northwest and the West, the Southwest and South as well, is that they have a small modicum of money thrown into their localities which, through the operations and manipulations of the money power, soon flows back again to the money centers, creating congestion at those points, while the extremities are paralyzed by such depletion and their productive forces in ratio destroyed, as they, the people, have no actual money with which to transact their business on anything like a cash basis, thus being compelled to resort to credit which too often can only be had at rates of interest ruinous, coupled with mortgaged securities ofttimes infamous. Then there is another reason. It is true that in the great Northwest to-day we are so impoverished by reason of having no money, or at least by not having such a proper sum to do business with on a cash basis, that we are at the mercy of the money-lenders and the whole crowd of usury suckers that have been and are robbing us of more than the average productions over consumption leaving the masses to become tenants of those who employ the system; and unless something is done you will find that the people of that part of the country will rise up against the incoming administration, as they justly have done against the administration that we have had for the last fifteen years, which has proved by its policies and methods of procedure in these matters that it was not to be trusted any further with the administration of public affairs. The people are determined to have a redress of grievances, and woe betide the hindering causes to an emancipation of labor from the dominancy and tyranny of cash capital. Let us unlock the vaults of the Treasury and put its hundreds of millions into public improvements that are needed, if no other way can be provided or will be adopted, and thus bless the producing, the laboring classes, first with employment, then with pay in cash therefor, and again in this most legitimate and proper way send the life-blood of business activities to the extremities, warming them into such prosperity as they are justly entitled. I regard the standard silver dollars under existing circumstances as one of the very best dollars, because it is a slow dollar, and going into a community will stay there while the lighter dollar, more convenient for circulation, will flow back to the money centers. I say it is now time to strike a blow in favor of the old standard silver dollar—the Democratic dollar of Jefferson and of Jackson. [Applause and laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time for debate on both sides has expired.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I simply desire to call attention to the fact that the town where it is proposed to erect this building had in 1880 a population of but 4,911.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment to this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. An amendment is not in order at this time. The question is, Shall this bill be considered?

Mr. WELLER. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made. As many gentlemen as object to the present consideration of this bill will rise.

Mr. WELLER. I withdraw the objection. I have no objection to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is withdrawn, and if no further objection be made the bill is before the House.

Mr. WELLER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will first report the amendment of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 11, strike out "$100,000" and insert "$50,000."

The amendment was agreed to, there being—ayes 86, noes 4.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now read the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WELLER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the bill the following:

"Provided, however, That this appropriation shall be made and paid only in standard silver dollars."

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment, there were—ayes 41, noes 90.

Mr. WELLER. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WELLER and Mr. PETERS were appointed.

Mr. WELLER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were ayes 5—not a sufficient number.

Mr. WELLER. I ask for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers on the yeas and nays were not ordered, only 5 members voting in favor thereof.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question will now be taken by tellers on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WELLER].

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 21, noes 145.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. MORSE. I move to amend the bill by adding the following:

And it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, after the site for said building shall have been purchased, to cause a plan and specification of said building to be prepared, which said plans and specifications shall not involve an expenditure in the erection and completion of said building and the approaches thereto exceeding the portion of said $50,000 remaining after the site of said building shall have been paid for; and no plan for said building shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the sum so remaining after paying for the site of said building.

The amendment was agreed to, there being—ayes 47, noes 23.

Mr. MORSE moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PETERS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CHATTANOOGA, TENN.

Mr. DIBRELL. I call up for present consideration the bill (S. 1839) for the erection of a public building at Chattanooga, Tenn.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the customs officers, United States courts, post-office, and other Government offices, at the city of Chattanooga, in the State of Tennessee. The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed for the site and building complete the sum of $100,000: Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than forty feet, including streets and alleys; and no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Tennessee shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

Mr. DIBRELL. I ask that the report be read in my time.

The report (by Mr. YOUNG) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1484) to erect a public building in the city of Chattanooga, Tenn., respectfully submit the following report:

The city of Chattanooga is a prosperous, growing, manufacturing city, situated on the south bank of the Tennessee River, which drains a territory of more than 30,000 square miles. Chattanooga is the principal distributing and shipping point of all the produce shipped down said river. It is the terminus of seven prominent railroads. The United States district and circuit courts are held regularly at that place, and the business of said courts is rapidly increasing, owing to the large commercial business done at Chattanooga. The population of the city by a recent city enumeration is near 25,000.

Chattanooga is a port of entry. The Roan Iron Company, engaged in the manufacture of steel rails, paid $150,000, in 1882, duty upon steel blooms, &c. The depression in prices the last year stopped their manufacture until the receipts were greatly reduced.

The post-office receipts for one quarter only, ending 1st January, 1884, were $8,000 and upward, and increasing so rapidly that larger postal facilities are necessary.

When the Tennessee River is opened for free navigation Chattanooga will be the principal shipping point for a large territory in several States.

As Tennessee is a large and populous State, with only four public buildings, your committee are of the unanimous opinion that a public building should be erected at Chattanooga, and therefore recommend the passage of said bill.

Mr. DIBRELL. Mr. Speaker, since that report was made the population of Chattanooga has increased until it is now nearly 30,000. Six thousand persons voted at the election there in November last. Over three hundred residences have been built there during the last year.

I hope no gentleman will object to this bill. During the operation thus far of the "ten-objection rule," only two bills of this class have been presented from the South—one appropriating $50,000, the other $75,000. This bill proposes to appropriate only $100,000 for a public building in so important a place as Chattanooga. The provision upon which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has heretofore insisted, limiting the cost of the building with its approaches to the amount appropriated, is already in the bill. I hope no gentleman will ask to amend the bill, as an amendment would necessitate the return of the bill to the Senate.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, the important feature of the amendment which has been attached to all these bills up to this time—the amendment which was adopted upon the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] on the bill passed a few moments ago—is that the Secretary of the Treasury shall not approve of any plan until the site has been purchased, and then shall not approve of any plan involving a larger expenditure than the amount of the appropriation remaining after the purchase of the site.

Mr. DIBRELL. This bill contains a provision that the total expenditure for site and building complete shall not exceed the sum of $100,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is not a sufficient restriction. The amendment to which I have just referred operates upon the Secretary of the Treasury. I trust there will be no objection to ingrafting such an amendment upon this bill.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Ordinarily, I think the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Indiana is a correct one, but when applied to such a city as Chattanooga, that is constantly growing and which will in a few years have a population reaching 100,000 or more, I do not think it ought to be adopted unless the amount is increased. In fact, this bill ought to have been reported for $200,000, and then it would not have been out of proportion to the provision made for many other cities.

Mr. DIBRELL. The gentleman from Indiana himself said this was one of the most meritorious bills on the Calendar, and I hope he will not now insist on offering an amendment which will have the effect of sending it back to the Senate and perhaps endangering its passage altogether.

Mr. HOLMAN. I much regret the House should allow any of these bills to pass without proper limitation. I do not think the gentleman from Tennessee ought to hesitate. I think it is of the highest moment some responsible officer of the Government should see that these plans do not exceed the amount Congress appropriates.

Mr. DIBRELL. Offer your amendment, then, when the bill is up for consideration.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will offer the amendment.

Mr. WELLER. Is there further time in opposition to the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is.

Mr. WELLER. How much?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Two minutes remaining.

Mr. WELLER. I am not making objections to the consideration of this bill or offering these amendments to appear factious or to make the silver question appear ridiculous, as I may be regarded by some on the floor of this House as seeking to do. I certainly know the objects I have in view are eminently proper at this time and worthy of the highest consideration of statesmen and humanitarians, and I am determined that this silver question shall not sleep. I propose that the country shall be awakened to the necessity for immediate, wise, and patriotic legislation on this question. I want the old-time dollar of Jefferson and Jackson to stand to-day before the business of the country as it stood from 1792 to 1873, when by the infamous policy of the manipulators of the Republican party it was dishonored and rendered unstable, fluctuating, and cheap by restricting its free coinage, which free coinage was the rule for nearly one hundred years before 1873. I hope that the Democracy on the floor of this House, as also throughout the country outside of the money centers, will see to it that the standard silver dollar can be paid out for legitimate public improvements, and thus be put in circulation, and that the hoarding proceeding engaged in by these Republican officials is wholly void of necessity, lacking in wisdom or patriotism, and dangerous to the business interests of the country.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. WELLER. I will finish my remarks by and by, on the very next occasion.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to offer my amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is now before the House. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection to the bill; and it was brought before the House for present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

And it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, after the site for said building shall have been purchased, to cause a plan and specifications to be prepared, which said plans and specifications shall not involve an expenditure in the erection and completion of said building and the approaches thereto exceeding the portion of said $100,000 remaining after the site of said building shall have been paid for; and no plan shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the sum so remaining after paying for the site of said building.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that amendment to come in after the word "dollars," in line 12.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I move to amend the amendment by inserting $150,000 for the building, and then inserting in the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana $150,000 instead of $100,000.

Mr. DIBRELL. I demand the previous question on the bill and amendment.

Mr. WELLER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WELLER. Can that be done when the Speaker recognized me to offer my amendment making this appropriation payable in standard silver dollars?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not recognize the gentleman, but expressed a willingness to recognize the gentleman; but it is nevertheless in the power of the House to exclude all further amendment by ordering the previous question.

Mr. DIBRELL. My object is this: we are so near the close of the session that I fear we will lose the bill if by amendment we send it back to the Senate.

Mr. WELLER. I wish to reply that the gentleman by demanding the previous question may endanger other bills.

Mr. STEELE. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Iowa is not in his seat.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hardly thinks that rule is in force now.

Mr. WELLER. If it were, the gentleman from Indiana violates it more frequently than anybody else.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 172, noes 1.

Mr. WELLER. The gentleman from Iowa dares to stand alone.

So the previous question was ordered.

Mr. DIBRELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question first recurs on the amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEWITT].

The amendment to the amendment was disagreed to.

The question next recurred on Mr. HOLMAN'S amendment.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 37, noes 97.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no quorum, and I regard this a measure of too much importance to allow it to pass without a quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed as tellers Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. DIBRELL.

Mr. WELLER. I rise to a question of order, that the hour has expired.

The SPEAKER pro tempore A message was received from the Senate, and it is hardly fair the time occupied should be taken from the hour.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 50, noes 137.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DIBRELL. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question is still operating on the third reading and engrossment of the bill. [Cries of "Regular order!"] The hour has expired, and the bill goes over as unfinished business.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HUTCHINS, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. 8239) making appropriation for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I reserve all points of order on the bill.

On motion of Mr. HUTCHINS, by unanimous consent, 500,000 extra copies of the report were ordered to be printed.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I give notice, Mr. Speaker, that I will call up this bill for consideration to-morrow morning after the morning hour.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to submit a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ELLIS. I move that the House bill making appropriations for the service of the Indian Department for the next fiscal year, with the Senate amendments thereto, be printed. I also move that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments thereto.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7970) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection the bill with the Senate amendments will be printed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. ELLIS. I move to non-concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ELLIS moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were non-concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. ELLIS. I now ask a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to this bill.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore announced the appointment of the following conferees on the part of the House: Mr. ELLIS, Mr. HOLMAN, and Mr. RYAN.

EQUAL CIRCULATION OF GOLD AND SILVER CURRENCY.

Mr. DORSHEIMER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8240) to regulate the coinage and to promote the circulation of gold and silver equally; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ROSECRANS. I insist upon the demand for the regular order.

Mr. COBB. I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 7004, now on the Speaker's table, be taken up with a view to taking action on the Senate amendments.

Mr. NELSON. I object.

Mr. COBB. I trust the gentleman will not object to this.

Mr. NELSON. I must insist upon the objection.

Mr. COBB. It is a matter of great importance and ought to be acted upon promptly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that objection is made.

Mr. NELSON. I insist upon the objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

STENOGRAPHER TO COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to introduce a resolution for reference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there is hereby appropriated out of the contingent fund of the House a sum sufficient to pay for the service of a stenographer to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in the investigation in relation to the purchase of a site for the post-office in Brooklyn, N. Y., as directed by a resolution of the House; said payment to said stenographer to be upon vouchers approved

A bill (H. R. 2799) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn.

MOUTH OF SCIOTO RIVER, OHIO.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report from the Chief of Engineers of the result of a survey of the mouth of the Scioto River, Ohio; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

ASIATIC CHOLERA.

Mr. RIGGS. By direction of the Committee on Public Health, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution I send to the desk be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the late prevalence of Asiatic cholera in portions of Europe has induced a widespread and, judging from our past experience, probably a well-founded apprehension that said disease may be introduced into this country during the present year, the prevention of which is very desirable; and

Whereas it is also very desirable that the introduction of all contagious, infectious, and epidemic diseases into this country be prevented if possible, and that they be suppressed if introduced: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That in the judgment of the Committee on Public Health there should be provided in the proper annual bill an appropriation of $500,000, to be expended in the discretion of the President of the United States, through such governmental agencies as he may designate, for the purposes indicated in the foregoing preamble.

Resolved further, That in the judgment of said committee there should also be provided in the proper annual bill an appropriation of $25,000 to pay the per diem and necessary expenses of the National Board of Health for the ensuing fiscal year.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

CRUISE OF REVENUE STEAMER CORWIN.

Mr. HAMMOND, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish to the House of Representatives a copy of the report of Capt. M. A. Healy, United States revenue marine, upon the cruise of the revenue-marine steamer Corwin in the Arctic Ocean, made in the year 1884, and its accompanying documents and illustrations, in the possession of the Department.

Mr. HAMMOND moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Several members called for the regular order.

INTERNATIONAL GEOGRAPHICAL CONGRESS.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I rise to present several privileged reports from the Committee on Printing. The committee has directed me to report back favorably the concurrent resolution of the Senate, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the report of Capt. George M. Wheeler, United States Army, on the third international geographical congress and exhibition at Venice, Italy, with the accompanying illustrations, transmitted to the Senate by the Secretary of War on the 10th of December, 1883, be printed in quarto form, and that 3,500 additional copies be printed; of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House, and 500 copies for the Department of War.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I ask the immediate consideration of this resolution.

The question being taken, the resolution was adopted, there being—ayes 32, noes 4.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PROGRESS OF COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Printing, also reported back favorably the following concurrent resolution of the Senate:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, January 30, 1885.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 3,000 extra copies of the report of the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, showing the progress made in said survey during the year ending June 30, 1884, for distribution by said Superintendent.

Attest:

ANSON G. McCOOK, Secretary.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. Read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred Senate concurrent resolution to print 3,000 extra copies of the report of the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, showing the progress made in said survey for the year ending June 30, 1884, have duly considered the same and recommend a concurrence therein.

The estimated cost of printing is $4,900.

Mr. MILLS. I do not think there is any necessity for that printing. But few persons in the United States desire to have that scientific report. The people generally do not want it.

Mr. McMILLIN. I hope some reason will be stated why we should adopt this resolution.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. It is important that the country should know the progress of the work done by the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and therefore the printing of the report has been recommended. The report states how much the printing will cost.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 55, noes 33.

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GUN-FOUNDRY REPORT.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Printing, also reported back favorably the following resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That there be printed for the use of the House 1,000 additional copies of the gun-foundry report, transmitted to the Senate by the President of the United States on the 22d of December last.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred House resolution of January 9, 1885, authorizing the printing of 1,000 additional copies of the gun-foundry report, have duly considered the same, and recommend its passage.

The board was organized under act of Congress March 3, 1883, composed of six officers selected from the Army and Navy, for the purpose of examining and reporting to Congress which of the navy-yards or arsenals owned by the Government has the best location and is the best adapted "for the purpose of establishing a gun-foundry board for the manufacture of heavy ordnance adapted for modern warfare." In the course of its investigation the board visited England, France, Russia, and Germany, and collected most valuable and important information. The usual number printed of the document (Executive Document No. 13) has been exhausted, and to supply the demand for additional copies the Committee on Printing recommend the printing of 1,000 extra copies. The estimated cost is $382.

Mr. MILLS. What is that report?

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. This is the report of a gun-foundry board appointed under an act of Congress a year ago, who traveled through Europe and made investigations in reference to the gun-foundries there. The report contains a great deal of valuable information, and as we went to the expense of sending these men abroad we ought to print the information which they gathered.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 47, noes 24.

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted in the following cases:

To Mr. SWOPE, for this day.

To Mr. HOBLITZELL, for the remainder of this day, on account of sickness.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the legislative, &c., appropriation bill.

Mr. WILLIS. How much time will that occupy?

Mr. HOLMAN. Not more than an hour, at the outside.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on the legislative, &c., appropriation bill, Mr. McMILLIN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8179) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes; and the Clerk will report the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 84, line 2061, strike out "five" and insert "four;" so it will read:
"Pension Office: For compensation of the Commissioner of Pensions, $4,000."

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, by examination of this bill it will be found there is a discrimination made, and I think an unjust one, in favor of the Pension Bureau as against the General Land Office. The salary of the Commissioner of the General Land Office is fixed at $4,000, and the salary of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs at the same rate, while that of the Commissioner of Pensions is proposed to be fixed at $5,000. If the Commissioner of Pensions should have $5,000, I would say unhesitatingly the Commissioner of the General Land Office also ought to have $5,000.

Mr. LEWIS. I think you are right.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. If the Commissioner of the Public Land Office ought not to have more than $4,000, then I would say just as unhesitatingly the Commissioner of Pensions should not have more than $4,000.

The House has said by passing that portion of the bill which fixes the salary of the Commissioner of the General Land Office at $4,000 that amount is sufficient for that officer. If any difference be made between the salaries of these two officers in my judgment it should be in favor of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. The interests over which he presides are more general, more extensive, and of equal importance to those of the Commissioner of Pensions. The questions of law arising for the consideration and decision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office are much more difficult than those under the Pension Bureau. There are no questions of law arising in the Pension Bureau which present any difficulty whatever.

Mr. STEELE. Allow me to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. With pleasure.

Mr. STEELE. Do you not think that the position of Commissioner of Pensions is one of the most annoying of any department of the Government?

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I have no doubt the Commissioner of Pensions is annoyed considerably by members of Congress making applications for pensions for their constituents.

Mr. STEELE. Do you not think it is the duty of members to attend to the wants of their constituents?

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Without designing to make any charge against members of Congress, or anybody else, it looks as though the distinction was made between the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Commissioner of Pensions. Upon the ground that members of Congress did annoy that Commissioner by asking so many favors, I am astonished my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] in charge of the bill, who has ever been an economist, who has ever been in favor of the reduction of salaries, has not in this bill made an effort to equalize these salaries.

I demand justice. If you are going to make the salary of the Commissioner of Pensions $5,000, then give the same salary to the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. MATSON. I wish to ask the gentleman from Alabama a question. Did he offer an amendment to increase the salary of the Commissioner of the General Land Office when that bill was before the committee?

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Let me ask the gentleman from Indiana a question?

Mr. MATSON. I should prefer first to have an answer to my question.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Did the gentleman offer any such amendment?

Mr. MATSON. I did not.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Then the gentleman himself in not offering that amendment has admitted that the salary of $4,000 was sufficient for the Commissioner of the General Land Office; and if he thought that officer, being of equal importance to the other, had a sufficient salary, he says by his own action that this amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama seems to be very much interested in the office of the Commissioner of Pensions, more so than in the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. He complains that the office of the Commissioner of Pensions has attached to it a salary more than it should have, because the Commissioner of the General Land Office has less. And yet he is forced to confess that when that item of the bill was passed he failed to offer an amendment to increase the salary of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, which provision I suppose is beyond remedy at present.

The only question to be decided here, then, is whether or not $5,000 compensation is too much to be paid the Commissioner of Pensions for the duties of his office.

I assert, sir, without fear of contradiction, that the office of the Commissioner of Pensions is the most laborious in the Government of the United States. There is no other one that requires so much unremitting, careful attention, nor one that requires higher integrity and ability. More money is disbursed through the Pension Office than through any other of the bureaus of the Government, and I think I may say more than through any one of the Departments of the Government. In view of these facts, I assert that $5,000 is not too much money for such responsibility.

Mr. BELFORD. Mr. Chairman, I should not say a word regarding the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama, as I understand it, if it were consistent with the policy adopted by this Committee on Appropriations. For that reason I desire to comment briefly upon it.

This bill appropriates a sum of money $1,000,000 less than the total estimates submitted by the Department, and it seems that even the amounts which have been incorporated into the appropriation bill are to be cut down by various amendments which are pending or are to be offered from time to time in the progress of the bill.

I said the other day that there was in the Treasury of the United States $145,000,000 of available cash. I underestimated the amount just $1,600,000; and yet year after year this Democratic House aided by Republicans continues to swell up the volume of money in the Treasury of the United States by exactions upon the poor people of the country who are trying to earn their money by serving this Government. I am not surprised at their action, because this Republic, comprising thirty-eight great States, is governed practically by two States, the State of New York and the State of Pennsylvania, who run side by side like leash-hounds in the control of the finances of this nation.

We have got a New York President to-day, and we have got a New York Secretary of the Treasury to-day. Oh, it does not do to say that he is evaporated out of the marshes or smoked from the swamps of Indiana. He was the Secretary of the Treasury in 1865 and stepped down and out of his office to establish a bank in London. From London he immigrated to this country—to New York, and from New York he has migrated into the Treasury Department and is there to-day. I want to call the attention of this House to the policy that this Secretary of the Treasury is seeking to pursue. I said, sir, that there were two States in this Union practically controlling or trying to govern the finances of this country, one being the State of Pennsylvania, the other, New York—and the South and West are simply playing the part of Issacharian asses to pack the hay nibbled by these distinguished plunderers and robbers. [Laughter.]

Now, sir, I am hurried for time, but I will get along pretty well if you will listen. I say that in 1865 the man who is now Secretary of the Treasury, and was evidently appointed by this New York influence, recommended to the Congress of the United States the retirement of the greenback currency. Let me read you a line or two from his report on this subject, and I will ask to put all the balance of it into my remarks. I mean the rest of this section. He says:

> While, therefore, the Secretary is of the opinion that the immediate repeal of the legal-tender provisions of the acts referred to would be unwise, as being likely to affect injuriously the legitimate business of the country, upon the prosperity of which depend the welfare of the people and the revenues which are necessary for the maintenance of the national credit, and unjust to the holders of the notes, he is of the opinion that not only these provisions, but the acts also, should be regarded as only temporary, and that the work of retiring the notes which have been issued under them should be commenced without delay, and carefully and persistently continued until all are retired.

That is what he announced in 1865 when he came back from that celebrated "love-feast" the Democrats and Republicans held over there in the city of Baltimore. We are told that we must retire the greenback, aromatic and fragrant as it was with all the struggles and glorious memories of the war. This distinguished Secretary of the Treasury recommended its retirement. What else did he do? I shall ask the Clerk to read the section that I have marked here. This was in 1867, the other in 1865.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that by unanimous consent debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto may be limited to five minutes.

Mr. BELFORD. I object unless I can have time to finish what I was about to say.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am willing that the gentleman shall have the five minutes if we can agree to limit the debate on this paragraph to that time.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. It is understood that by unanimous consent debate is limited to five minutes on this paragraph and amendments.

The gentleman from Colorado is recognized for that time.

Mr. BELFORD. I ask the Clerk to read that extract.

The Clerk read as follows:

> A national debt must ever be a severe strain upon republican institutions, and ours should not be subject to it one day longer than is necessary. To the perpetuation of the existing debt of the United States there are also, it may be proper to remark, serious objections growing out of the circumstances under which it was created. Although incurred in a great struggle for the preservation of the Government, and therefore especially sacred in its character, its burdens are to be shared by those to whom it is a reminder of humiliation and defeat. It is exceedingly desirable that this, with other causes of heartburnings and alienation, should be removed as rapidly as possible, and that all should disappear with the present generation, so that there may be nothing in the future to prevent that unity and good feeling between the sections which are necessary for true national prosperity.

Mr. BELFORD. Now you observe, Mr. Chairman, that in 1867 this Secretary of the Treasury said it was absolutely necessary and advisable to pay off this great national debt within this generation. And yet, as I said the other day, and as I say now, he has got one hundred and forty-six millions of available cash in the Treasury upon which we are paying 3 per cent. interest, because we are carrying the Windom bonds, and he will not pay out a cent, not one cent of it.

And here we have got a chairman of the Committee on Appropriations from the State of Pennsylvania; and he says that this money can come into the Treasury through the channels of New York, but we are going to see how it goes out through the channels of Pennsylvania; and I say it is time for the South and the West to join their shields together and tell these salt-water tyrants that they do not control the magnificent destinies of this great Republic. [Applause.]

When that report was made—I ask the chairman not to bring that gavel down too soon—when that report was made my venerable friend from Pennsylvania introduced a resolution condemning it, had it referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and there it slept like Romeo in the tombs of the Capulets. Nothing was reported at all.

You tried last session of Congress to reform the tariff. You got beaten on that subject. Then the other side tried to cut down internal taxes. They got beaten. Here was the West shuttle-cocking one way, and the East shuttle-cocking another, and the general innocent public playing the part of the battledore to both.

Do you intend to do anything with those one hundred and forty-six millions of surplus revenue in the Treasury? Are you going to keep this high tariff up, and to diminish the per capita capital of the people by putting it in the Treasury as idle and unoccupied capital? What are you going to do with the internal revenue? We have had our trouble in the Republican party; you are going to have yours. What is Mr. Cleveland—for whom I have great respect, and I hope his administration will be a decided success—what is Mr. Cleveland going to do with the plumed knight from Pennsylvania on the theory of high protection, and the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky on the theory of tariff reform?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I withdraw my amendment, but wish to ask the gentleman from Indiana if he has any objection to going back to increase the salary of the Commissioner of the General Land Office?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not wish to go back in the bill.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I withdraw my amendment.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

> For an additional force of one hundred and fifty special examiners, for one year, at a salary of $1,400 each, $210,000; and no person so appointed shall be employed in the State from which he is appointed; and any of those now employed in the Pension Office or as special examiners may be reappointed if they are found to be qualified.

Mr. MATSON. I move to strike out the last word, with the view of asking the gentleman in charge of this bill whether the Committee on Appropriations have made any investigation into the work that this additional force of one hundred and fifty special examiners have been able to do since July last. My observation is that the work of the special examination division of the Pension Office is further behind now than it was on the 1st day of July last; and I ask the gentleman in charge of this bill to inform the House what investigation was made by the Committee on Appropriations to justify the continuance of one hundred and fifty special examiners for another year.

Mr. HOLMAN. Last session of Congress when this additional force of one hundred and fifty special examiners was provided for, it was believed that that additional force would be available; that the practice of special examinations in pension cases was beneficial; that it tended to develop the facts in behalf both of the claimant and the Government. And, accordingly, the Committee on Appropriations recommended an increase of the number, and also recommended an increase of their salaries.

The special examiners previously employed, to the extent of two hundred and fifty, had been paid $1,400 a year and expenses. The salary of these one hundred and fifty additional examiners was fixed at $1,600 a year. The investigation made during the present session discloses the fact that the duties have been increased. A larger number of cases have been referred to the special examiners, and a larger number of cases are now pending under examination than there were a year ago. But up to this time it is the belief of the Committee on Appropriations that this force is rendering valuable service not only to the Government but to the claimants, securing investigation such as could be more certainly relied upon, the testimony being taken upon the ground not ex parte but impartially, the claimant being present and the Government being represented by its special agent. And it is believed it is desirable that this whole corps of four hundred be continued for another year. On the recommendation of the present Commissioner the compensation has been reduced from $1,600 to $1,400, inasmuch as the discrimination in favor of one class as against the other was calculated to produce discontent. I think it is desirable this provision should remain as it is.

Mr. STORM. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. How many special examiners will this make?

Mr. HOLMAN. This makes the same number we had last year—four hundred.

Mr. STORM. Either the present force of examiners is insufficient, or else they do not discharge their duties.

Mr. MORSE. They never finish a case.

Mr. HOLMAN. Gentlemen must remember that the number of these cases is very large and is increasing.

Mr. STORM. I believe that in my district half the cases are tied up for want of action by the special examiner. He has had cases in his hands for over a year. I think I can safely say that half the cases in the district are in his hands waiting for his action, and the excuse that the Pension Office gives for not acting upon them is that they are in the hands of the special examiner. I repeat that either these men do not do their duty, or else the force is not sufficient.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is believed that the force is large enough to make disposition of these cases, not immediately, but gradually. My friend [Mr. STORM] should remember that only difficult cases are referred to these special examiners—cases where a thorough and impartial investigation on the ground at the place where the witnesses are to be found is important.

Mr. STORM. That is the character of nearly all these old cases.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I thought I had the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired. There is no question before the committee.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I move to strike out the last word. I would like to have the attention of the gentleman who has charge of this bill [Mr. HOLMAN] for a moment. In lines 2088, '89, '90, '91, '92, and '93, you provide that the expenses of these special agents shall not exceed $3 a day.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. But you do not provide how the rate shall be determined—by whom it shall be determined.

Mr. HOLMAN. By the Commissioner.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. The bill does not so state.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is the intention and effect of it.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Further on you provide that as to the one hundred and forty specials that the rate shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior. Now, why not make the same provision in both cases? If it is necessary in the one case it should be in the other.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the gentleman can suggest an amendment which will meet the case I shall not object to it.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Then I move that in line 2092, after the word "subsistence," the words "at a rate to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior" be inserted.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no objection to that; but does the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEWITT] think that that would be better than to allow the Commissioner of Pensions to fix the rate?

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I think so.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEWITT].

The Clerk read the amendment as above stated.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEWITT].

Mr. STORM. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], while this section is under consideration, to the fact that a great deal of unnecessary expense is created by the manner in which these special examiners discharge their duties. When an examiner goes to a town in a district where there are, perhaps, a dozen or twenty soldiers whose cases have been made "special" and referred to him for examination, he takes up one case and confines his attention to that, giving as a reason that that is the one he has been directed to examine, although there may be a dozen others in the same town that have been also referred to him. He investigates one case and goes away, leaving the others untouched, and then probably comes back in a month or two and investigates another case, and then goes away again, and so on; whereas he might attend to the whole of the cases in that place on one visit if the administration of the office were different.

A MEMBER. It will be different hereafter.

Mr. MORSE. If he took them all at once he would not have anything left to do.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STORM] calls attention to is a matter of just complaint, but it is a matter of administration that you can not regulate by law—a thing which must depend upon the vigilance of the man at the head of the office.

Mr. STORM. Well, I hope that there will be a change in that respect.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope so.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEWITT].

Mr. MCADOO. I move to strike out the last word. I think there is no class of public employés who should be more carefully looked after than these special agents and special examiners and fraud detectives. And in this connection I want to call the attention of the House and the country to an abuse of the special list of fraud detecters of the Treasury Department, which is at the same time an illustration of the way in which these special examiners and fraud agents have been used for partisan purposes in other Departments of the Government. I introduced in this House a few days ago a resolution asking the Secretary of the Treasury to give the House information as to the names of the persons who were employed as special agents and detecters of fraud in the month of June, 1883, in June, 1884, on July 1, 1884, on November 1, 1884, and on February 5, 1885; and from the printed report transmitted to this House by the Secretary of the Treasury I find that on June 30, 1884, some twelve employés, under the guise of detectives of frauds on the Treasury, were added to the force already working in the Department.

In the printed remarks which accompanied the list furnished by the Secretary of the Treasury no reason is assigned for the employment of that additional force. I find further that on the 1st day of November, 1884, at a time when the country was engaged in a heated contest, eighteen names had been added to the list of so-called fraud detecters of the Treasury Department, and an examination of the list will show that a majority of them have since that time been dropped. Now, sir, does it not appear strange that at the very time when the national conventions were being held to nominate candidates for the Presidency this list of "fraud detecters" should have been so suddenly swelled, and that it should have continued to be augmented up to the 1st of November last, when we were about to elect a President of the United States? How many of these mysterious temporary detectives were on the list for pay, while their chief if not their only labors were given to secure partisan supremacy?

I think this list shows that there is great danger in allowing the heads of Departments to appoint special agents, special examiners, and fraud detecters when they can be used for political purposes. Therefore I believe it wise that in appropriations or allowances for the appointment of special examiners the incoming Democratic administration of the Government shall be free from the stain of suspicion of using these employés of the Government for partisan and not for legitimate business purposes.

The following is the list referred to:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 7, 1885.

SIR: In compliance with a resolution of the House of Representatives, passed on the 3d instant, I have the honor to transmit herewith the names of the special agents (customs) of this Department, and the names of the persons specially employed to detect and prevent frauds upon the customs revenue, on the several dates named in said resolution.

The special agents are appointed under the provisions of the acts of May 12, 1870, August 15, 1876, and June 19, 1878, and are required by law to make examinations of books, papers, and accounts of collectors and other officers of the customs, and to be employed generally under the direction of the Secretary in the prevention and detection of frauds upon the customs revenue. Experience has shown that the employment of these agents is necessary to secure uniformity in the transaction of business at the several ports, and to prevent frauds.

In addition to the number of special agents, authorized by the acts herein referred to, Congress authorized the Secretary of the Treasury, by act approved March 3, 1879, to expend a sum not to exceed $100,000 per annum in the prevention and detection of frauds upon the customs revenue. Under this authority persons named in the list herewith transmitted have been employed under the direction of the special agents stationed at the principal ports of entry.

The list herewith transmitted shows the changes made, and the reasons therefor, during the period covered by the resolution.

Very respectfully,

H. MCCULLOCH, Secretary.

Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. CANNON. I would be very much gratified if the gentleman would suggest any legislation that would keep the incoming administration from appointing agents for political purposes. Otherwise his investigation and his speech will go for naught.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

United States Patent Office: For compensation of the Commissioner of the Patent Office, $5,000; for assistant commissioner, $3,000; for chief clerk, $2,250; one law clerk, at $2,000; three examiners-in-chief, at $3,000 each; examiner in charge of interferences, $2,500; trade-mark examiner and examiner of designs, at $2,400 each; twenty-four principal examiners, at $2,400 each; twenty-eight first assistant examiners, at $1,800 each; twenty-eight second assistant examiners, at $1,600 each; thirty third assistant examiners, at $1,400 each; thirty-five fourth assistant examiners, at $1,200 each; one financial clerk, $2,000, who shall give bonds in such amount as the Secretary of the Interior may determine; one librarian, $2,000; three chiefs of division, at $2,000 each; three assistant chiefs of division, at $1,800 each; three clerks of class 4, one of whom shall act as application clerk, one machinist, $1,600; five clerks of class 3, one of whom shall be translator of languages; eighteen clerks of class 2; fifty clerks of class 1; one skilled laborer, $1,200; four skilled draughtsmen, at $1,200 each; three draughtsmen, at $1,000 each; one messenger and property clerk, $1,000; thirty-two permanent clerks, at $1,000 each; five model attendants, at $1,000 each; ten model attendants, at $800 each; seventy-five copyists, six of whom may be copyists of drawings; four copyists, at $720 each; sixty-two skilled laborers, at $720 each; forty-five laborers, at $600 each; forty laborers, at $480 each; in all, $597,170.

Mr. COSGROVE. I move to amend by striking out, in line 2110, the words "five thousand" and inserting "four thousand five hundred;" so as to make the compensation of the Commissioner of the Patent Office $4,500.

Mr. CANNON. I hope there will be no objection to this amendment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I hope there will be objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I rise for the purpose of opposing this amendment. I am satisfied that if the law fixing the salary of the Commissioner of Patents at $5,000 was right—I believe it was—that compensation will be right in the future as in the past. The business of the Patent Office is constantly growing, not diminishing. The care, responsibility, and labor of the Commissioner of Patents are increasing. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COSGROVE] does not give any reason why the future Commissioner of Patents should not receive as much compensation as this officer has received in the past. I certainly hope this Committee of the Whole will not hastily cut down the salary of this officer.

The Patent Office is about the only one of the different branches of this Government which is self-sustaining. It has to-day to its credit in the Treasury Department a very large surplus, after paying all the expenses of the service, and after paying even the rent of a building which was erected out of the funds of the Patent Office. I certainly think if there is to be any effort at retrenchment below what is reasonable and right it should not be directed against the Patent Office. I see no reason at all why the salary of Commissioner of Patents should be reduced. Therefore I oppose the amendment.

Mr. COSGROVE. If the gentleman's argument is good, that because any bureau or Department of this Government is self-sustaining therefore the salary of its head should be increased, why did he not favor an increase of the salary of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue? The Commissioner of the General Land Office is a position as important to the Government as the Commissioner of Patents, if not more so, yet the salary of the Commissioner of the General Land Office stands at $4,000, while you propose to increase that of the Commissioner of Patents beyond what is allowed by existing law.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I would like to answer the gentleman.

Mr. COSGROVE. Let the gentleman wait till I get through. I say this is an increase of salary over that authorized by the present law, and would have been subject to a point of order. I intended to make such a point; but the gentleman from Illinois took the floor and was recognized before I had the opportunity to do so. The provision ought to have gone out on a point of order. I see no reason why the Commissioner of Patents should have his salary increased to $5,000 while the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs remain at $4,000. I do not understand that the work of the head of the Patent Office demands any higher order of talent or any more attention to official duties than the work in these other departments. The office of Commissioner of Internal Revenue is certainly one that requires much attention and business experience. I hope my amendment will prevail.

Mr. TOWNSHEND rose.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto terminate in two minutes. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] can occupy those two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. COSGROVE. I object. I will consent to three minutes, provided I can have one minute to reply to the gentlemen from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Missouri consents to terminate debate in three minutes if he is allowed one minute.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I want only two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is their objection to the proposition to close debate in three minutes?

Mr. CANNON. I will consent to eight minutes. I would like to have five.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment is exhausted. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COSGROVE].

The question being taken, the amendment was not agreed to—ayes 7, noes not counted.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move to amend by striking out the last two words. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope we shall get along with the bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COSGROVE] is entirely mistaken in supposing that a point of order could have been raised against this provision. This is not an increase of compensation. The increase was made at the last session of Congress. Now, I want to know why the gentleman from Missouri desires to cut down the compensation of the future Commissioner of Pensions because a Democratic administration is about to begin.

Mr. COSGROVE. This increase went out on a point of order last year.

Mr. WILLIS. I rise to a point of order. I submit that gentlemen must confine themselves to the matter under debate. I hope we shall get on with this bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Now again I ask the gentleman why——

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Illinois must give some reason why the last two words of the paragraph should be struck out.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. When gentlemen get through with their points of order I will proceed.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this provision was inserted in the bill at the last session of Congress. It is not a new provision in the bill, and therefore it is not subject to points of order.

Why gentlemen think Democratic talent should be cheaper than Republican talent I can not conceive. The Commissioner of Patents is a man who should have the qualifications of a good lawyer, and should also be a man of scientific attainments. I hold, sir, there is need for better talent and for better brains in the position of Commissioner of Patents than in the position of Commissioner of the General Land Office. My honest conviction is that the position of Commissioner of Patents is one of the most important in this country, and that the utmost care should be exercised in selecting the highest order of talent to fill it. You can not obtain an officer properly qualified on an inferior and insufficient salary. The gentleman says why do we not raise the salary of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue when the receipts of that Department are greater than those of the Patent Office.

Now is it possible gentlemen can not see the difference between the character of the receipts of the Patent Office and those of the Internal-Revenue Bureau? The receipts in the Patent Office are made up of fees paid by the inventors of the country, who take the deepest interest in that office, while those of the Internal-Revenue Bureau are made up of taxes, under the law to be collected under the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The extent of the receipts of internal revenue is the taxation under the law, whereas the receipts of the Patent Office are made up of fees paid by inventors of the country, and to such an amount that that office is self-sustaining.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word in reply to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HOLMAN. I thought that debate had been closed by unanimous consent on this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. No; objection was made.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move then that the committee rise for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CANNON. I will not detain the committee, Mr. Chairman, at any great length, but I do wish to say a word in reply to the gentleman from Illinois who has just taken his seat. Now, I am inclined to believe that the salary of the Commissioner of Patents is not too large; nor do I believe that the salaries provided in this bill are too much. Yet when I say that I must also say I was led to expect when a Democratic administration entered into office some effort would be made to fulfill some of the pledges they so clamorously made during the last campaign in the way of reduction of salaries, the largeness of which in their minds had affected them so much. [Laughter and applause.]

A MEMBER. But they have not come in yet.

Mr. CANNON. We have been hearing for years their denunciation of high salaries paid to officers of the Government, and indeed the clamors of the last campaign on the part of Democratic politicians still ring in our ears, that these men holding Government offices were paid two or three times too much.

A MEMBER. And some of them are.

Mr. CANNON. I am sure I have not offered any obstruction to any Democratic politician who wished to move a proposition for the reduction of any salary, nor am I aware, Mr. Chairman, that this side of the House has opposed itself to any such effort on the part of the other side. You gentlemen on the other side have 70 majority in this House, and I see no reason why you should not cut down these salaries one-half if you wish to do so. If you meant what you said in the last campaign you certainly should make some movement in that direction.

But I suppose I can wait for the Democratic side of the House to move, for I am quite well satisfied that the incoming administration will not be warm in the White House before the Democratic President will call the Congress of the United States together, and then, the Vice-President occupying his chair in the Senate and the Speaker presiding over this House, an opportunity will be afforded to the Democratic party to carry out that long-wished-for and fervently-prayed-for legislation for the reduction of taxes so as to divide among the people the $146,000,000 of surplus in the Treasury which, like a ghost, haunts the waking and sleeping dreams of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELFORD]. [Laughter and applause.] Therefore I will not insist at this time on this salary being cut down, because I know you gentlemen want the glory to be given to your President of signing the bill that will reduce the taxes and at the same time reduce all these salaries, so that the Government may be brought back as it was when the fathers gave it to us. [Laughter and applause.]

By unanimous consent the pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that debate on this paragraph be closed in two minutes.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. COSGROVE. I am not going into any political discussion of the matter, because I do not wish to hurt the feelings of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] on the Republican side. I wish always to be generous to a fallen foe. But I wish to say one word in reply to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] in reference to the accuracy of my statement as to the salary of the Commissioner of Patents. I stated when this bill came into the House last year a point of order was made against the $500 increase, the salary standing at $4,500. The point of order was sustained, but when the bill went to the Senate it was put in again and afterward it was agreed to by the conference committee, and therefore became a part of the existing law. I was mistaken as to the present salary, but it was as I have stated.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. You are right.

Mr. COSGROVE. I know I am right. I say there is no reason why the salary of the Commissioner of Patents should be increased that would not apply also to the increase of the salary of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and to the salary of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

A MEMBER. They are much more important offices.

Mr. COSGROVE. Yes; much more important; and if there is any reason for increasing the salary of the Commissioners of Patents it will apply with more force to increasing the salary of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

The Clerk read as follows:

For photolithographing or otherwise producing copies of drawings of the weekly issues of patents, for producing copies of designs, trade-marks, and pending applications, and for the reproduction of exhausted copies; said photolithographing or otherwise producing plates and copies, referred to in this and the preceding paragraph, to be done under the supervision of the Commissioner of Patents, and in the city of Washington, if it can there be done at reasonable rates; and the Commissioner of Patents, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, shall be authorized to make contracts therefor, $85,000.

Mr. COSGROVE. I move to strike out in line 2160 the words "in the city of Washington."

I see no reason why there should be any limitation as to where this work may be done. If it can be done cheaper in Washington than elsewhere, of course the Commissioner of Patents will have it done here. But there is no reason why such a provision should be incorporated into this bill confining it exclusively to this city, and thereby probably giving it to but one person, for, for aught I know, there may be only one here who is able to do it, and excluding all competition from all other parts of the country.

Mr. MILLS. In order to make the amendment that the gentleman contemplates it would be necessary to strike out the words:

And in the city of Washington, if it can there be done at reasonable rates.

Mr. COSGROVE. I accept the modification of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I have always been impressed with the belief since this provision was adopted many years ago that this work should be let out on a broader basis of competition than it is let at present, and it was sought to remove this restriction by the Committee on Appropriations in this bill. The Commissioner of Patents, however, came before the committee and the same state of facts appeared which had appeared time and time again in former years, that in the judgment of the Commissioner himself it was exceedingly important that the work should be done here if it could be done at reasonable rates, so as to be under the eye of the Commissioner, and where the proofs could be corrected and examined as the work progressed. In consequence of that the committee again reported this provision as it has stood for many years back and in conformity with the suggestions which have been made by the present Commissioner of Patents and his predecessors for years past.

Mr. COSGROVE. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Will the gentleman be kind enough to state if the amendment proposed by me shall prevail whether there is anything in the bill that will require this work to be done elsewhere, and not under the supervision of the Commissioner of Patents? The only object is to open it to competition. It will be under his supervision wherever it may be done; and striking out the words I have suggested would be simply in the line of economy.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have only stated the conclusion of the Committee on Appropriations after a conference with the Commissioner of Patents, and the conclusions which had been reached in former years under similar circumstances. I dislike myself a feature like this very much, that does not open the widest competition, and should be perfectly content with whatever action the committee may take, as far as I am personally concerned. But, representing the Committee on Appropriations, I have stated the reasons which induced them to bring in the provision as it here stands.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last two words.

The general proposition that all work done for the Government should be done after advertisement and let to the lowest responsible bidder without regard to where the work is done is a good proposition, and no doubt the gentleman from Missouri had this in view when he moved this amendment. Yet I undertake to say after an investigation, from the best information I can get, and I believe I have gone to the bottom of this question, that this amendment would not lead to good results in this case. Now this provision in the bill for the work to be done in Washington if it can be done at reasonable rates was placed in the law substantially as it stands in the bill in the Forty-fourth Congress, and has been there ever since.

Some years ago, when I came to make up this bill, being a member of the Committee on Appropriations of a Republican House, I gave full investigation to this matter, and found it had been discussed not only in the House, but in the Senate, and I have before me now the Senate discussion, participated in by the late Zachariah Chandler and by Senator BECK, of Kentucky, and others, from which it appears, as I have found upon examination, that this work can not be, and never had been, done satisfactorily outside of the city of Washington, and for this reason: that it is the current issues of patents to be printed day by day and week by week as the applications are made and the patents granted.

If this work is done outside of Washington you will find difficulties would arise in sending drawings to New York, Boston, Philadelphia, or elsewhere, and back and forth for correction of proofs. Besides that, when the original papers are sent to be printed, there is no office copy left, which means trouble to the examiners and trouble and expense to the inventors. It delays patents for weeks and sometimes months. I could talk longer about this, but perhaps not to much profit; suffice it to say that the Commissioners of Patents since this work commenced have uniformly maintained that the work can not be properly done outside of Washington, and the head of the Gazette publication concurs. The present Commissioner of Patents was called before the Committee on Appropriations and very decidedly expressed the opinion that this work could not be properly done outside the city of Washington.

There is nothing to prevent all the world competing for this work, provided they will do it where it ought to be done. It would probably be wise for the Government to do the work for itself, but that would involve a plant in the Government Printing Office or in the Interior Department. I believe I would vote for that if it costs something more; but I repeat that it must be done either in the Interior Department by its own printing office or else it must be done in the city of Washington in the manner in which it has been done in the past.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COSGROVE].

The question being taken, there were—ayes 17, noes 38.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Office of Commissioner of Railroads: For Commissioner, $4,500; bookkeeper, $2,400; railroad engineer, $2,500; one clerk of class 4; one clerk of class 3; one copyist, and one assistant messenger; in all, $14,420.

Mr. CURTIN. I wish to ask the gentleman from Indiana why the salary of this Commissioner is put at $4,500, differing from the salaries given to other Commissioners.

Mr. HOLMAN. This discrepancy arises as always will happen where there is legislation without regard to the general system of salaries. This salary was fixed at the present amount when the office was first established, and has remained so till the present time. There has not been any attempt to revise the salaries in a general way during the present short session.

Mr. CURTIN. That is not a very satisfactory explanation, but I suppose I must be content with it. I believe, however, I will move to amend so as to make the amount of salary $5,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order made by the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. HOLMAN. It is that it is new legislation on an appropriation bill and not in the line of economy.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. CURTIN. I know nothing about the point of order [laughter], but if the Chair will hear me I should like to speak on the merits.

The CHAIRMAN. The merits are not properly under discussion now.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think we could dispense very well with that officer altogether.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana makes the point of order on that amendment that it changes existing law and does not retrench expenditures. The Chair thinks the point of order well taken.

Mr. CURTIN. I suppose I must submit to the decision of the Chair.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Bureau of Labor: For Commissioner of Labor, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,000; for rent of rooms for use of bureau, and for fuel, light, stationery, employés, and all other necessary expenses of said bureau, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior and as provided by law, $20,000; in all, $25,000. And it shall be the duty of the Commissioner to report the number and salaries of employés, with the estimates for said bureau, to the first session of the next Congress.

Mr. MILLS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the close of the paragraph add the following:

"That the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to enable the Commissioner of said bureau to obtain information pertaining to labor in American and foreign industries and make report of the same to Congress on the first Monday of December, 1885."

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, during the last session, as will be remembered, this Bureau of Labor was established by Congress for the purpose of getting information to lay before Congress that it might legislate intelligently whenever it should become necessary to legislate at all in reference to labor. Since that time the President has appointed one of the most capable gentlemen in the United States at the head of that bureau, a gentleman who was head of the bureau of statistics of Massachusetts for a number of years; one of those very few gentlemen that we find in the United States who is thoroughly conversant with all industrial statistics.

He has laid out a plan of work for next summer, to investigate to the bottom all these instances of industrial depression both in the United States and in Europe; and in order to do that he requires a sum additional to what is here provided. The sum which is provided in this bill is for clerk-hire, for salaries of officers, for fuel, lights, stationery, &c., and will not leave a sufficient amount to defray this expense and enable the Commissioner to make this thorough and searching investigation and report it in time for the next session of Congress.

If this bureau is to be of any practical advantage to us it must work between now and the beginning of the next session of Congress. We will then have all these questions to go into, and we want to have the benefit of this investigation. I hope my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will not make any objection to this amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have been impressed since the gentleman from Texas has spoken of this matter with the propriety of enlarging somewhat this item of appropriation. The amount appropriated is now for general purposes $20,000; $25,000 in all. This amount of $25,000 appropriated in conformity with the law of last session covers the salary of the Commissioner, $3,000; the salary of the chief clerk, $2,000; rent of rooms for use of bureau, fuel, lights, stationery, employés, and all other necessary expenses of said bureau, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and as provided by law, $20,000; in all, as I have said, $25,000; or $20,000 besides the salaries.

It seems to me that if the investigation is to be made thorough by this Commissioner into the statistics of labor here and elsewhere, the information on that subject is very desirable, now that we are discussing questions of an economic character. It seems to me a moderate increase of that appropriation would not be objectionable. It has not been before the Committee on Appropriations, so that I can not speak for that committee. I simply speak for myself; but I suggest to the gentleman from Texas, instead of making this a separate item, to increase the amount of $20,000 up to $30,000 and precede it with the following words, after the words "and all other necessary expenses of said bureau:"

And to make investigations in the systems of labor in Europe, America, and elsewhere.

And to change the amount in the paragraph from $20,000 to $30,000.

Mr. MILLS. Half a loaf is better than no bread, and I accept the gentleman's amendment and modify my amendment accordingly.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas as now modified.

Mr. COX, of New York. I desire to inquire of the Chair if there is any point of order pending. Did the gentleman from Indiana make the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. There was no point of order made on the amendment.

Mr. CURTIN. If I did not so heartily approve of the work of the Bureau of Labor, I would make the point of order which was made on me. [Laughter.] I desire to ask the gentleman from Texas a question. Does he think $20,000 the proper amount?

Mr. MILLS. I think it is.

Mr. CURTIN. Well; do not yield to its being reduced.

Mr. MILLS. Well, I do not want to antagonize anybody and thereby defeat the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

The Clerk read as follows:

That the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to enable the Commissioner of said bureau to obtain information pertaining to labor in American and foreign industries, and to make investigation into the statistics of labor in Europe and elsewhere, and make report on the same to Congress on the first Monday of December, 1885.

Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I thought the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] moved to add $5,000 more, so as to make the sum $30,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. This makes it $30,000.

Mr. COSGROVE. Does that come up to the amount estimated by the Commissioner?

Mr. HOLMAN. The appropriation now, with this amendment, would be $10,000 more than the estimate. All the amount contained in the estimates was in the bill already.

Mr. MILLS. But the estimates were only for the machinery of the office. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] does not mean to say that the expenses of any such investigation as this are provided for there.

Mr. HOLMAN. No.

Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. Chairman, so far as this Bureau of Labor which has just been established is concerned, there could not have been selected in the United States another man so competent to be at its head as Mr. Carroll D. Wright, of Massachusetts. Although gentlemen are of course opposed to any excessive appropriation for this purpose, we can not get too much information about labor in this country, and I am very glad that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] at last proposes to add something in the interest of the Republic. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] as proposed to be amended by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows.

In line 2216, after the word "bureau," insert the following: "and to make investigation into the statistics of labor in the United States and elsewhere, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior and as provided by law, $30,000.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]. I desire to ask the gentleman whether or not this estimate of $20,000 for the expenses of this Labor Bureau covers anything more than the estimated cost of the machinery of the bureau; whether it covers anything in the nature of an investigation into the condition of labor either in this country or in Europe?

Mr. HOLMAN. It was intended to cover not only the clerical force named in the paragraph, but, in addition to that, such other expenditures in connection with collecting statistics as might be incurred.

Mr. DINGLEY. In the United States and in Europe?

Mr. HOLMAN. Nothing was said about the place. The general scope of the law was, of course, considered in making the appropriation. The whole of this money will be expended in statistical inquiry, and the effect of this amendment will be to make the amount $30,000, instead of $20,000.

Mr. DINGLEY. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] think that is enough?

Mr. MILLS. Yes; I think so.

The amendment of Mr. MILLS as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, Mr. Chairman, to make the language of the paragraph harmonize, I move to amend by striking out, in line 2218, "twenty-five thousand" and inserting in lieu thereof "thirty thousand."

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "Congress," in line 2221, insert "and said Bureau of Labor is hereby transferred from the Department of the Interior to the Department of the Treasury."

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, this bureau is evidently in the wrong Department of our Government. The Department of the Interior deals with the public lands, with Indian affairs, with patents, and matters of that sort, while this labor question is clearly one relating to taxation and revenue. The Bureau of Ordnance in the Army or the Bureau of Construction and Repair in the Navy would not be more out of place in the Interior Department than is this Labor Bureau. It clearly belongs to the Treasury Department, because the only way we can affect labor at all is by taxation, and therefore I say that this bureau should be under the supervision of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] to the fact that by the law organizing this bureau it is placed under the Interior Department, so that the change he proposes would necessitate a change in the law.

Mr. MILLS. That is what I propose. The bureau is entirely out of place in the Interior Department.

Mr. CANNON. I am very much in sympathy with the object sought by the proposition of the gentleman from Texas, although I recollect that we have been paying $75,000 to $100,000 for gathering statistics through the Agricultural Department, as well as quite a large sum for collecting statistics by the Bureau of Statistics in the Treasury Department. Besides, as is suggested to me, similar work is carried on by the State Department, and also by the Bureau of Education. I am not sure but there might be a well-considered law enacted which would harmonize this work of collecting statistics, so that it could be done more economically and intelligently. But such a measure can not be carried through at this time. Now, I am in accord with the proposition of the gentleman to give to this Bureau of Labor increased facilities for the collection of statistics touching labor. But does the gentleman think it best to have in the Treasury Department two bureaus conducting work of this character? There is already in that Department the Bureau of Statistics, which gathers very thoroughly statistics touching our foreign and internal commerce, and incidentally touching labor. Now I am not sure it would not be better to have this work remain in the Interior Department than to have these two bureaus in the Treasury Department.

Mr. MILLS. The Bureau of Labor seeks to go into an investigation of all the causes affecting wages. Now, if Congress can do anything at all touching the wage question, it must be done by the use of the taxing power of the Government; and that is entirely foreign to the Interior Department. Now the Bureau of Statistics collects statistics from various sources; but what we require is a scientific investigation into the causes of the depression of labor, the causes affecting the rise or fall of wages; and this work demands just such an officer as is now at the head of the Bureau of Labor. I do not believe there are half a dozen others in the United States as capable of dealing with this question.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. HOPKINS. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. Mr. Chairman, it will be remembered that when this bureau was created I favored the establishment of an independent bureau, a bureau which should not be under the control of any Department, but entirely and absolutely independent. I believed such a bureau would accomplish the best results. I fear that if this amendment be adopted there may be, as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois, confusion from having two bureaus in the same Department engaged in the collection of statistics. I think, therefore, that for the present, until the workings of this bureau shall be more fully demonstrated, at any rate until the next session of Congress, the bureau had better remain as provided by the original act unless it be now made an independent bureau.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in three minutes.

Mr. MILLS. I object.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I ask to make the limitation five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. TILLMAN. I object.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the committee rise to close debate.

Mr. MILLS. To get the committee out of this difficulty, I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. TILLMAN. I object to the withdrawal. I move to amend by striking out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana was recognized for the purpose of moving that the committee rise to limit debate. [The question having been put.] In the opinion of the Chair, the motion is not adopted.

Mr. CANNON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to suggest to the gentleman from Indiana that I think a proposition to close debate in ten minutes will be accepted.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope we shall close debate on this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair put the question and stated that in his opinion the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. How much time does the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] wish?

Mr. TILLMAN. Only five minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I hope five minutes will be the limit.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the limit will be five minutes. The Chair hears none. The gentleman from South Carolina is recognized.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Chairman, the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] ought not to prevail. The Treasury Department has at this time twice as much work as the head of that Department can do efficiently. The truth is the Government needs another executive department, which should be established to relieve the Secretary of the Treasury from the administration of several bureaus of which he now has charge.

I doubt very much whether any good will come of this special Labor Bureau, whether the Interior or Treasury shall administer it. At the present time the Department of State may be said to have a bureau of labor statistics as well as of commercial statistics, the materials for which have been and are still furnished by our consuls. It is well known the best official document ever issued in this country on the subject of labor was published by the State Department during the incumbency of Mr. Evarts, and, as remarked by some gentleman near me, there was considerable humbuggery even about that.

The Agricultural Department also has a labor bureau. The Treasury Department likewise has a third labor bureau. And the Interior Department has a fourth labor bureau in the census, which perhaps has furnished the most reliable statisics in regard to the kinds of labor and the prices of labor and the statistics by which the causes that influence the rise and fall of wages can be deduced and traced better than in any other publication of the Government.

Yet in addition to all these existing labor bureaus it is now proposed to organize a fifth bureau at an enormous expense.

Mr. Chairman, I will take the liberty of saying that I fear demagogy or nepotism has had something to do with this jumble and confusion of machinery to procure labor statistics and create official places for the friends of Congressmen. I for one do not desire to provide offices for men who shall fill sinecures and draw salaries without anything to do.

What we need really, perhaps, is a labor bureau that embraces all the duties performed at present by all these Departments.

If this appropriation goes through, and of course it will, since the numerous friends (so called) of the horny-handed sons of toil on this floor can not refuse it, the Government will be paying in the neighborhood of $200,000 for nothing in the world except to compensate the men who fill offices and pretend to do something when they actually do nothing of real value to either the laborers or the country. If this new bureau could consolidate and absorb the functions of all the other bureaus, it might in time do some good by fixing responsibility for accuracy of facts and aptness of methods, and preventing the production or duplication of worthless data, as is the case now; but I trust the Secretary of the Treasury will not be overburdened with the supervision of any more bureaus.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move, in line 2268, to strike out "suitable" and insert "other;" in line 2270, to strike out "thirty-seven" and insert "fifty-eight;" and in the same line to strike out "seven" and insert "one;" so it will read $58,160 instead of $37,760.

The amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, notified the House of the adoption of the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 8039) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

It further announced the passage of the bill (H. R. 7496) for the relief of Wehrle, Werk & Sons.

It further announced the passage of the bill (S. 2621) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Great Kanawha River below the falls, and to prescribe the dimensions of the same; in which concurrence was requested.

It further announced the adoption of concurrent resolution for the printing of report of Lieut. George M. Stoney, United States Navy; in which concurrence was requested.

THE LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee then resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

For compensation of the Postmaster-General, $8,000; chief clerk to the Postmaster-General, $2,500; stenographer, $1,800; appointment clerk, $1,800; law clerk, at $2,500; and one clerk of class 4 (in office of Assistant Attorney-General for Post-Office Department), two clerks of class 3, one clerk of class 2, three clerks of class 1, two clerks, at $1,000 each; one copyist, one messenger, one assistant messenger; in all, $31,060.

Mr. AIKEN. I move the following amendment, to come in after the word "dollars," in line 2407.

The Clerk read as follows:

For superintendent of foreign mails, $3,000; chief clerk, $2,000; and one clerk of class 4; three clerks of class 3; one clerk of class 2; one clerk of class 1; two clerks, at $1,000 each; one assistant messenger; in all, $16,920.

Mr. AIKEN. I find from reading this bill that the Foreign Mail Bureau of the Post-Office Department has been so nearly destroyed that a mere fragment of it is left. The office of the chief of the bureau, who is now in attendance upon the international postal union in Portugal by order of the Government, has been abolished, and just one-half of the clerical force of the bureau removed. This bureau was created nearly twenty years ago, and five years ago the Postmaster-General reported that its clerical force was insufficient, and the then Committee on Appropriations added the two clerks of $1,000 each as necessary.

Mr. Chairman, we are living in a progressive age, our country is daily increasing in population, we are constantly endeavoring to bring ourselves into closer and more frequent communication with foreign nations; and hence the presumption is that the labors of this bureau are constantly increasing. But the proposition in this bill is to so far reduce the clerical help as to almost destroy the bureau. The office of the chief of the bureau is abolished, and just 50 per cent. of the number of clerks transferred to another division of the Post-Office Department, and the offices of the remainder abolished; nor has any reason been assigned by any member of the Committee on Appropriations for this wholesale reduction.

I contend, sir, that unless we have something more satisfactory and convincing, some more valid reason why we should reduce the number of clerks in this branch of the service than has been yet given, that it is only right and just that this provision, which I have suggested and which is the existing law, should be adopted and the bill altered to conform to it.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Chairman, it was upon my motion that the committee proposed the abolition of this bureau of the Post-Office Department. I heard two gentlemen, whom I regard as the very highest authority on all postal matters in this country, say that this bureau might well be abolished and consolidated with the office of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General. One of those gentlemen is the Postmaster-General himself, and the other is the honorable gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY], chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads of this House, than whom no man in the House—I had almost said in this country—is better posted in the affairs relating to that Department.

Upon a little examination of the subject myself I discovered that the duties of this office were exactly analogous with those performed by the Second Assistant Postmaster-General. The one does all the contracting for the land-service, the railroad service, the steamboat service, and the star-route service of the country, and I did not see why, having regulated the carriage of the mails to the sea, he could not go a little farther and regulate its carriage to foreign nations. Therefore it was that, in the line of economy, in order to get rid of a useless bureau, to abolish a useless office, and to consolidate and give more homogeneity to the bureau administered by the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, I made this motion, and I believe the House should sustain it and that the country will approve it.

There is nothing, Mr. Chairman, embraced within the duties of this office of superintendent of the foreign mail service that can not be as easily and perfectly transacted by the Second Assistant Postmaster-General as by maintaining a separate head for that bureau. We believe we have given the requisite force to the Department to carry on that work; it was done, as I have said, as a measure of economy and for other reasons stated, and I care nothing beyond that.

Mr. MOULTON. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am a little surprised that this change has been made, and I am especially surprised, in view of the way that it will operate if adopted. Under the law as it stood before some six of the clerks of that bureau are to be retained and are maintained by the present bill. Under the same portion of this bill, in its operation toward this bureau, four of the most efficient and important clerks connected with the bureau of foreign mails are absolutely legislated out of office.

One of these, a lady, who is legislated out of office by the operation of this bill, is one of the most accomplished linguists in any of the Departments of this Government, not excepting the State Department; and to her is looked more than to any other person connected with the Government for the correct translation of foreign letters, communications, and other papers in the modern European languages.

Now, then, I want to say to the friends on this side of the House that in the operation of this act four Democratic clerks are stricken out, absolutely legislated out, while every Republican clerk is retained by the operation of the bill.

Mr. ELLIS. What difference does that make? I do not know any difference between one or the other in the performance of a public duty. I was trying to serve the country in what I did, and he who serves his country best serves his party most. [Applause.]

Mr. MOULTON. I am informed that the Postmaster-General desires the Bureau of Foreign Mails to be preserved precisely as it is in the old law, and he states, and he should be an authority, that it would more subserve the public interests by keeping the Bureau of Foreign Mails separate and distinct, as it is to-day, than to make the change proposed by this bill. The duties performed by the Bureau of Foreign Mails are multifarious and important; the translation of foreign letters, correspondence with foreign governments, and in ten thousand ways its duties are performed by trained clerks; and the very persons who by the operation of this bill are left out are the most efficient, accomplished, and educated clerks in any Department of the Government. I insist, therefore, that the amendment proposed by my friend from South Carolina should be adopted. It does nothing more or less than to restore the old law, or rather the law as it is now, and continues it in force during the term fixed by this appropriation bill. I hope that amendment will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. HOLMAN. Just a word before that.

It will be observed, Mr. Chairman, that the duties pertaining to this Bureau of Foreign Mails are transferred simply to the office of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General and made a division of that bureau of the Post-Office Department. I think, sir, that no injury to the service can possibly occur if this provision of the bill is adopted.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. AIKEN. I renew the pro forma amendment. I submit to this committee that that is not a candid statement which has just been made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]. He rises to tell this committee that this is simply a transfer of the foreign mail bureau to be a division in the office of the Second Assistant Postmaster-Genaral, under whose supervision it is placed. Is that all that is done?

Mr. HOLMAN. If the gentleman applies it to the personnel of the force there may be a difference as to that.

Mr. AIKEN. That is all that makes it important.

Mr. HOLMAN. As regards the service it is transferred from the one bureau to the other.

Mr. AIKEN. The service is transferred from one bureau to the other, and 50 per cent. of the clerks are deprived of their offices. If the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS] had an eye to economy and retrenchment of expenditure in this action on their bill, I ask them this simple question: Why did they not destroy the four large well-paid clerks' offices and retain the others? They would have saved $3,000 by it.

And I assert here without fear of contradiction, what has already been well said by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MOULTON], that there are no more efficient, industrious, painstaking clerks in the service of the Government than those very four who are stricken from the roll by this action of the Appropriations Committee. I know they were put in as temporary clerks—two of them at least—and at the request of the Postmaster-General in 1880 they were made permanent clerks because he said the foreign mail service could not do without them. They are ladies of accomplishments, of the highest order of accomplishments, who speak and write several foreign languages. They are the clerks who are best qualified to do this work, but they are stricken from the roll and three or four others left there no better qualified, and who are representatives of the expiring administration.

I think it is taking an undue advantage of the chief of the division—although I know nothing of him personally—to destroy his office when he is abroad doing work for the Government. And I do not think that the action of the committee looks to economy or retrenchment of expenses when it retains in office four clerks receiving high salaries and destroys four clerks of equal efficiency who have the lowest salaries given under the Government for that character of service.

Mr. HOLMAN. I know nothing about the personal aspect of this matter. I do not know a single employé in that particular branch of the service so far as I am aware; and certainly no personal motive could have actuated the action of the Committee on Appropriations. That committee was simply seeking to make, if possible, this service a little more efficient by transferring it to the office of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General; and in doing so they found that they could very conveniently and properly reduce the force. I do not know whom it strikes. I think it would be very unwise for a committee of the House to take a matter of that kind into consideration. I do not know who is affected by it, and I certainly ought not to know, as a legislator, what individual person may be affected by an act of legislation.

I suggest to my friend from South Carolina [Mr. AIKEN] that, no matter how efficient clerks may be who are in the employment of the Government, if it is found their services are not required they ought not to remain in the public service.

Mr. MOULTON. But the Postmaster-General says these clerks are required.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think not.

Mr. MOULTON. I have his statement here to that effect.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope we will now have a vote.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. AIKEN, there were—ayes 25, noes 34.

Mr. AIKEN. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum not having voted the Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. AIKEN] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 56, noes 60.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For salaries of the fifty-six district judges of the United States, $203,500.

Mr. ENGLISH. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the paragraph just read, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "For salaries of the fifty-six district judges of the United States, $205,000: Provided, That on and after the approval of this bill the salary of the United States district judge in the State of Indiana shall be $5,000 per year."

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point of order, but if my colleague would like to submit some observations in support of his amendment I shall reserve the point of order for the present.

Mr. ENGLISH. The object of this amendment is to increase to $5,000 the salary of the United States judge for the district of Indiana. The salary in 1867, some eighteen years ago, was fixed at $3,500. Of course the business of the court has grown very largely in these eighteen years. And beyond the natural increase resulting from the advance in the valuation of property and the increase in population in that State, the duties of the court have also been greatly increased by enactments requiring that the court should be held twice a year in the cities of Evansville, Fort Wayne, and New Albany, in addition to the sessions held regularly at Indianapolis. No provision has ever been made for the additional expense which the district judge is necessarily obliged to undergo in holding court in those cities. I have been requested by a number of our most prominent attorneys to advocate this measure, and I think it nothing more than proper and right that this increase in salary should be made. It is generally desired by the bar of Indianapolis and the State of Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I must make the point of order on that. I wish to say a single word. I sympathize with my colleague in the object of this amendment which he offers, but, while the district judge of Indiana, a gentleman of very great ability as a lawyer, one of the foremost jurists of the country, would have the benefit of this provision, I think that this method of increasing a judicial salary would be unwise, in view of the number of other gentlemen occupying similar positions as district judges whose salaries would not be affected. I think these salaries should all be adjusted at the same time upon a fair and proper basis, and for that reason I am compelled to insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] makes the point of order upon this amendment that it changes existing law and does not retrench expenditures. The Chair sustains the point of order.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

And it shall be the duty of the judges of the Court of Claims to establish, by an order of court, a list of fees to be charged in said court against all persons prosecuting causes therein, such fees to conform as near as may be to fees for like services charged in the circuit courts of the United States, and to be paid by them when the decision shall be adverse to their cause of action, and shall prescribe rules to enforce the collection thereof; and all fees so prescribed shall be for the use of the United States, and accounted for in like manner with the receipts and disbursements of other United States courts.

Mr. McCOMAS. This clause against which I have made the point of order is confessedly, I doubt not, new legislation upon an appropriation bill. I do not think it can be maintained that it is in the interest of economy. I believe it would lead to extravagance and to a great deal of crowding of public business upon the Calendars of both Houses of Congress. I make the point of order against this provision, under the third section of Rule XXI of the House, that, in the first place, it changes existing law; and in the next place it is not germane; and, thirdly, if by some strained construction it be claimed that it is germane to this section of the bill, it is still not in order, because it does not retrench expenditures by reducing the number of officers of the United States, nor does it reduce the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury, nor does it reduce the amount of money appropriated by this bill. It does not relate to the amount of money appropriated by this bill. It does not concern the salary of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, nor does it profess to affect the salary or the compensation or to lessen the number of the officers or employés of the United States. Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the very statement of the language to which I make objection shows that an attempt of this kind to change the law concerning fees in the Court of Claims of the United States is entirely apart from the purpose of this bill.

The law already, in section 1085 and one other section of the Revised Statutes, provides what fees shall be paid by parties who have claims in those courts. I can not conceive how, except by a mistaken idea of economy, this provision could have been inserted in this bill. Its effect will be to drive laymen, who say that the Government honestly owes them money, away from the forum provided for the trial of their causes by the competent judges, and to make them pay tribute upon the introduction of numberless private bills upon the Calendar of this House. It is a step backward.

But, Mr. Chairman, I rose to speak to the point of order, and not upon the merits of this provision, and I insist that, because the regulation of fees in one court of the United States is proposed in these lines, this provision is new legislation, in no wise pertinent to the bill, and therefore it should go out on the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, it had never occurred to me that any gentleman would object to this provision or raise any point of order upon it. It is manifestly a provision which is just to the Government and not unjust to persons who seek remedies against the Government in the Court of Claims. It simply applies in that court a principle which is applied in every other Federal court. As to the point of order, I submit that its application is controlled by the last part of the third clause of Rule XXI of the House. This is a provision in a bill reported by a committee, and therefore if it retrenches expenditures in the broad sense—if it retrenches expenditures in any way—if, in other words, it prevents the depleting of the Treasury in any way, it is in order. I have no doubt that the Chair has had occasion to notice the distinction between the two provisions in Rule XXI to which I have referred, and has observed that the last clause is much broader than the preceding one. It reads:

Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of such amendment, which amendment, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

Now the Chair will observe that it of course became necessary at the very outset to construe that to mean either the bill itself as reported by the committee or an amendment reported by a committee and proposed as an amendment to the bill. Of course it would be too narrow an interpretation of that clause of the rule to say that some other committee, for instance the Committee of Ways and Means or the Committee on the Judiciary, might report a provision which would be in order as an amendment to this bill because it would retrench expenditures in some form or other, and yet that the Committee on Appropriations itself in reporting this bill could not report the same provision. I think it has been uniformly held in interpreting the language of this last clause of the rule that it means that if the provision in question was reported by a committee all that was necessary to give it standing in the House was that it should retrench expenditures in some form, the language being, "which amendment, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures." This provision is germane because it belongs to an appropriation touching the Court of Claims.

Now, I concede that this is new legislation. It does not change existing law; but the enactment of a new law, so far as this rule is concerned, is precisely the same as the change of an old law. The provision, however, retrenches expenditures within the manifest spirit of the rule. The object of the rule is to prevent appropriation bills being made use of as means of depleting the Treasury. The word "retrenchment" as here used is a very broad word. To treat this word, in accordance with the spirit of the rule, as meaning preventing the depletion of the Treasury, carries out more clearly, as the Chair will perceive, the true intent than to construe the word "retrenchment" according to its ordinary sense. In other words, the spirit of the rule is that a measure of new legislation shall be in order upon a bill of this kind if it shall prevent the depletion of the Treasury.

Now, this provision manifestly provides for the payment of money into the Treasury for the purpose of meeting the expenses of this very court. Hence this is in the highest possible sense a measure for retrenchment—a measure for the protection of the Treasury. It prevents its depletion, and indeed brings money into the Treasury to meet the very expenses for which we make appropriation in this paragraph.

Now, while I admit that to put this construction upon the rule the Chair is required to look at the spirit of the rule, I submit that a court or other tribunal called upon to decide a question of construction can never avoid considering the spirit of the instrument to be interpreted rather than its mere letter. Here is a provision in favor of the Government—in favor of the Treasury—a provision which "retrenches" in the broadest sense, because it adds to the public revenues instead of diminishing them.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I was unable to hear all that was said by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] in opposition to the point of order made by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS], but it seems to me the question is easily determined under this rule. I invoke, as did the gentleman from Indiana, the spirit of the rule; and I am quite certain that if we look to that the point of order will be sustained. This rule in its spirit seeks to prevent any legislation upon an appropriation bill that is not germane, and that does not retrench expenditures in one of three ways—

By the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

Now, does the gentleman from Indiana maintain that under this rule it would be competent to report in a bill of this kind a provision requiring public officers to collect fees? If so, then we might have a tariff bill or an internal-revenue bill attached to an appropriation bill, because in that way we would put money into the Treasury. It is not the intention of the rule that we should be allowed to legislate on appropriation bills so as to collect additional funds for the Government, but simply that we may legislate so as to retrench expenditures in connection with the appropriation of money.

What is the proposition of the pending paragraph? This proposition, anomalous in its character, is to require the Court of Claims to sit down and deliberately make out a fee bill, charging unsuccessful litigants just as much as they please and collecting this money, to be paid into the Treasury of the United States. I understand the gentleman from Indiana to hold that such a provision comes within the spirit of the rule providing for a retrenchment of expenditure. Such a conclusion is to my mind clearly unwarranted. The proviso of paragraph 3, Rule XXI, relates only to amendments proposed by committees, and has nothing to do with this provision. If it had, the provision is not at any rate germane and certainly does not retrench expenditures. The central idea of this rule is to prevent the Committee on Appropriations from bringing in upon appropriation bills general legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the pending provision of this bill to be in order should conform to the requirements of Rule XXI; and it being admitted that the paragraph embraces new legislation, the only question to be determined is whether it retrenches expenditures in any of the methods prescribed by the rule. The language of the rule is:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditure.

Then the rule proceeds to specify three methods, in some one of which such a proposition must reduce expenditures.

1. By the reduction of the number or salary of the officers of the United States.

The provision of the bill does not reduce the salary or number of any officers of the Government.

2. By the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

This proposition does not do that.

3. Or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

This provision of the bill does not make any reduction of that kind. What this proposition does is to provide a fund which will go into the Treasury. But in the opinion of the Chair it is not admissible under the rule as it fails to retrench in any of the three ways clearly laid down by the rule. It can not be denied that it provides a fund which would tend to swell the Treasury; but to be in order under the rule it should retrench in one of the three modes specified. However much the Chair might be inclined to deem this provision wise legislation, the only question for the Chair to deal with is whether it comes within the rule. The Chair hardly thinks it does, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. MORSE. I move to amend by inserting, after line 2630, the words:

For one copyist and stenographer, at the rate of $100 per month, $1,200.

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserve a point of order on this amendment until the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] has submitted his remarks.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Chairman, I am informed by gentlemen of the highest respectability, gentlemen practicing before the Court of Claims, that by the bill lately passed, called the French spoliation act, the business of the court will be increased to such an extent that with the present limited number of employés it will be impossible, for at least one or two years, for the court to get through properly with the business it will be called upon to discharge. I hope my friend from Indiana will make no objection to this amendment. There is no question about the necessity of this additional officer. I have no interest in the matter, except that I desire the business of that court shall be properly administered.

Mr. CURTIN. The judges and officers of the court say it is positively necessary this provision should be made.

Mr. HOLMAN. I must insist on the point of order, although I regret to do so. We should consider that all the litigation in this court is carried on at the expense of the Government; the litigants themselves pay no part of the cost.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion the amendment would increase the amount appropriated by the bill and creates a new office, thereby changing existing law. The point of order is well taken, and the amendment is ruled out.

The reading of the bill was then concluded.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that certain sections of the bill were passed over informally to be returned to by consent.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to avail myself of the courtesy extended by the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, when the bill was last under consideration, to go back with a view to make a few amendments which have been suggested. These are two or three in number, I believe. The first is on page 11, line 243. I consent that my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. ERMENTROUT] shall offer his amendment, with the understanding that the three index clerks for indexing claims shall be fixed on the same basis at $1,600 each. I hope he will consent that the three shall stand on the same footing.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. In reply to the gentleman from Indiana, I will say that it seems to me to be severe to tie me down to any terms on that point, for the reason that there was an understanding last Saturday there should be a recess until 8 o'clock in the evening, when this bill was to be taken up, and, acting on that understanding, I was not present, the committee, by unanimous consent, having gone beyond the time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I consent my friend shall offer the amendment.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. I move, in line 243, after the word "dollars," to amend by striking out "one clerk," and substituting in lieu thereof "three clerks;" so it will read "three clerks to index private claims, at $1,600 per annum."

Mr. HOLMAN. Add the word "each" before "per annum."

Mr. ERMENTROUT. You have not got the whole of the amendment.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Does that require unanimous consent?

The CHAIRMAN. What was the condition on which amendments were to come in?

Mr. HOLMAN. Acting for myself, I consented the gentleman should be permitted to offer the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Does it require unanimous consent to offer that amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Alabama that this part of the bill was passed over informally to be returned to when the reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. HOLMAN. Not this; but I trust in consequence of the gentleman's absence——

The CHAIRMAN. If the Chair is in error as to this part of the bill, then it does require unanimous consent to offer an amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I had unanimous consent of the committee to go back upon the bill and offer some amendments. Now I trust my friend from Pennsylvania, in view of the fact that the gentleman from Pennsylvania says he was absent on account of notice given that a recess would be taken from 5 to 8 o'clock, and when instead of taking a recess the House continued in session until 8, and then adjourned until the next day, will he allowed to offer his amendment.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. But the House was in session all the time.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. I wish to say a word.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Does the public necessity demand this?

Mr. HOLMAN. All I can say is the Clerk has been importuning——

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. The Clerk has——

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; the Clerk has been importuning the committee from the beginning of the session to increase the number to three, and the House has adopted a resolution requesting the Committee on Appropriations to make the number three. We thought probably the Clerk might get along with two, but he says the services of three are indispensable.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to show the order under which the committee returns to this section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not desire that we shall go back at this time to a former part of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it agreed that when the reading of the bill is completed the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ERMENTROUT] shall have leave to go back to offer an amendment on page 11?

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no such agreement at this time.

Mr. MILLS. Let the Clerk read on.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] objects to an agreement at this time.

Mr. HOLMAN. No, Mr. Chairman; I simply say that there is no general agreement to go back at this time, but I have no objection to going back at the proper time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to make a statement.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Is there any public necessity for these additional clerks; if so, I will not object to it.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. If the gentleman will listen to me for a moment, I will convince him of that fact.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania has investigated it and is of the opinion the public interests require it, I will not object.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. The House has acted on this matter on a former occasion. We all understand that for several Congresses there have been clerks for indexing private claims. This House passed a resolution at the last session, reported from the Committee on Accounts, authorizing the appointment of three clerks for the purpose of indexing these claims, continuing the work begun in a former Congress.

At the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana the number of these clerks was limited to three. They have been paid heretofore out of the contingent fund of the House, but the Comptroller of the Treasury has discovered that clerks, those created under a resolution of the House, can not be paid out of the contingent fund, and so the matter was referred again to the Committee on Accounts, who reported upon the subject, and I send to the Clerk's desk a copy of the report which I ask to be read in order to show what their opinion is as to whether the public necessities do or do not require this to be done.

And further let me say the Committee on Accounts reported on this subject and requested the Committee on Appropriations to make provision for three index clerks, and when the matter was brought up in the House there was not a single dissenting voice. The resolution of the House directing the committee to continue these clerks was passed.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Let me ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if these clerks were employed under a resolution of the last House?

Mr. ERMENTROUT. Yes, sir.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. And this is to continue them?

Mr. ERMENTROUT. Yes, sir; to continue that work.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. In consideration of the statement made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania I will withdraw my objection and agree that a vote shall be taken at once upon the amendment.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. Then I withdraw the request for the reading of the report.

The question being taken on the adoption of Mr. ERMENTROUT'S amendment, it was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, that proposition, I understand it, increases the number of clerks to three, and the word "each" is inserted after the amount of the "salary" is stated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Three clerks to index private claims at $1,600 each per annum.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. I thought the understanding with the gentleman from Indiana was that $1,800 was to be the compensation?

Mr. HOLMAN. That is enough; I was not aware at the time of the state of the salaries.

Mr. CURTIN addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that only certain sections of this bill were open to amendments under this permission to go back.

Mr. CURTIN. I have before me the section on page 10, to which an amendment has just been offered, and which I wish to amend further. I think the gentleman from Indiana will not object to it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to offer an amendment, to carry out an order of the House, on the tenth page of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana has been recognized.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope I will be excused for the delay. I had yielded to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who appealed to me to offer some proposition, and I was waiting for him.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CURTIN. Mr. Chairman, in line 212, after the word "dollars," I propose to amend by inserting the words:

One messenger in the stationery-room, at $1,200.

I propose, also, in line 227, to reduce the number of laborers from four to three.

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. CURTIN. The reason for that is very simple, but if it is to be ruled out on the point of order, the gentleman from Pennsylvania is not apt to trouble the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CURTIN. I am quite sure I can appeal to the gentleman from Indiana for justice, and I claim to be perfectly willing, as a member of this House, to appeal to the gentleman from Indiana and be dominated by one man as well as by three hundred and twenty-five. I am encouraged to make this appeal for the adoption of this amendment, inasmuch as I find in this bill, on page 15, that in the office of the Postmaster there were employed nine messengers, and that number has been increased to ten; and where there were four messengers at a lower salary they were reduced to three. I understand that the beneficiary of that legislation comes from the State of Indiana. [Laughter.]

I have no objection whatever to any such arrangement, none in the least. It so occurs, however, that I procured the appointment of one man in all the scramble for appointments at the opening of this Congress, and he was appointed as a laborer. This was a young man that I brought down from the mountains of Pennsylvania, fine, scholarly, and accomplished, who was placed in the stationery department of the House, and I appeal to every gentleman who has had business there to testify to his gentlemanly conduct and to the prompt performance of his duties.

Mr. Ancona, the chief of that department, testifies to his capability, integrity, and usefulness, and the Clerk of this House supplements his recommendation. Now, instead of being a laborer, with his qualifications, I merely ask that he be made a messenger because it gives my appointee $1,200 instead of $800 a year. It gives him a position of more consequence and of more character.

I have no objection to the changes made in the messengers of the House, and do most heartily rejoice that the gentlemen in the index-room are accommodated with places, and I am extremely obliged to the gentleman from Indiana for giving my colleague from Berks County the opportunity to amend this bill, and much the more obliged as my colleague holds one of the appointments in his hands. [Laughter.]

It has been my habit in life, in business and in politics or in the practice of my profession, not to accomplish purposes by indirection or by the concealment of facts, and I therefore say that while I rejoice that that Indiana man is promoted, and that my colleague has been successful, I only ask that you give my accomplished young friend a change by raising him from the position of laborer to that of messenger, and abolish one laborer on the roll, which will cost this Government just exactly $220. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana makes the point of order——

Mr. CURTIN. Am I ruled out? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was just going to rule on the point of order made by the gentleman from Indiana against the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CURTIN. I trust the gentleman from Indiana, on the appeal I have made, will withdraw the point of order, and along with the man from Indiana and the man from Berks County, let in my young friend from the mountains. Oh, do withdraw it! You will never regret it, my friend from Indiana. You will die happier. [Great laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to say a single word for myself and the Committee on Appropriations. Of course when this bill is considered personal interests at once arise on all sides. Gentlemen appeal to me in connection with employés both in the House and in the Departments to permit amendments to increase salaries, to change from one grade of compensation to another, and to make transpositions like this proposed by my friend from Pennsylvania, which is very insignificant on its face but involves a large increase of salary. Under such circumstances but one of two courses is left to the Committee on Appropriations. Either the rules of the House must be rigidly adhered to, or else gentlemen should be permitted on all hands to come in with their respective amendments. And I would like to submit to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, since he has made his very pleasant appeal, in such amiable good nature, too, whether it is wise policy to throw open this bill and let all of us submit our amendments and load it down with increased items of expenditure.

Mr. MORSE. If they are right, why not?

Mr. CURTIN. It is right to throw open to amendment this bill or any other measure before Congress if the three hundred and twenty-five men elected to legislate for this great nation of the United States are competent for their duties. If they are not competent for their duties, but must be handicapped and pinioned by rules which give a few men the control of this body, then the people should elect some other men than those who are here now. [Applause.]

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania not think it an evidence of the highest capacity on the part of members of this House to legislate that they impose very severe restraints upon themselves, and that each consents the restraint shall apply to him as to all others? It seems to me the highest evidence of wisdom in deliberative bodies not only to impose restraints on their own action but to create facilities for the enforcement of the restraints imposed.

I regret very much I have not the authority from the Committee on Appropriations to waive the point of order, but I would be derelict in my duty to that committee had I consented to do so until I had submitted this proposition to that committee. I am simply its organ; that and nothing more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana makes the point of order that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN] changes existing law and does not retrench expenditures, and is therefore obnoxious to clause 3 of Rule XXI and out of order. The Chair would ask the indulgence of the committee while he directs the Clerk to read that section of the rule.

Mr. CURTIN. It is unnecessary to have the rule read. I have never read the rules, but I have heard them often enough to know that if the point of order is insisted on I have no right to insist on my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion the point of order is well taken. It changes existing law and does not retrench expenditures.

Mr. CURTIN. I do not know whether to appeal to the House or to go to the Senate. I appeal from the decision of the Chair anyhow.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question being taken, it was decided in the affirmative.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 10, line 212, after the word "each," strike out the words "one page, $720," and insert in lieu thereof "two pages at $720 each."

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. If unanimous consent is required I object. I make the point of order that we have passed from that part of the bill.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I want to be heard before the Chair gives his decision on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The other evening when I came up here for the consideration of this legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill there were only twenty-five or thirty of us present and we allowed the reading to go on and the bill to be more than half completed rather than raise the question of a quorum.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I withdraw my objection to go back.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. This amendment which I have offered is in conformity with the order of the House; and I think nobody objects to it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the amendment be again reported.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It is in conformity with the order of the House made this session.

The question being taken upon agreeing to the amendment, there were—ayes 30, noes 44.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to add in line 312, after the word "men," the words "one on each side of the hall."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Chairman, with the consent of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], I ask the committee to recur to line 271 for the purpose of offering an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 271 insert:

"To pay the six committee clerks now employed by resolution of the House the same compensation and for the same period as is provided for the payment of session clerks employed by the House, $1,080; to be immediately available."

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Chairman, we have, as is well known, the annual clerks, session clerks employed under the law, and clerks employed by resolution. Our theory is that we pay these clerks, except the session clerks, for four months instead of three. Now this amendment is designed merely to place the clerks employed under resolution upon terms of equality with the session clerks.

Mr. KEIFER. How many of them are there?

Mr. ELLIS. There are six, and three of them, I may state, are probably the hardest worked of any in the whole category of clerks.

Mr. BLOUNT. I suggest to the gentleman that in the division of clerks into annual and session clerks the session clerks receive the smallest pay, so that his amendment proposes to give the clerks to whom it refers the smallest pay that any of the clerks receive.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRENTS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to come in at the end of line 707. I send it to the Clerk's desk to be read.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, before that amendment is offered I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] if there are not some paragraphs before that which have been reserved?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] that this amendment applies to one of the reserved paragraphs.

Mr. DINGLEY. But I think there is pending an amendment to the paragraph itself.

The Clerk read the amendment offered by Mr. BRENTS, as follows:

At the end of line 707 insert the following:

"And each of the cities of Tacoma and Seattle, in Washington Territory, shall be, and it is hereby, made a port of delivery, and the deputy collector who shall be stationed at each of them shall receive such compensation, not exceeding $1,200 per annum, as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe."

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I will reserve the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. COX, of New York. I make the point of order that it is new legislation, and does not retrench expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Washington Territory [Mr. BRENTS] upon the point of order.

Mr. BRENTS. Mr. Chairman, this may be new legislation, but I think it will be found, upon examination, that it does not increase expenditures.

Mr. POTTER. Does it reduce expenditures?

Mr. BRENTS. It may not reduce them, but I can modify it so that it will. If that point is made, I will modify the amendment so as to make the salary $1,199 per annum, and thus save to this impoverished Government $2 a year. These deputy collectors will take the place of the inspectors now required at those ports at a salary of $1,200 each. I am sure that the gentleman will not only withdraw any point of order he may be disposed to make, but will support the amendment because it is in the interest of economy.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read, as follows:

At the end of line 707 insert the following:

"And each of the cities of Tacoma and Seattle, in Washington Territory, shall be, and it is hereby, made a port of delivery, and the deputy collector who shall be stationed at each of them shall receive such compensation, not exceeding $1,199 per annum, as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe."

Mr. BRENTS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say in support of this amendment that the Secretary of the Treasury, under the authority given in the Revised Statutes of the United States, has designated the ports of Portland, Oregon, and Port Townsend, in Washington Territory, as ports between which and the British colonies of North America merchandise may be carried in bond. This merchandise—and there is a great amount of it—is carried by the railroads which terminate at those two cities and has to be transshipped to the ocean vessels that touch there.

In order that there may be bonded warehouses at those ports this amendment must be made, creating those cities ports of delivery, and the principal object of the amendment is to provide that the warehouses which have been erected by the merchants and shippers may be bonded, so that this merchandise, while being transshipped from the railroads to the steamers and from the steamers to the railroads, may be properly stored, and of course it is obvious that the large commerce of those cities will be greatly facilitated by such a provision of law.

The CHAIRMAN. It is upon the point of order that the chairman desires to hear the gentleman from Washington Territory.

Mr. BRENTS. The point of order has not been made against the amendment as modified, and we have now entered upon the discussion of the merits of the proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] to make the point of order.

Mr. BRENTS. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] made the point of order against the amendment in the form in which it stood originally, but he did not make the point against the amendment as I modified it, and I have been for some time discussing the proposition on its merits.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman [Mr. BRENTS] modified his amendment, but the Chair supposed the gentleman desired to be heard on the point of order, and the Chair thinks that the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] had a right to presume from what occurred that the gentleman proposed to discuss the point of order.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] does not insist upon the point.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] insist upon the point of order?

Mr. BRENTS. Mr. Chairman, I insist that the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] can not make the point of order upon this amendment at this time. He has listened to me discussing this proposition upon its merits and has sat in his seat and made no objection, and I insist that he has waived the point of order, and it is now too late for him to renew it.

Now, I submit it is too late for any point of order to be raised, and certainly it seems to me the Chair is going very far in suggesting to the gentleman from New York that he may now make his point of order when perhaps he does not desire to do so, and at any rate has waived his right. I do not intimate, of course, that the Chair wishes to do anything unfair, but I think the gentleman from New York understands the rules of the House sufficiently to take care of himself in a matter of this kind; and, having allowed me to go on and discuss the merits of this proposition, he has waived his point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think the gentleman from New York requires taking care of; and if he did the Chair would not undertake to do it. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRENTS. No; I do not think the Chair would.

The CHAIRMAN. In this connection the Chair desires to be indulged in a statement of the facts. The gentleman from Washington Territory [Mr. BRENTS] offered his amendment; the gentleman from New York made his point of order; and the Chair then requested the gentleman from Washington Territory to address himself to the point of order. The gentleman proceeded, stating that he would modify his amendment. Those are the facts; and the Chair thinks that the gentleman from Washington Territory having been called upon to speak to the point of order can not prevent the gentleman from New York from making the point if he insists upon it.

Mr. BRENTS. I insist, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment is not subject to the point of order. If the Chair overrules my point that the question of order comes too late, then I am willing to discuss the point of order with the gentleman from New York, or I am willing to submit it to the decision of the Chair without further argument.

Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. Chairman, I propose to develop all the commerce that is possible at the places in which the gentleman is is interested, and since the Committee on Appropriations does not raise any point of order upon the amendment I will withdraw my point.

Mr. BRENTS. I thought you would.

Mr. COX, of New York. My friend is on crutches, and I would not take advantage of him.

Mr. BRENTS. I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. HOLMAN. I must reserve a point of order on this amendment.

Mr. BRENTS. It is too late.

Mr. HOLMAN. If this amendment be withheld until we come to that part of the bill, possibly I may feel justified in withholding any point of order. But I desire now to offer some amendments from the Committee on Appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Indiana will withhold his amendments, the Chair will rule upon the point of order.

Mr. BRENTS. I understand the gentleman from Indiana simply reserves a point of order, and is willing to allow this matter to rest for the present.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest that the gentleman withhold his amendment for the present until we come to that part of the bill.

Mr. BRENTS. Very well; I will do so.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend by striking out in line 1742 the word "six" and inserting "eight," so as to make the appropriation for the public gardener $1,800 instead of $1,600.

Mr. DINGLEY. I call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana to the fact that we are about to pass from the paragraph embracing lines 695 to 707.

Mr. HOLMAN. We will come to that in a moment. I have some amendments to offer.

Mr. DINGLEY. The gentleman proposes to return to that paragraph?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HOLMAN, it was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend, by striking out in line 2405, page 98, the words "two clerks at $1,000," and inserting "one clerk at $1,000, one female clerk at $900," and by changing the total of the paragraph; so as to read "$30,960." The effect of the amendment is to allow one clerk at $1,000 and one at $900, instead of two clerks at $1,000 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KEIFER. I have a small amendment to which I hope nobody will object. It is to insert, after the words "journal clerk," in line 199, page 9, the words:

While such positions are held by the present incumbents, and no longer, $3,600 each.

Mr. HOLMAN. I must make a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman will remember that this is in accordance with previous legislation in reference to our clerks here who have served a long time. The persons whom this amendment would benefit are the journal clerk (who has occupied his present position for a great many years) and the chief clerk. In the Forty-second Congress there was inserted in the legislative appropriation bill, on motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], this clause:

Chief clerk and journal clerk of the House, while such positions are held by the present incumbents, and no longer, $3,600 each.

This amendment is in precise accord with the legislation then had.

Mr. HOLMAN. This matter was before the Committee on Appropriations. I shall have to insist on the point of order.

Mr. KEIFER. Let the House vote on the question. Everybody is ready to vote for the amendment. I think the gentleman himself will vote for it. This is a plain matter, relating to two clerks who have long been in the service of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair the amendment changes existing law, while it does not retrench expenditures, and is therefore obnoxious to the third clause of Rule XXI.

Mr. DINGLEY. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after line 917:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, requested to submit to Congress, at the opening of the next regular session, such modifications of the laws relating to commerce and navigation as will simplify and improve the same, and remove from American vessels, whether engaged in fishing or in domestic or foreign commerce, all unnecessary restrictions and burdens."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DINGLEY. I now withdraw the amendment coming over from Saturday to increase the salary of Commissioner of Navigation from $3,600 to $4,000.

Mr. NEECE. I move the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 455, after the word "class," strike out "one" and insert "two," and then insert "one clerk, $1,000," in line 456, before the word "in;" after the word "all," in line 456, strike out "nineteen thousand one hundred and forty" and insert "twenty thousand three hundred and forty;" so that the whole clause shall read:

"For three commissioners, at $3,500 each; one chief examiner, $3,000; one secretary, $2,000; one stenographer, $1,600; one clerk class 2, and one clerk, $1,000; one messenger, $840; in all, $20,340."

Mr. MILLS. I make the point of order that that changes the law and does not retrench expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. NEECE. I do not.

Mr. CANNON. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. CANNON. The amendment is not subject to the point of order if it is only for the addition of a clerk at $1,000 and a laborer. Section 171 of the Revised Statutes, with which the Chair is familiar, provides for such number as Congress may from time to time appropriate for. So it has always been held that amendments are in order when for any of the four classes of clerks, but not for clerks above those classes. It is a mere matter of appropriation and not a matter of change of existing law so far as this amendment is concerned.

Mr. MILLS. How much does this appropriate more than the law for this year?

Mr. CANNON. Two more clerks.

Mr. MILLS. Then under the constant rulings in the committee it is not in order, as the existing law is the law for the current year. The Revised Statutes have nothing to do with it. If the existing appropriation law, expiring 30th of June next, changes the Revised Statutes, then that becomes the existing law. If this amendment changes the number of clerks or the appropriation provided in the current law for legislative expenses, then it is amenable to the point of order as changing the law and not retrenching expenses.

Mr. CANNON. I ask the Chair to refer to sections 163, 164, 165, 166, 168, and 169 of the Revised Statutes. And if the Chair will permit me, I will make a single remark, and I would be glad to have the attention of the gentleman from Indiana. Under these clauses of the Revised Statutes these clerks are provided for in all the Departments, and under the construction that has always been given to those sections under Rule XXI of the House, it has always been in order to increase salaries within the four classes. It is a mere matter of appropriation.

It is not in order to increase salaries above $1,800 because they are not provided for in those general clauses of the Revised Statutes. It is as much in order to increase under those clauses the number of clerks as to increase the appropriation for railway service provided for by general law.

Mr. MILLS. The current appropriation bill is the existing law.

Mr. HOLMAN. If I understand correctly the appropriations made in this bill are exactly those authorized by existing law. I submit any increase, therefore, is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will have read the part of the present law for the civil service.

The Clerk read as follows:

For three commissioners, at $3,500 each; one chief examiner, at $3,000; one secretary, at $2,000; one stenographer, at $1,600; one clerk, at $1,200; and one messenger, at $840; in all, $19,140.

Mr. MILLS. That is the existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment offered would change existing law upon that subject. The provisions of law under which the Civil Service Commission is now operating fix the salaries of its officers, and the amendment proposes to increase them. The Chair thinks that it is not competent on an appropriation bill under Rule XXI, section 3, to entertain such an amendment.

Mr. CANNON. May I ask if the Chair holds that this is not a department within the meaning of the section of the Revised Statutes to which I have referred?

The CHAIRMAN. What the Chair holds is that the appropriation bill of last year fixing the salaries at what is provided in this bill is the existing law in contemplation of Rule XXI, section 3. It has been so held by every occupant of the chair without dissent, so far as the present occupant of the chair knows.

Mr. CANNON. Then permit me to ask the Chair if the same rule would not hold where you move to increase the appropriation for star-route service, or for mail service, provided you increase it over and above what the service was receiving for the current year?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that it would not necessarily follow that it would be in order on this bill to increase the amount that is provided for by the law which created the Civil Service Commission, and under which it has been operating ever since its creation.

Mr. HOLMAN. There are two other amendments to which I wish to call the attention of the committee. The first is in line 702, on page 29 of the bill, which I ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "shall," in line 702, insert, "execute, when required by the Secretary of the Treasury, bond in such penalty and with such security as the Secretary of the Treasury shall approve, conditioned for the faithful discharge of his duties, and shall."

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, for the purpose of perfecting my own proposition, I move to insert what I send to the desk at the end of the paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "States," in line 707, insert:
"And in carrying into effect the foregoing provision, the President is hereby authorized to rearrange, consolidate, and reduce the collection districts, and change the location of the port or ports of entry in any district."

Mr. MILLS. I object to that amendment. It changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. MILLS. I make the point of order upon it that it changes existing law.

Mr. HOLMAN. Upon its face this proposition reduces expenditures by reducing the number of districts, and the Chair will perceive that under the law each district has at least one port of entry, generally but one, although in the confusion of our legislation some instances occur where more than one has been established.

Now the consolidation of the districts reduces expenditures. It reduces the number of districts to begin with, and every district of course has at least one port of entry under the law, and is provided with a clerk. It could not be a district without a port of entry, and there can not be a port of entry without a clerk and a salary. So the power to reduce, which is conferred by this amendment, necessarily retrenches expenditures, and contemplates its reduction.

Mr. MILLS. It must show affirmatively upon its face that it does retrench expenditures to be within the rule.

Mr. HOLMAN. And another word in this connection. My friend from Texas will see the importance of this, because the other provision would be imperfect without it, and that is already before the committee.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I object to this proposition, and I do so because of the importance of the subject with which it deals. It is too great entirely in its importance to be legislated upon in this hurried manner. It is a subject that demands careful consideration. If you confer upon the President the power to abolish or rearrange these districts the result of such a power can never be determined in advance. You do not know how it would be executed. Ports of entry may be established year after year. Others may be established, and new districts may be created instead of the old ones.

It is a subject which has been already considered by our committee. The result of this would be that at the next session of Congress there would be innumerable petitions and bills introduced here asking for a rearrangement of these districts. It ought to be left to a committee of this House to look into the subject carefully and rearrange these districts after mature consideration, and it is a power that ought not to be given into the hands of any one man. This would only complicate the matter, and enlarge the difficulties which are already complained of.

Mr. HOLMAN. Just a word further. This confers upon the President exactly the same power in regard to customs districts that he possesses now in reference to internal-revenue districts. Under that power, as all are aware, the internal-revenue districts have been reduced from one hundred and twenty-six to eighty-five, and it is proposed to confer upon him the same power over these customs districts.

My friend from Texas will see that there is already a provision in the bill which authorizes the discontinuance of ports of entry where the revenues are less than the expenses, and this is simply a provision to carry that into effect.

Mr. MILLS. That was an invasion. I want to draw the distinction between internal-revenue districts and collection of customs districts. The Internal Revenue Department has nothing, I repeat, to do but to go and collect the taxes and pay them to the Government. But your ports of entry directly affect your whole trade; it affects all the trade of our people with foreign countries.

Mr. LONG. The one is very simple; the other is very complex.

Mr. MILLS. Very complex indeed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask to be permitted to say a single word. This proposition is in harmony with the views of, and substantially came from, the late Secretary of the Treasury in a report made to the House under a requisition made upon him contained in one of the appropriation bills. It is substantially, almost in words, the very proposition which came down to us from the Treasury; and, according to the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury, it would reduce the expenses of that branch of the service over $1,000,000.

Mr. MILLS. The Committee on Appropriations have nothing to do with this question.

The CHAIRMAN. There is one portion of the amendment which is in this language:

And in carrying into effect the foregoing provision the President is hereby authorized to rearrange—

If it had stopped there the Chair would have no doubt the gentleman's point of order was well taken; but it proceeds—consolidate, and reduce the collection districts, and change the location of the port or ports of entry in any district.

It changes existing law beyond all question. But if it changes existing law by reducing the number of collection districts, it seems to the Chair it must necessarily reduce expenditures.

Mr. MILLS. Not necessarily; because there may still be the same number of officers.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is in doubt upon the question, and will submit it to the committee. The question is, Shall the point of order made upon this amendment be sustained?

Mr. KING addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentlemen from Louisiana rise?

Mr. KING. The committee is in such confusion that we can not hear the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken. The committee will be in order. The question is, Shall the point of order submitted by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] be sustained?

Mr. BAYNE. Will the Chair say what it is? We have not been able in this part of the Hall to understand what was going on.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] does not retrench expenditures; that it changes existing law, and hence is obnoxious to Rule XXI, section 3.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. What was that amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "States," in line 707, insert:
"And in carrying into effect the foregoing provision the President is hereby authorized to rearrange, consolidate, and reduce the collection districts and change the location of the port or ports of entry in any district."

The question having been submitted to the committee, the point of order was sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the first amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I ask that it be again read.

The amendment was again read.

The question being taken on the amendment, it was adopted.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I move to amend by striking out the whole paragraph from line 695 to line 707, inclusive.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. DINGLEY. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of calling the attention of the gentleman from Indiana to one difficulty that will arise under the provision as it stands now in this bill. It is this:

Such deputies to receive only the fees collected thereat as compensation for their services.

Now, in every collection district there are three classes of ports: First, ports of entry; second, ports of delivery; and third, ordinary ports. The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, as introduced here, provides simply for ports of entry, and it provides that instead of the ordinary collector being appointed at certain classes of ports of entry a deputy collector shall be appointed.

Mr. HOLMAN. With the powers of a collector.

Mr. DINGLEY. With the powers of a collector, the only effect being to reduce the salary. It would be better, if the object is to reduce the compensation, to provide distinctly for a reduction of compensation, and not to set up a class of officers known as deputy collectors who have certain powers that do not belong to deputy collectors under the law.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LONG was recognized, and yielded his time to Mr. DINGLEY.

Mr. DINGLEY. Again there is a certain class of ports where deputy collectors now act, particularly fishing ports, where all the fees received amount to only $100, $200, and in many cases not exceeding $300. Yet the duties of the deputy collector at such port are of such a character in giving licenses to fishing-vessels as to occupy the whole attention of that officer. If the compensation of that officer is limited to the fees of that port they will not in many cases exceed $100 or $200; and it will be absolutely impossible to supply officers at such ports as these.

While I am in harmony with the object the gentleman from Indiana has in this portion of the bill, it seems to me that the provisions by which he proposes to execute it may introduce inextricable confusion into our collection districts.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have but a word to say in answer to the gentleman from Maine. It is this: the fees of the collectors and deputies are very ample. As all gentlemen are aware, if the amount of fees is small the services are correspondingly small.

Mr. DINGLEY. But the gentleman will bear in mind that there are many services rendered by deputy collectors to which there are no fees attached.

Mr. HOLMAN. I know; but there are fees for almost every service rendered, and certainly if an officer of this class receives all the fees he must receive sufficient compensation. There are many of these ports which do not pay a cent into the Treasury, and where the office of collector is a mere sinecure. We pay out some hundreds of thousands of dollars a year for these offices without any services being rendered in return, and the late Secretary of the Treasury, one of the wisest and most prudent of our public men, assured Congress at the last session that this was a measure which could be safely carried out.

Mr. DINGLEY. The Secretary recommended not this, but the consolidation of the small collectorships. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. LONG. I renew the amendment, Mr. Chairman, simply for the purpose of saying that it is evident, from the discussion so far, that with regard to this section we are "going it blind." We are informed that the Committee on Ways and Means have had this whole subject under consideration, and that they are satisfied they can not recommend any measure for adoption by the House at this short session. I believe it is desirable that we should strike out this whole paragraph, and I make that motion.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, that motion has been made already.

Mr. LONG. No, Mr. Chairman. The motion made was to strike out from line 695 to line 702, inclusive; but my motion is to strike out the whole paragraph.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before the vote is taken I wish to say a word, and that is that this very measure was passed by the House at the last session.

Mr. LONG. But it did not become law.

Mr. HOLMAN. No; the Senate struck it out; but I trust that this side of the House will see to it that a measure which was regarded as proper and was passed by this House at the last session shall not now be abandoned.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I presume the purposes of this paragraph are, as stated by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], those of retrenchment, but I feel quite assured that in no other way could he do more to effect a contrary purpose than by enacting this paragraph into law. I am as much in favor of retrenchment as he, but what does this provision do in my own State? It strikes out a cordon of custom-houses, extending from the mouth of the Kennebec River to the New Brunswick line, along a seacoast two hundred miles in length, on which there are so many harbors and inlets that, if you follow the indentations of the coast, the distance is more than a thousand miles. There is presented the grandest opportunity for smuggling that is to be found anywhere upon the whole Atlantic coast.

These custom-houses are the police officers that guard that coast, and although it may be true that some of them do not pay directly quite as much as they cost, yet I repeat what I said here at the last session, that when you abolish these collectorships you will find that the ports of Boston and New York will not pay as much into the Treasury as they do now. Why, sir, I knew $30,000 to be collected at one time right in my own city as a penalty for smuggling, and the result was that for a time it ceased; but with this provision enacted into law it will prevail more than ever. You do not abolish your police force or your police court here in Washington because the fees that they collect do not pay the cost of maintaining them, or because they are not always employed. The very fact that you have police officers here deters men from committing crime. So the very fact that you have this cordon of custom-houses all along this two hundred miles of seacoast and one hundred and fifty miles of frontier deters men from infracting your revenue laws and smuggling into this country millions of dollars' worth of goods that to-day come in regularly and pay duty. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. LONG; and there were—ayes 67, noes 75.

Mr. MILLIKEN and Mr. MILLS demanded tellers.

Several MEMBERS. No quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. LONG were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 97, noes 77.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now move that the committee rise and report the bill with the amendments to the House.

Mr. BRENTS. My amendment is still pending.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Regular order!

Mr. BRENTS. I am entitled to the floor by consent of the Committee of the Whole. A while ago my amendment was left pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has uniformly held that the gentleman in charge of the bill is entitled to recognition to control its management.

Mr. BRENTS. But my amendment is pending and undisposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair had no information to that effect.

Mr. BRENTS. Such is the fact.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is now informed that the gentleman withdrew his amendment.

Mr. BRENTS. No; never in the world. It was simply passed over by consent.

The CHAIRMAN. If that be so the gentleman is entitled to have his amendment considered, and the Chair will endeavor to secure such consideration.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw my motion that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington Territory [Mr. BRENTS] is now recognized.

Mr. BRENTS. At the time this arrangement was entered into by consent, I had been discussing the amendment which I proposed, and had made a statement of the facts. If there is no further opposition I will not take up the time of the Committee of the Whole by debate.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the proposition of the gentleman will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 694 insert:

"And that each of the cities of Tacoma and Seattle, in Washington Territory, shall be, and it is hereby, made a port of delivery; and the deputy collector who shall be stationed at each of them shall receive such compensation, not exceeding $1,199 per annum, as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe."

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to raise a question of order on that amendment.

Mr. BRENTS. It is too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia will state his point of order.

Mr. BLOUNT. The amendment changes existing law and does not reduce expenditures in either of the modes specified by the rule.

Mr. BRENTS. This amendment is not offered now; it was offered some time ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington Territory will address himself to the point of order of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BRENTS. But I trust the Chair will allow me to make a point of order against the point which the gentleman from Georgia now proposes to make. I submit that his point of order comes too late. This amendment was offered some time ago; the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] made a point of order against it; it was then modified; the discussion was entered upon. I proceeded to discuss not only the point of order but the merits of this proposition. The gentleman from New York then undertook to make another point of order. I objected on the ground that the point of order was too late. Finally the gentleman from New York withdrew and abandoned his point of order. Then the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] said that he would make a point of order; and I objected. Then the matter by consent was allowed to rest until we should come to this part of the bill, the gentleman from Indiana remarking that he might not insist on the point of order. Still I did not waive the point of order that he was too late.

The CHAIRMAN. But is it not true that the gentleman from Indiana at no time withdrew the point he had made?

Mr. BRENTS. The gentleman did not make it until long after it was too late to make it—after the merits had been discussed.

Mr. BLOUNT. Before insisting on the point of order I would like to ask the gentleman whether the Treasury Department has recommended these ports of delivery?

Mr. BRENTS. Certainly it has—repeatedly.

Mr. BLOUNT. I supposed that the proposition came in without due consideration. I do not press the point of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Why does the gentleman make the salary $1,199 instead of $1,200?

Mr. BRENTS. To obviate the point of order made a while ago that the amendment did not reduce expenditures. These deputy collectors might under the law receive a salary of $1,200 each; but I have modified the amendment so as to save this great Government the sum of $2 a year.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think we ought to give the even $1,200. I move to amend the gentleman's amendment in that respect.

Mr. BRENTS. I accept the amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. There is no use of stickling about a dollar or two.

The amendment of Mr. BRENTS as modified was adopted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the committee now rise and report the bill with the amendments to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BLACKBURN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8179) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report back the same with sundry amendments and a recommendation that the bill pass as amended.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that it insisted on its amendments to the bill (H. R. 7970) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House, agreed to the conference asked for, and had appointed Mr. DAWES, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. PLUMB as managers of said conference on its part.

FRENCH AND AMERICAN COMMISSIONS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

In response to the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 9th of January, 1885, calling for certain correspondence concerning the transactions of the late French and American Commission, I transmit herewith a report of the Secretary of State of the 16th instant in relation to the subject.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 17, 1885.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (S. 2246) to provide for the purchase of additional land for the uses of the public building in the city of New Bedford, State of Massachusetts; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same.

Mr. WARNER, of Tennessee, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (S. 2594) to change the name of the Manufacturers' National Bank of New York to the Manufacturers' National Bank of Brooklyn, N. Y.; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted in the following cases:

To Mr. REAGAN, for the balance of the day, on account of sickness.

To Mr. HATCH, of Missouri, for the remainder of the day, on account of sickness.

GEORGE COUSINS.

On motion of Mr. PATTON, by unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. 5820) for the relief of George Cousins was recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs, together with the accompanying report.

JURISDICTION OF UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. TUCKER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8247) to define the jurisdiction of the circuit and district courts of the United States in certain cases; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL CEMETERY, BAXTER SPRINGS, KANS.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent I wish to make a statement. Some time ago various petitions asking for an appropriation to establish a national cemetery at Baxter Springs, Kans., were referred in this House, but no entry was made in the Journal of that fact. I now ask that they be received, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

TIME FOR TAKING A RECESS.

Mr. WILLIS. I rise to make a privileged motion. I understand the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] states that he expects to get through with the legislative, &c., appropriation bill by 6 o'clock this evening. I ask at that time the House take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I shall object unless the understanding is that before 11 o'clock to-morrow the House shall adjourn.

Mr. WILLIS. There is no objection to that.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Very well, with that understanding I do not object.

The motion of Mr. WILLIS was then agreed to.

Mr. WILLIS moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RUPERT G. HILL.

Mr. STEELE. I rise to a question of privilege. The Committee on Military Affairs was furnished with erroneous information on the subject of the restoration of a certain man to the Army, and the committee want to withdraw that bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What is the bill?

Mr. STEELE. It is the bill (H. R. 5714) for the relief of Rupert G. Hill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill is withdrawn by unanimous consent.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move the previous question on the bill (H. R. 8179) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union with sundry amendments.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask by unanimous consent that the amendments be agreed to, with the exception of the one reducing the number of ports of entry.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The pending question is on striking out the following:

That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to discontinue the appointment and services of officers at ports of entry in all cases where for two successive years last past the revenues collected at such ports are less than the salary and expenses of the officers employed in the duties thereof: Provided, however, That the President may appoint a deputy collector at any such port, in his discretion, who shall execute, when required by the Secretary of the Treasury, bond in such penalty and with such security as the Secretary of the Treasury shall approve, conditioned for the faithful discharge of his duties, and shall perform all duties pertaining to such port, such deputies to receive only the fees collected thereat as compensation for their services; but if at any such port such fees collected in any one year shall exceed $1,500, such excess shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 84, noes 76.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand the yeas and nays.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 26, noes 168.

So (one-fifth not having voted in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion to strike out was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rules the yeas and nays will be taken on the passage of the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent to offer a resolution at this time with reference to an additional force required for the enrollment—— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule the yeas and nays must be called upon this bill.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask if we can not by unanimous consent dispense with the call of the roll.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the rule does not permit it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I wish to state that the clerk wants additional assistance in the enrolling-room, and this resolution that I seek to offer is to permit that increase. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken upon the passage of the bill; and there were—yeas 210, nays 3, not voting 111; as follows:

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. WARNER, of Tennessee, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 7496) for the relief of Wehrle, Werk & Son.

ADDITIONAL ENROLLING CLERKS.

Mr. NEECE. I desire to submit a privileged resolution. This is a resolution, I will say, which is asked for by the Clerk of the House, asking an additional service in the enrolling-room.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the Clerk of the House has reported that he wants to get this legislative bill enrolled, if possible, to-night, and it is important to get the resolution which the gentleman from Illinois proposes adopted, if possible. The resolution will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be authorized to employ not exceeding two additional clerks, to assist the enrolling clerk for the remainder of this session, at a rate of compensation to be fixed by the Committee on Accounts, and to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. NEECE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THE JEANNETTE EXPEDITION.

Mr. BUCHANAN, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, submitted a report of an investigation directed by the House into the facts connected with the Jeannette expedition; which was ordered to be printed and laid on the table.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. MCADOO. I ask unanimous consent for permission to print in addition to my remarks delivered to-day, on the subject of the abuses of fraud detectives, so called in the Treasury Department, a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury.

There was no objection.

[The letter appears on page 1807.]

EXTENSION OF FREE-DELIVERY SYSTEM.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York (in behalf of Mr. COSGROVE), from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, by unanimous consent, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 1070, a bill (H. R. 8248) to extend the free-delivery service; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RETIREMENT OF GENERAL GRANT.

Mr. SKINNER, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print a paragraph containing a resolution of the senate of the State of New York with reference to the bill for the retirement of General Grant.

There was no objection.

The resolution is as follows:

ALBANY, N. Y., February 10.

The senate to-day by a unanimous vote, only that Senator Robb voted nay, passed the following preamble and resolutions:

Whereas Mr. GEORGE F. EDMUNDS on January 13, 1885, introduced in the Senate of the United States a bill to authorize an additional appointment on the retired-list of the Army, which bill has passed the Senate and is now awaiting action in the House of Representatives; and

Whereas said bill is intended to create a position on the retired-list of the Army for that illustrious soldier, Ulysses S. Grant:

Resolved, That our Representatives in Congress are requested to vote for the bill and urge a measure which will place General Grant upon the retired-list.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask unanimous consent that the House may now take a recess until to-morrow at 10 o'clock, instead of waiting until the hour fixed by the House during the day.

There was no objection; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock.

AFTER RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 10 o'clock a. m. (Wednesday, February 18).

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FOLLETT. I present a report from a committee of conference.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8039) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Substitute for the matter stricken out by said Senate amendment the following: "including compensation not exceeding $600 for additional labor or services;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 44, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: "In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$554,930;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 45, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$390,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

JOHN F. FOLLETT,
J. G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.
P. B. PLUMB,
H. L. DAWES,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. FOLLETT. I ask that the reading of the statement by the managers on the part of the House be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

The statement is as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8039) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1886 submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action recommended in the accompanying conference report:

If the action recommended by the conference committee is agreed to the bill as it passed the House will be changed as follows:

The salary of the assistant inspector of buildings is increased from $1,000 to $1,200.

Fifteen thousand dollars is added for defraying the expenses of assessing real property in the District.

A provision is inserted that all moneys which have been or may hereafter be legally retained from contractors shall be invested in bonds of the United States or the District of Columbia and held by the Treasurer of the United States, and any sum which has been or shall be realized from such investments in excess of the amounts due to contractors shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the United States and of the District of Columbia in equal parts.

The police force is increased five, at $900 each.

The sum for teachers in the public schools is increased from $385,000 to $390,000.

A provision is inserted that hereafter the supply of Potomac water may be extended to points in the District beyond the limits of Washington and Georgetown upon like terms and conditions as are provided by law for the supply of the same in those cities.

The amount appropriated by the bill as it passed the House was $1,707,328.46; as it passed the Senate, $1,725,643.46; as agreed upon in conference, $1,716,643.46.

JOHN F. FOLLETT,
J. G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. FOLLETT. I move concurrence in the report of the committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FOLLETT moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask that when the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union resumes consideration of the river and harbor bill the amendments for convenience of the clerks shall be considered in the order of the paragraphs of the section under consideration to which they may be offered.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

GRACE F. EDES.

Mr. KEAN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8249) granting an increase of pension to Grace F. Edes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN R. M'GOLDRICK.

Mr. BLANCHARD, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8250) for the relief of John R. McGoldrick, of Louisiana; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

R. D. BECKLEY AND L. HOWARD.

Mr. YOUNG, by unanimous consent, introduced the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That the Clerk be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay out of the contingent fund of the House to R. D. Beckley and Leon Howard, for services as messengers, the difference between the pay of laborers received by them and that of messengers, from the 2d of January, 1884, to the 7th of July, 1884, and from the 1st of December, 1884, to the 4th of March, 1885, nine months and six days, at the rate of $40 per month, $736.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. HAMMOND in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8130) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that under the order of the House limiting all debate on the pending section to one hour and a half, one-half hour for the friends of the bill and an hour for its opponents, there was an endeavor to divide the time, so that ten minutes should be consumed on the one side and five minutes on the other alternately. On account of the absence of certain gentlemen, whom the Chair had agreed to recognize, their places were filled by others; and it has therefore occurred that the twenty minutes now remaining of the time for debate belong to the opponents of the bill. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BAYNE. I took the position as an opponent of this bill because there were at the time this arrangement was made certain provisions in the bill which I could not consent to, and I should have voted against it if those provisions had not been amended or stricken out. I know, however, from the action of the committee and from the statement made by its chairman that two of the most objectionable features in the bill will be stricken out, but there are two remaining which are seriously objectionable.

The first of these is the creation of a board to examine the jetty system at various points, to consist of seven members, four from civil life, two from the Engineer Corps, and one from the Coast and Geodetic Survey. I think that the United States Engineer Corps should preponderate on that board, and that four should come from the Engineer Corps, one from the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and two from civil life.

I am not disposed to strike down the present Engineer Corps of the Army. I believe that it is an honest and honorable service. As to its entire capability I do not know; but I believe that if we impose upon it restrictions and require at its hands a more rigorous performance of its duty in the light of the judgment of the engineers we will get a better service and we will get more valuable recommendations. I shall move to amend that provision so as to take four members of the board from the Engineer Corps, one from the Coast and Geodetic Survey as it stands in the bill, and the other two from civil life.

Another provision in this bill which is objectionable, in connection with which appropriation should not be made until a more full investigation is had and a better plan understood, is this immense appropriation for the lower Mississippi River. The $2,800,000 to be applied to that river is in my opinion thrown away, except in so far as that money should be used to take snags out of the river and to dredge bars in that river; and I think it unwise on the part of Congress to expend that vast amount of money in a way and upon a plan which is conceded to be a failure.

It was recognized to be a failure, and the proposition to make Captain Eads supervisory engineer of the Mississippi River Commission was intended, if possible, to lift that commission out of the difficulties into which it had got, the hope being that Captain Eads might devise some plan by which this money could be profitably expended. I will ask leave to print in connection with my remarks an article recently printed in the American Engineer, at Chicago, which goes into an examination of the present system of the Mississippi River Commission, and in my opinion proves, if language can prove it, that the system which they are now pursuing for the improvement of the navigation of the lower Mississippi River must inevitably fail—that it can not possibly result in the permanent improvement of that river. Yet here we are appropriating vast sums of money on the theory that this is to be a permanent improvement. I feel toward that river as any other patriotic American does—that if a large expenditure of money will secure the permanent improvement of its navigation I am willing to vote a large amount of money for that purpose, but I am unwilling to vote this large amount when I am convinced the money is being expended to no good end, or at least that the results obtained from its expenditure are nothing like equivalent to the value of the money expended. Therefore, when we come to that provision in the bill, I shall move that the amount appropriated to the Lower Mississippi River shall be very largely reduced. I ask leave to print the article to which I have referred in connection with my remarks.

Mr. THOMAS. I object.

Mr. BAYNE. The gentleman objects——

Mr. WILLIS. General leave has been granted.

Mr. BAYNE. Very well. Then I will have this article printed, despite the gentleman's objection.

Mr. THOMAS. General leave has been given to print remarks, but not extracts from newspapers, and I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no right to dictate or discriminate as to what shall be printed as a part of a gentleman's remarks.

Mr. POTTER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee for a few moments especially to the clause in this bill in relation to the Hennepin Canal. When this question was under consideration at the last session of Congress I made a few remarks upon the subject, and upon the most careful examination and reflection that I have been able to give to it I am confirmed in every opinion I then expressed. The proposition now is that this Government shall enter into a new and broad field of expenditure, of which no man can see the end.

In the improvement of our natural water ways, our rivers and our harbors, we have work which will absorb all that we can rightfully draw from taxation for such purposes for many years to come. Those natural water ways require and will require a large improvement at the hands of the General Government, strictly within the ends and the purposes of promoting national commerce. Shall we, then, at this time enter upon another field—a field, as I have said, of which no man can see the boundaries or the end—in building within the States new water ways or new railways? For it makes no difference as matter of constitutional power which we build; if we build either we should build the most efficient avenue for commerce, the railway. We are asked here to enter upon a work which will result, if we continue to pursue the same policy wherever such works are needed throughout the country, in taking thousands of millions of dollars from the Treasury of the National Government and will impose a taxation upon the people of this country which will break down the country. We are told that this will promote the commerce of the Northwest, that it will enable the productions of the Northwest to reach the seaboard easier than in any other way. I repeat, sir, what I said here a year ago, that the State of Illinois has the ability, has the wealth, has every motive to build this canal if it ought to be built at all, and to her mainly if not entirely will inure the benefit of the work.

If half that is said in behalf of this canal be true, it will add to the wealth of Illinois ten times its cost and to the wealth of Chicago alone many times its cost.

The State of New York, when she had but one-third the present wealth of the State of Illinois, built the great Erie Canal. She has maintained it from that time to this, and within two or three years past she has ingrafted upon her constitution a provision that she will maintain that canal by her own taxation upon her own citizens, in order that the commerce of the whole country, and the Northwest especially, may come to the seaboard and to our great cities at the lowest possible toll, the lowest possible freight.

Now, sir, if the General Government is to build this Hennepin Canal, will not the same policy require, does it not inevitably require, that we shall assume the burden of purchasing and carrying on the Erie Canal? Is it to be expected that the great State of New York, having spent nearly $50,000,000 in that great work, shall continue to assess herself from $500,000 to $1,000,000 annually for the purpose of maintaining that canal, while she is at the same time called upon to pay to the General Government her one-seventh part of the taxes, which are to be devoted to building another canal of precisely the same sort in the State of Illinois which is to be made free?

[Here the hammer fell].

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a single question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTER] has expired. The Chair had promised to recognize next the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY]; but he is not present, and any other gentleman claiming the floor in opposition to the bill will now be heard.

Mr. POTTER. Mr. Chairman, I will ask leave to print if I may not be allowed to state the provision of the constitution of Illinois relating to this point.

The CHAIRMAN. General leave to print has been granted.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I understand that ten minutes remain of the time to be used in opposition to the bill. As gentlemen would probably desire to speak to a fuller committee I ask unanimous consent that they may be allowed to use that time later in the day.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I should like to use it in connection with three minutes on an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the remaining ten minutes may be occupied by gentlemen in opposition to the bill at a later period of the day.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I shall have to object to that.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state that the House has ordered this morning that amendments be considered in their order in the section. There are two propositions now pending—one by the committee to strike out certain portions, beginning at line 213, and the other a proposition by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] to strike out from line 213 to line 231. These amendments—one coming from the committee, the other in opposition to the committee's amendments—would be considered first. The Chair suggests to other gentlemen intending to offer amendments that during the ten minutes' debate which will now follow they send their amendments to the Clerk, indicating the lines, that they may be arranged ready to be taken up hereafter, thus saving time and avoiding confusion when the Committee of the Whole shall proceed to consider amendments.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has just suggested that gentlemen prepare their amendments and send them to the Clerk. Ten minutes must elapse before they can be considered.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, one of the grounds of complaint against this bill, and the only one I have, is that certain harbors on the Mississippi River for which appropriations have heretofore been made have been altogether left out of this bill. I believe that all of them ought to have been retained. Two of them were retained by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors; and the action of that committee in this regard was sustained by the action of the Committee of the Whole. I am aware of no reason why these two harbors which have already been favorably considered and appropriated for should have had any preference over those which have been omitted. It was correct no doubt to make the appropriation for these two; but it was equally proper that all the others should have been provided for.

I am unable to speak specifically for any of these river harbors which have been omitted except that at the city of Memphis. Of the necessity for a continuation of the work there I have some personal knowledge. In 1878 the Government undertook the work of diverting the current of the Mississippi River from the eastern bank at Memphis to the Arkansas shore. Previous to that time, from some cause which I am not able to explain, the current of the river on the Arkansas shore had changed, and was being diverted directly against the Memphis shore, and by its action against the latter at that point destroyed more than a million and a half dollars' worth of property.

The Government conceded this to be a work of so much importance that it should be cared for by national appropriations. Up to this time, if my memory serves me right, $474,000 have been expended upon that work. The engineer estimates that $75,000 will complete it. Without the expenditure of this additional $75,000 the $474,000 already expended will be a total loss, and the object for which the work was designed will entirely fail. This additional $75,000 is necessary to put in the keystone, as it were, to this work, and preserve it from absolute destruction.

Now, I submit that it would not be a wise thing to allow $474,000 of Government work to be swept away when $75,000 would save it all and preserve from destruction the largest commercial city of the Mississippi River between Saint Louis and New Orleans. For, after all, what is the commerce of the Mississippi River if you destroy all its cities? What is its navigation worth if you destroy its commerce?

It is in line with the theory and system of the Mississippi River Commission to protect the caving banks of the river. At many points where caving occurs the country bordering on the river is a wilderness, and where if a thousand acres were to tumble into the river it would not involve the loss of a thousand cents, the Mississippi River Commission is to-day expending large sums of money to protect caving banks and improve the navigation of the river.

Now, if it is important to protect caving banks where there is nothing back of the river but a wilderness, how much more important is it to protect those banks where large commercial cities are located, such as Cairo, Memphis, Vicksburg, and New Orleans. By the action of the Committee of the Whole two places—Cairo and New Orleans—have already been provided for in accordance with the recommendation of the Mississippi River Commission.

Mr. THOMAS. The gentleman will allow me one word. As this is the second time he has referred to Cairo I want to say that the appropriation at Cairo is to prevent the formation of a new channel at the foot of Dickey's Island, and it is not for the benefit of Cairo at all but for the commerce of the Mississippi River.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any other gentleman desiring to be heard in opposition to the bill? There are five minutes left.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I had hoped to have an opportunity to address a full House upon the subject of the Mississippi River portion of this scheme; but I have been prevented, upon a proposition which the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors was kind enough himself to offer, by the opposition of a gentleman who represents a State through which the Mississippi River runs. I leave the House to draw the inference which would be natural under these circumstances.

I desire to call the attention of the members who are here to the plain and simple fact that notwithstanding all the efforts which have been made there has been no opportunity to discuss this Mississippi River question. And I desire to reiterate and re-enforce what has been so well said by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], and that is this Mississippi River part of it will cost the Government of this country at least $150,000,000 of initial expenditure. And that all the facts we can get at show conclusively that is only the beginning of an annual expense the extent of which we can not find out.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. My friend does not wish to misstate me.

Mr. REED, of Maine. My friend will not interrupt me in the little time I have.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. But the gentleman is misstating my position. This is just what I am fighting against. The river would be hopeless then. But neither he nor the present commission nor any one else can commit us to that departure and blunder.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine declines to be interrupted.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I desire to reiterate this expenditure, enormous as it is, of $150,000,000, is only the commencement, the end of which we can not foretell. Indications point now to an annual expenditure of 25 per cent. of the revetments in order to maintain them in their places, and those revetments have been found to be necessary by men who are practically working out this so-called plan. And on no estimate can it be less than 10 per cent. of annual expenditure on these $150,000,000 of initial expenditure.

And then in addition to that comes up the plain fact that nobody on earth knows that the $150,000,000 will produce any result whatever that is worth talking about. There are thus far no indications which go to show that even this expenditure, enormous as it is, will produce any results. And if it did, how in the world is it possible for us to justify such an expenditure for the purposes that are named?

It is because of these things, which I can only just indicate, that discussion on this subject has been prevented. Why look at it! What is the object of this proposed expenditure, supposing it can be a success. The commerce of this country goes from East to West. The exports and imports of this country in New York and in the other Atlantic ports is something like 70 per cent. of the total exports and imports of this country. The exports and imports from New Orleans is 6 per cent. Six per cent. against 70 per cent. Why is that? It arises from the very nature of things. It arises from the character of commerce. Commerce has entirely changed from what it used to be years ago. Years ago a man sent his ship to the uttermost parts of the earth—his skill as a merchant depended upon the time of the arrival of his ship.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I will have an opportunity to resume.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will now state before amendments are offered under the order of the House to which each gentleman can speak three minutes, that the committee must first dispose of the amendment proposed by the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to strike out the paragraph beginning with line 213 and ending with line 231. After the Clerk had read lines 213 to 231 the chairman [Mr. WILLIS, of Kentucky] made a proposition to strike out all from line 213 down to and including line 305. The Chair will remark that at the same time there was a motion made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] to strike out from line 213 to line 231, inclusive. The proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] is to strike out and insert, and should it carry no other amendment could be made between lines 213 and 305, inclusive. Therefore, if there be amendments to be offered between those lines they must be offered before this proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky is voted on.

Mr. THOMAS. I desire to discuss the committee amendment unless the chairman of the committee desires to take up the time himself.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order just now, but will be in a moment. The Chair is trying to ascertain whether amendment is to be offered between lines 213 and 305, inclusive.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask before the discussion of the amendment begins that it be read.

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment is not yet in order.

Mr. WASHBURN. Before this order is passed I ask to strike out the whole paragraph ending with line 305.

The CHAIRMAN. That has been already proposed.

Mr. WASHBURN. I understood the committee moved to strike out all between lines 213 and 231.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will restate the situation. The Clerk had read from line 213 to line 231, inclusive, and stopped. The chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors then moved to strike out from line 213 to line 305, inclusive, and insert other matter which he sent up. Pending that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] moved to strike out from line 213 to line 231, inclusive. That was the situation when the committee rose. The Chair will state, if any amendments are to be offered they will be read first; if not, then the committee's amendment will be put.

Mr. WASHBURN. I do not understand, under that statement, that the amendment I suggest is not first in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the amendment proposed by the gentleman was misunderstood. He proposes to strike out more than the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] did?

Mr. WASHBURN. Yes, sir.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I desire to ask the Chair whether at this time, under the rule, all amendments that are to be proposed to this section shall be offered, or shall they be offered and disposed of in their order as the various lines of the section are reached?

The CHAIRMAN. Before the gentleman arrived the House ordered this morning that all amendments proposed to this section shall be considered in their regular order in the bill; and the Chair suggested, in committee, that gentlemen proposing to offer amendments should send them to the Clerk that the Clerk might so classify them, and that they might then be called up in their order.

Mr. WILLIS. We have but twenty minutes before this day's session terminates, and I ask that we go on with the business.

The CHAIRMAN. It is impossible not to answer these parliamentary inquiries.

Mr. TURNER, of Kentucky. Under the order of the Chair I handed three amendments to the Clerk. I wish to know whether these are to be considered as pending, or whether I will have to offer them again.

The CHAIRMAN. They will be read in their order and considered as pending after they are read.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I rise to a question of order. I rise to ask the Chair to have the two amendments the Chair said were pending relative to Galveston Harbor read for the information of the committee before offering my own, because it may be that it will not be necessary to offer the amendment I intend to suggest after hearing those that are pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman misunderstands the Chair. There are amendments preceding those that have been offered this morning which must be first voted upon. Amendments to be in order to this section must be offered and considered now, because the pending amendment is to strike out and insert, and of course would cut off other amendments if adopted.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I ask permission of the Chair to have them read.

The CHAIRMAN. Hearing no other proposed amendment between lines 213 and 305 inclusive, the Chair will direct the Clerk to read what is proposed by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 213 down to and including line 305, and insert:
"For Galveston Harbor, $500,000; and the harbor board herein provided for is directed to proceed at once to examine, survey, and report to the Secretary of War for his approval plans, specifications, and estimates for said improvement, and when said plans, specifications, and estimates shall have been approved, said work shall be carried forward with all possible expedition."

The CHAIRMAN. Now, there are two amendments to strike out: one is the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] to strike out the paragraph beginning with line 213 down to and including line 231——

Mr. WILLIS. That, I will state to the Chair, has been withdrawn. The gentleman from Illinois withdrew his amendment as soon as the amendment proposed by the committee was announced.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was not informed of that fact. Then the amendment is to strike out the whole of that which is intended to be substituted by the committee amendment just read.

Mr. WASHBURN. I made a motion to strike out the entire section relating to the subject, understanding that the committee was to report a new provision.

Mr. WILLIS. They have reported it.

Mr. WASHBURN. I understand that the motion only strikes out from lines 213 to 231?

Mr. WILLIS. No, sir; it strikes out the whole of that provision.

Mr. WASHBURN. I did not so understand it, and withdraw my amendment.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I desire to offer an amendment as a substitute for the lines 213 to 231, inclusive.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send it to the desk.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. I propose to amend by inserting:

Harbor of Galveston, Tex.: To ascertain and report what further work is necessary, if any, in that locality.

I offer that in lieu of the lines I have specified. I believe I am entitled to be heard on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has three minutes if he desires to explain the amendment.

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, on page 47 of this voluminous document, known as House bill 8130, from the Select Committee on Rivers and Harbors, which acted with closed doors——

Mr. REED, of Maine (from his seat). Select committee, is it?

Mr. WHITE, of Kentucky. You will find that the Secretary of War, in section 8 of the bill, is directed at his discretion "to cause examinations, or surveys, or both, and estimates of costs of improvements proper to be made at the following points," and then follow two or more pages of the bill containing the points at which these estimates are to be made. Now we have spent more than a million and a half of dollars at Galveston Harbor, and it is not in evidence that we have gotten a half-inch more water than they had at the start. It will hardly be contended, after the statement of my friend from Galveston and other members on that side of the House that they have not gotten two inches of water—I say it will hardly be contended that we should appropriate a half-million more or seven millions more to carry water to put in this harbor, where there are fifty miles of shoal water in front. Then let us have the Secretary of War make a preliminary survey, take soundings for fifty miles out in front of the harbor, and report to the House a plan. You have Eads for your idea, and we have the War Department, the chief engineers, and we find that $2,000,000 have been expended to get two inches of water. Now, I think it is time to quit this work until there is another preliminary survey; and I ask, therefore, to strike out the lines 213 to 231, and insert in its proper place in the bill the amendment I have suggested.

Mr. THOMAS rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] has expired.

Mr. THOMAS. I desire to ask a parliamentary question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. THOMAS. The committee having charge of this bill have proposed a substitute for this portion of it. They propose to strike out and insert. Is it in order that another substitute to strike out and insert should have precedence?

The CHAIRMAN. The other is practically a proposed amendment to the three paragraphs which the committee propose to strike out, and is therefore in order.

Mr. THOMAS. But it is offered expressly as a substitute, and it was so stated.

The CHAIRMAN. The substitute motion relates to what is included in the portion which the committee propose to strike out. The effort, therefore, is to perfect what is proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. THOMAS. I desire to know the condition of the question. The committee propose to strike out exactly the same matter that the gentleman from Kentucky proposes to strike out.

The CHAIRMAN. That is a mistake on the part of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS]. The gentleman from Kentucky proposes only to strike out one paragraph, whereas the committee propose to strike out three.

Mr. REAGAN. May I say a word in response to what has been stated by the gentleman from Kentucky?

The CHAIRMAN. No debate, under the instructions of the House, is in order on this amendment.

Mr. REAGAN. How is it that there can be debate on one side, and not on the other?

The CHAIRMAN. The House by unanimous consent ordered that the absolute cutting off of debate which had been previously ordered should be opened to the extent only of allowing gentlemen who offer bona fide amendments to be heard for three minutes in support of their amendments.

Mr. REAGAN. I only wish to say that this amendment proposes to make the very investigation which the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] proposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The reply of the gentleman from Texas is out of order except by unanimous consent.

Mr. NICHOLLS. I ask for a division of the motion to strike out and insert.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is indivisible.

Mr. NICHOLLS. There are two distinct propositions—first to strike out and then to insert. I ask for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will cause the rule to be read.

Mr. WILLIS. If in the mean time we can get on with the bill a little I think it would be better.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will endeavor to get on with the bill as fast as possible. The Clerk will read clause 7 of Rule XVI.

The Clerk read as follows:

A motion to strike out and insert is indivisible.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] to strike out from lines 213 to 231 inclusive, and to insert what he has read.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS], the chairman of the committee.

Mr. WILLIS. Let us have a vote.

Mr. THOMAS. Objection was taken to the first proposition brought forward by the committee in reference to Galveston Harbor. The committee, after considering the objections urged, considered it would be better to have this harbor thoroughly examined and reported on, and that the plans and specifications and estimates should be submitted to the Secretary of War and approved by him before any work was done. And they have provided there shall be a fair and full investigation and report before the money is expended. That certainly ought to meet every objection that is urged. There must be a report to the Secretary of War, and the plans and specifications and estimates must be approved by him. That proposition meets the full concurrence of the committee and is believed to be fair and just, and I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The report ought to be made to Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] on behalf of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. WASHBURN. I move to strike out all of that amendment after "$500,000."

The CHAIRMAN. All of what amendment?

Mr. WASHBURN. The amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS].

Mr. THOMAS. I make the point of order against that.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Does this amendment strike out the Captain Eads proposition?

Mr. WILLIS. It does.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Then it seems to me it strikes out all the brains there were in it.

Mr. WASHBURN. The amendment offered by the chairman of the committee proposes to turn all this over into the hands of a board that does not exist, and so far as I am concerned a board which I think should not exist. I do not believe that this House wants to go forward and inaugurate any more commissions or any more boards. Whatever appropriation is made for this purpose, and I am willing and shall be glad to have a liberal appropriation made for it, I believe the work should be carried on as other river and harbor improvements are carried on, under the direction of the Engineer Department of the United States. Therefore I move to strike out all of that portion of the amendment which would turn the work over into the hands of a board that does not exist.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the amendment to the amendment be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as it would read if the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] should be adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the improvement of Galveston Harbor, $500,000.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 38, noes 66.

Mr. WASHBURN. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. WASHBURN, and the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. WILLIS.

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the time for adjournment has almost arrived.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, in pursuance of my promise made yesterday, I now move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BLACKBURN having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HAMMOND reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the river and harbor appropriation bill and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 56 minutes a. m.) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 18, 1885.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that there be a call of the Senate to see if there be a quorum present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has not yet called the Senate to order. The Chair will now call the Senate to order. The Chair will state that the rule requires that the Journal shall be read when a quorum has appeared. It is evident that a quorum has not appeared.

Mr. MORRILL. I now move that the roll be called.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that there be a call of the Senate. That order, under the rules, will be made as a matter of course, it being suggested that no quorum is present. The call will proceed.

The Secretary called the roll, and sixteen Senators answered to their names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixteen Senators are present. The roll of absentees will be called.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators.

Other Senators having entered the Chamber,

Mr. MORRILL. I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But twenty-six Senators have as yet answered to their names. There will be no further proceedings without some motion. No motion to send for the absentees has been made.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think enough Senators are here now.

Mr. CONGER. Would the Senate be safe to go on with the reading of the Journal now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would not.

Mr. CONGER. It would not be safe? I do not wish to be an alarmist, but I wanted to make the inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The call has shown that no quorum is present, and the rules explicitly provide that the Journal shall be read when a quorum has appeared. A quorum has not appeared, as has been shown by the call.

Mr. HALE. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the Journal this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That request is not in order, no quorum being present.

Thirteen other Senators having entered the Chamber,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair ascertains that a quorum is now present. The Journal of yesterday's proceedings will be read.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ORAMANDAL SMITH,
Secretary of State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As the Senate has acted upon this subject, the memorial will be laid on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a memorial of the Legislature of New Jersey; which was read, as follows:

Assembly concurrent resolution, State of New Jersey.

1. Resolved (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States of America be respectfully petitioned not to pass Senate bill No. 1447 and House bill No. 7165, authorizing the construction of railway draw-bridges across Staten Island Sound, from Staten Island, Richmond County, New York, to New Jersey at Elizabeth and Perth Amboy.

Such bridge or bridges would injure the navigation of the sound and many miles of New Jersey water front thereon. The New Jersey shore of the Hudson River and Staten Island Sound is the natural terminus of railroads from the West, affording ample room and opportunity for terminal yards, depots, docks, coal and grain shipments, and direct communication between railroads and ships. Several steamer lines have moved to docks on our own shores for the purpose. Immense sums of money have been expended on our shores, including large depots and docks for coal and iron between these proposed bridges. To establish these bridges, if they become a success, is to render the sound and New Jersey shores thereon useless for their natural purposes, with the intent to transfer these docks to the eastern shores of Staten Island. That such will be the result may be doubted, but that the sound will be injured if not destroyed for the use of large vessels is certain.

2. Resolved, That this memorial be transmitted, under the signature of the president of the senate and the speaker of the house, in duplicate to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States.

SENATE, February 16, 1885.

This concurrent resolution having been read in the senate,
Resolved, That the same do pass.
By order of the senate.

AB'M V. SCHENCK,
President of the Senate.

HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY, 1885.

This concurrent resolution having been read and compared in the house of assembly,
Resolved, That the same do pass.
By order of the house of assembly.

E. A. ARMSTRONG,
Speaker of the House of Assembly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the memorial will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FRYE. No; the Committee on Commerce has reported the bill referred to in the memorial, and it is now on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the memorial will be laid on the table.

Mr. CONGER presented the petition of Thomas Fish and 158 other citizens of Port Huron, Mich., praying for the passage of a bill to set aside the marsh and overflowed lands of Lake Saint Clair, Michigan, known as the Saint Clair Flats, as a national preserve and shooting-ground for the people of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HALE. I present the petition of John E. Hilton, late private Company E, Eighth Maine Volunteers, praying for an increase of pension. It is addressed to me, but is otherwise in the form of a petition to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the paper will be received and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HOAR presented a petition of seamen of Boston, Mass., praying for such a modification of the so-called Dingley shipping bill as will admit of a seaman giving an allotment note to his creditors for any just debt by him owing, and incurred before engagement; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FAIR presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Nevada; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

Senate joint resolution relative to the direct war tax assessed to and levied upon the several States under the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861.

Whereas the Congress of the United States has now pending before it a bill to adjust the direct war tax as levied upon the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia, under the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861, the passage of which by Congress was on June 14, 1884, favorably recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury, Hon. Charles G. Folger, and in May 2, 1884, by the First Comptroller of the Treasury, Hon. William Lawrence: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the senate of the State of Nevada, the assembly concurring, That our Senators in Congress be instructed and our Representative be requested to use every proper effort within their power to have said measure now so pending enacted into a law.

Resolved, That the governor of this State be requested to forward to our Senators and Representative in Congress a copy of this resolution properly attested under seal by the secretary of state.

STATE OF NEVADA,
Department of State, ss:

I, John M. Dormer, secretary of state of the State of Nevada, do hereby certify that the annexed is a true, full, and correct copy of the original enrolled Senate joint resolution relative to the direct war tax, as the same appears of record and on file in my office.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of state. Done at office, in Carson City, Nev., this 9th day of February, A. D. 1885.

[SEAL.] JOHN M. DORMER,
Secretary of State,
By WELLS DRURY,
Deputy.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I ask the privilege of sending to the Secretary's desk a resolution of the Legislature of New Jersey, which I ask may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paper sent to the desk is not a resolution of the Legislature, but of a board of trade.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I had a resolution of the Legislature before me, and I supposed that was the one I sent to the desk. I wish to have the resolution of the Legislature read, but I should like also to have read the memorial of the Board of Trade of Newark, if there is no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from New Jersey that the Chair received and presented this morning a resolution of the Legislature of New Jersey on the subject of a bridge across Staten Island Sound, which was read and referred.

Mr. MCPHERSON. The resolution I have before me is on the same subject; and if there be no objection I should like to have the memorial which I have sent to the Chair read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the memorial of the Board of Trade of Newark be read. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

FEBRUARY 15, 1885.

DEAR SIR: I have been requested to forward to you the following resolution adopted by the Board of Trade of the city of Newark at a meeting held on Wednesday evening the 11th instant.

Resolved, That this board of trade hereby respectfully but most earnestly petition the Congress of the United States, and request that the said Congress do not pass the several bills now pending before that honorable body authorizing the construction of one or more bridges across Staten Island Sound.

Resolved, That copies of the above be sent to each of the United States Senators from New Jersey and one to Congressman WILLIAM H. F. FIEDLER, of Newark.

I am, with respect, yours very truly,

P. T. QUINN, Secretary.

Hon. JOHN R. MCPHERSON.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FRYE. It should lie on the table, if the President pleases, the bill having been reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial will lie on the table.

Mr. WILLIAMS presented a petition of the mayor and council of the city of Hickman, Ky., praying a specific appropriation to improve the harbor at that place; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6658) to provide for the sale of the Sac and Fox Indian reservation, in the States of Nebraska and Kansas, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. DAWES. I am instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which were referred certain resolutions in regard to negotiations to obtain the title to portions of Indian reservations in the Indian Territory, to report a bill. I should like to have the bill read in full.

The bill (S. 2648) to enable the President to negotiate for the purchase of portions of certain Indian reservations was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the President is hereby directed and empowered to ascertain, without unnecessary delay, by communication with the authorities of the Creek, Seminole, and Cherokee Nations of Indians, in the Indian Territory, upon what terms the said nations will relinquish and convey to the United States all their right, title, and interest in and to all that country described in article 3 of the treaty made between the United States and the Creek Nation on June 14, 1866, as "the west half of their entire domain," and the lands described in article 3 of the Seminole treaty of March 21, 1866 (14 Statutes, page 756), and so much of the lands described in article 16 of the treaty made between the United States and the Cherokee Nation on July 19, 1866, as has not been already purchased by the United States from said Cherokee Nation for the purpose of settling friendly Indians thereon, as provided for in said treaty, and to submit the result thereof to Congress at its next regular session.

SEC. 2. Every person who, without authority of law, enters and shall be found upon the lands described in the first section of this act, with intent to occupy any such lands or reservation, or any part thereof, shall, for the first offense, upon conviction thereof, pay a fine of not more than $500, or be imprisoned at hard labor for not more than one year, or both, in the discretion of the court; and for every subsequent offense shall, upon conviction thereof, pay a fine of not more than $1,000 and be imprisoned at hard labor for not more than two years; and the wagons, teams, and outfit of such person or persons so offending shall be seized and delivered to the proper United States officer, and be proceeded against by libel in the proper court, and forfeited, one-half to the informer and the other half to the United States.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 8034) for the relief of the estates of Hugh and Byrd Douglas, deceased; and

A bill (S. 2366) for the relief of Joseph W. Parish.

Mr. HOAR. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1002) for the relief of Cyprian T. Jenkins, to report it adversely. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] to the report.

This is a bill introduced by the Senator from Florida to reimburse a gentleman who was timber agent for the United States at the breaking out of the war. A certain sum was found due him for his services for one quarter and part of another, and the payment was arrested on account of the breaking out of the rebellion. Subsequently a statute was passed confiscating as enemy's property all sums due to the Government from that class of officers, and from the mail agents, and so on.

The committee thought it was not in accordance with sound public policy to report a bill for one of this class of officers leaving the others unpaid; but a general bill including all mail agents has been reported, and I think is now before the Senate, and the committee have authorized one of their members to move an amendment to that bill when it comes up, which will cover this case and other like cases of timber agents.

I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. CALL. I desire to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if there is any probability of the bill, which he proposes to amend by a measure for the relief of the class similar to Mr. Jenkins, coming before the Senate at this session of Congress?

Mr. HOAR. I do not know particularly; I do not remember how that bill stands; but it is much more likely to pass than the bill just reported, because this is a Senate bill.

Mr. CALL. I ask that the bill may go on the Calendar.

Mr. HOAR. I have no objection to that course.

Mr. CALL. I simply wish to say that this is the case of a man who was a Union man, and who I do not think would be obnoxious to the statute. I do not remember its provisions, but he never had any part whatever in the late civil war, and I do not see how he can come under the statute.

Mr. HOAR. I have no objection to the bill going upon the Calendar. All that class of claims against the United States were confiscated. I conceive that to be the effect of the statute of the United States, that it was a confiscation of certain debts of persons residing in those States as enemy's property, which, of course, is within the war power, and was also the usage of all nations at war until a very modern period. Though we did not confiscate all debts, we did confiscate debts due from the Government to persons dwelling in the territory of the rebellion, whether they were Union men or otherwise. If the measure to which I have referred becomes a law, this gentleman's case and all cases like his should be included within it, and I have no doubt will be.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. JACKSON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 851) for the relief of the heirs of Mary Jane Veazie, deceased, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. VAN WYCK, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 6044) granting a pension to Eliza Pigeon;

A bill (H. R. 5123) granting a pension to Frederick Braunwald;

A bill (H. R. 1759) granting a pension to Robert Patterson; and

A bill (H. R. 7524) for the relief of Lavisa Heth.

Mr. VAN WYCK, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5364) granting a pension to William H. Whitcomb, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2398) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Ann W. Mulvey, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2400) granting an increase of pension to Eliza Willson Thornburgh, to submit an adverse report thereon. I ask that the bill be placed upon the Calendar, as a minority of the committee so desire and as many other Senators also so desire. In the report I have incorporated the facts of the brilliant and gallant services of Major Thornburgh, and perhaps it will not be necessary for the minority to file their views.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar. Are there written views of the minority submitted with the bill?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I presume they will not be. I stated that in the report I have set forth the gallant and brilliant service of Major Thornburgh, which is probably all the minority may desire.

Mr. HILL, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2643) to relinquish to the city of Denver title to certain lots of land for the purposes of a public library, reported it without amendment.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 393) for the relief of Asenath A. Phelps, administratrix of the estate of Harlow J. Phelps, deceased, to report it adversely, and to move that the claim be not allowed and that the bill be postponed indefinitely.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the bill may be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

ARMY COURTS-MARTIAL.

Mr. INGALLS. The Committee on the Judiciary having been directed by resolution of the Senate to inquire and report concerning courts-martial, their appointment, and the practice and proceeding before such tribunals in time of peace, I am directed to submit a report in writing thereon, which I ask may be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas, from the Committee on the Judiciary, in obedience to a resolution of the Senate, the nature of which he has described, makes a report, which will be printed and placed on file.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the Post-Office appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Printing, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MILLER, of California, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PIKE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which, with the accompanying petition, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONAS and Mr. PIKE submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PALMER introduced a bill (S. 2649) to set apart the unsurveyed marsh lands at the mouths of the Saint Clair River, known as the Saint Clair Flats, as a hunting and fishing preserve for the people of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. VAN WYCK introduced a bill (S. 2650) making an appropriation for the improvement of the Mississippi River at or near Eastport, opposite Nebraska City; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River.

Mr. CONGER. It should go to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Bills of this nature have always gone to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River.

Mr. CONGER. There never have been any so referred that I know of.

Mr. VAN WYCK. One bill proposing an appropriation of $500,000 for the Mississippi River was referred to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River and was reported by that committee and passed at the last session. I move that this bill be referred to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska moves that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

Mr. CONGER. I move to amend the motion by substituting "the Committee on Commerce."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks the motion to amend is not in order. Under the rules and practice of the Senate the question is to be taken on each motion to refer. If the motion to refer to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River is defeated, then it will be in order to move to refer the bill to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CONGER. This is a bill to appropriate money for a single harbor, not for the general improvement of any river, and unless the Senate desire that the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River shall have charge of all appropriations for special harbors, they will vote against the motion to refer the bill to that committee.

Mr. VAN WYCK. With all due deference to the Senator from Michigan, I think he is mistaken about the bills which have been passed of this nature. I think he will call to recollection that at the last session of Congress a bill for a temporary need was first referred to the Committee on Commerce, and withdrawn from that committee subsequently by the action of the Senate and referred to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River, and by that committee it was reported, and on the report of that committee it was passed.

This bill does not propose to interfere with the great system of river and harbor improvement in the country, but it is at a point which needs immediate attention. Therefore it is thought best to refer it to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River, as they have more time to devote to it and are not so much engrossed with other matters. The object of the bill is to make an appropriation of $50,000 in order to save the channel of the river at the point named. We have felt that it would receive more speedy consideration at the hands of that committee; and it would not seem to be necessary that the great Committee on Commerce, which swallows up all the harbors, rivers, lakes, and oceans of the country and the continent, should insist upon receiving to itself a small measure which it evidently will not have or has not time to devote attention to.

Of course, personally, it is a matter of no moment whether the bill goes to the Committee on Commerce or to any other committee, but it would seem that this, being a very small, trifling matter, should go to a committee which never has occasion to do very much, and not to a committee in which it necessarily must be put in a pigeon-hole and there left.

I do not know the anxiety of the Senator representing the Committee on Commerce to insist upon a reference of the bill to that committee. I should like to gratify him very much indeed, and I have no special objection to the reference he suggests if we can have some sort of assurance that the bill will receive action one way or the other and be speedily reported. But I am satisfied, as I think the Senate must be, that the bill had better go to a committee which can act upon it, and not to a committee which is overburdened.

Mr. CONGER. I can not conceive it possible that anything which the Senator from Nebraska would introduce is a small and unimportant matter. I know he is not accustomed to deal with that class of things. Therefore it rises in magnitude in my estimation from the mere fact that the Senator himself has fathered the bill.

The rules require such bills to be sent to the Committee on Commerce. There is no power to send such a bill as this anywhere else. If it is of any importance to comply with the rules, or if it is of any importance to have the system of improvements under the control of a committee appointed specially for that purpose, then these little things, as well as the big things, had better be sent where they belong.

Mr. VAN WYCK. While the Senator is thinking for the next sentence will he allow me to suggest that he tell us what the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River was appointed for?

Mr. CONGER. The Senator from Michigan was overburdened with the magnitude of the subject and waited to reflect; that is all; it is so very important in its bearing upon the general welfare of the country. I ask the President to have the rule in regard to this class of appropriations read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Rule XVI provides as follows:

> All general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, except bills making appropriations for rivers and harbors, which shall be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The Chair is under the impression, from the debates in the Senate and the practice of the Senate, that this rule will apply only to general appropriation bills for the general objects of river and harbor improvements. The Chair thinks, therefore, that the motion of the Senator from Nebraska to refer this particular local bill to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River is in order. The question is on agreeing to the motion to refer the bill to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 2651) to define the status, and for the relief of the heirs or legal representatives of certain recruits for the Fourteenth Kansas Cavalry Volunteers, who were killed at Lawrence, Kans., August 21, 1863, by guerrillas; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CALL introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 127) to authorize the printing of the reports of the Bureau of Ethnology; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

He also introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 128) to authorize the printing of the reports of the Geological Survey; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

He also introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 129) to authorize the printing of the reports of the Geological Survey; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. VAN WYCK introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 130) prohibiting sale of lands between Waldo and Tampa Bay, Florida, under the grant to the State of Florida to aid in the construction of a line of railroad from Amelia Island to Tampa, Fla.; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. PLUMB, it was Ordered, That Charles Murphy have leave to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers in his claim for additional compensation for building the United States appraiser's store in San Francisco, Cal.

A. L. SINGLETON.

Mr. HAMPTON submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the widow of A. L. Singleton, deceased, late a fireman in the heating department of the United States Senate, a sum equal to three months' salary as fireman aforesaid, at the rate of $1,095 per annum, this amount to be considered as including the funeral expenses of A. L. Singleton and all other allowances.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twelve minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

DES MOINES RIVER LANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order of concurrent and other resolutions having been exhausted, the Chair lays before the Senate the Calendar under Rule VIII.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1886) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes.

Mr. LAPHAM. I offer the following proviso to come in at the end of section 2:

Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall have the effect of invalidating or disturbing the title of any bona fide purchaser from the State of Iowa or its grantees of what are known as the Des Moines River lands prior to March 2, 1861; but such titles are hereby ratified and confirmed.

It will be seen that this proviso is precisely like the proviso stricken out in the body of the bill yesterday, except that that proviso excepted from its operation that portion of the lands of the Des Moines River grant which were in the occupation of settlers. Now if I have succeeded in showing anything, I have succeeded in showing that in the cases decided by the Supreme Court between the earliest settlers to whom patents had been issued by the Government the Supreme Court decided that the grantees under the river grant had the undoubted title, and that the settler was a trespasser and had no title whatever. Why we should except from the operation of this proviso contained in the bill that portion of the lands thus confirmed to the grantees by the resolution of the 2d of March, 1861, passes my comprehension. Every decision made by the Supreme Court is to the effect that by that resolution the title in the purchasers under the Des Moines River grant has become an absolute title and that all interest of the Government is divested thereby.

Now this proviso simply gives effect to the decisions of the Supreme Court already pronounced; and this by no means interferes with the general policy of the bill under consideration. There are under what is known as the Harvey settlement, and referred to in the bill, 298,919 acres of land which are subject to the provisions of this bill, upon which to a greater or less extent there are settlers, and upon which there may be controversies between them and purchasers from the State of Iowa. Their claims have never yet been adjudicated, their claims are not covered by the joint resolution of March 2, 1861. Those lands were not transferred until the operation of the Harvey settlement in 1866, long after the joint resolution of 1861 and the act of 1862, which confirmed the title of the settlers in the Des Moines River grant.

As I have already said, the purchasers in whose behalf I appear have no objection whatever to this litigation if the lands which have been determined to be theirs by these repeated decisions are excluded from its operation. This amendment is one which Senator McDonald, of Indiana, on the 5th of February, 1879, offered as an amendment he intended to propose to the bill entitled "A bill to quiet the title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes"—precisely this bill. It was obvious to the judicial mind of Senator McDonald that the idea of interfering with the rights of these purchasers by legislation was simply folly, and that in the passage of the bill there should be a proviso exempting from its operation the lands which had been thus purchased.

These purchasers represent, as they state in their memorial, about three-fourths of 214,000 acres of land that had been ceded to the State of Iowa prior to the resolution of March, 1861. They paid for these lands from four to six dollars per acre when they purchased. They have paid the State and county taxes ever since. The lands have cost them now more than $20 per acre. The trespassers, so far as there are any, have had the use of these lands in the mean time without paying anything, and they only ask now that the hands of the United States shall be taken off this subject so far as their rights are concerned. They ask, as they say in their memorial, that this bill, which professes to be a bill to quiet the title to the Des Moines River lands, shall not be so framed as to reopen all the questions which have been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States and by the courts of the State of Iowa.

Is this an unreasonable request? Ought they not to be excepted from the operation of this bill? The honorable Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] in his remarks said that so far as there were vested rights he did not propose to disturb them. Well, in the name of all that is consistent, I ask the Senator is not a vested right a right which the Supreme Court in ten consecutive cases has decided is legal and valid? If that is not a vested right, what is? Can any man stand up here in the face of these decisions and claim that the right of the purchasers from the Des Moines River Company has not become a vested right in these lands? If it is possible for the judgment of courts to determine vested rights, that has been determined.

It is whispered here that these litigations have to a greater or less extent been collusive. Ah, Mr. President, there is no foundation for such an accusation as that—collusion between Crilly who settled on these lands in 1855 and obtained a patent and who brought an action to determine the question whether he or the purchaser under the river grant had the title—talk about collusion between them! It is all idle to talk about any case of collusion.

I said yesterday, and I repeat the challenge now, there is not one advocate of this bill who can state a single fact that was not before the courts when these judicial decisions were made. Every fact bearing upon the question has been before the courts. There is nothing new here; this is a mere attempt to revive a controversy which has been judicially determined and to revive it not in the name of the claimants, but to revive it in the name of the United States and at the expense of the Treasury of the United States.

This amendment is precisely, I repeat, like the clause which I had stricken out from the bill yesterday with this exception, that that said the titles of the purchasers from the Des Moines River Company shall be confirmed except where they are disputed by the settlers upon the lands. I will read the exact language, because that was my objection to this clause in the bill. There was an implication from it adverse to our whole title:

That all the lands improperly certified to Iowa by the Department of the Interior under the act of August 8, 1846, as referred to in the joint resolution of March 2, 1861, for which indemnity lands were selected and received by the State of Iowa, as provided in the act of 1862, are, and are hereby declared to be, public lands of the United States: Provided, That the title of all bona fide settlers under color of title from the State of Iowa and its grantees, or the United States and its grantees, which do not come in conflict with pre-emption or homestead claimants, are hereby ratified, confirmed, and made valid.

If there is any meaning to this it reverses the judgment in the case of Crilly, because that is his case exactly.

Now, I ask to have this proviso put in in the language I have sent to the Secretary's desk, that the title of the purchasers which was confirmed by the legislation of 1861, which has been held perfect by these repeated adjudications of the courts, shall be excepted from the operation of this bill, and those titles shall be confirmed and declared valid; and this amendment is simply designed to carry out that purpose, to take out of the operation of this litigation that portion of the 214,000 acres of land which were conveyed to the Des Moines River Navigation Company and which have been sold to purchasers residing in the State of New York and in New England, leaving 294,000 acres of land under the Harvey settlement, as it is called, conveyed to the State of Iowa by the Government, to the questions which arise under the provisions of this bill.

I trust, Mr. President, that this amendment, originating as it did in the mind of so discriminating a man as Senator McDonald, believed as he believed it to be an essential proviso for the protection of those whose rights had been adjudicated and settled by the law, will receive the sanction of the Senate; and as I said yesterday, much as I may view the provisions of this bill to be not in accordance with proper legislation as to any of the lands embraced in it, yet if this exception shall be made by the amendment I have now proposed, the main objection which I have to the passage of the bill will be taken away.

Mr. President, it is an exception which ought to be made. We owe it to consistency, we owe it to ourselves as a high deliberative body, that we shall not transgress the decisions of the highest judicial tribunal of the country, that we shall not set at naught the determination of the Judiciary Committee of this body four years ago that as to these lands the title is beyond any further question or dispute and should not be made the subject of litigation. That is all I seek by this amendment; that is all it accomplishes. It leaves 300,000 acres of land, or more, yet open to the operation of the clauses of this bill; but so as far as there are settlers upon that portion of the land which was conveyed by the Des Moines River Navigation Company to the purchasers I represent it takes those from the operation of the clauses of this bill. I hope, therefore, that the Senate will see the propriety of adopting this amendment and thus taking out of this proposed litigation that class of lands the status of which and the title to which have been so often determined by the courts of Iowa and by the courts of the United States, as well as by the joint resolution of Congress of 1861 and the act of 1862.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRYE in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. LAPHAM].

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I hope that this amendment will not be adopted. Its office and only office is to attempt to eliminate from the operation of this bill one of the most important features it contains. It is an attempt by a legislative declaration to take away from the jurisdiction of the courts, where it is the office of this bill to send the entire question, a very important portion of it; and the argument which the Senator from New York has made in support of his amendment sounds very differently to me from one which he made when the Oregon resumption bill was before the Senate. On that occasion the Senator from New York said:

> Are we to decide those questions without giving the parties interested an opportunity to be heard? Suppose the Government had been authorized to enter its own courts and prosecute for a forfeiture of this grant and had commenced an action in the name of the United States, making this corporation only a party, not bringing in any of the bondholders as parties, and a judge of the United States should order final judgment without bringing in the parties really in interest and giving them an opportunity to be heard, what would be thought of such a judicial proceeding as that? Now, what are we doing—

And I may say what is he proposing to do by his amendment?—

> Now, what are we doing? Who are we? We are the United States. We are a plaintiff declaring final judgment in our own favor without giving the parties interested any opportunity whatever to be heard. That is our position exactly. That is what this bill proposes to do—

And I may say that is what the Senator's amendment to this bill proposes to do—

> I trust it will not be done. I trust, as I said when this bill was up before the recess, that the Senate will not recede from the position it took, when by a vote of nearly three to one it added to a prior bill now in the hands of a conference committee the precise provision which is embraced in the amendment of the honorable Senator from Alabama. We owe it to ourselves to maintain that position—

That was the sending of the question to the courts for adjudication—

> It is not a question as to the number of parties interested, whether they be few or whether they be many. If but one man has an interest as a bondholder we should stop and hesitate about declaring this grant forfeited without giving him an opportunity to be heard. It is not a question of numbers. It is not a question of the magnitude of the claim. Those considerations do not weigh a feather in my judgment in determining the point of giving to all parties interested, whether they are many or whether they are few, an opportunity to be heard as to their rights before the Government shall resume and put into the market these lands for the purpose of giving title to absolute and bona fide purchasers.

Now, Mr. President, the doctrine of that speech of the Senator from New York is the doctrine upon which we base this bill, and ask the Senate to enact it, that this whole question may be sent to the courts for adjudication, and not as he proposes by an amendment to this bill to eliminate one of the most important features of the whole case. His proposition is an admission itself that the titles he refers to as belonging to the parties he represents are questionable titles; that they need the operation of this amendment of his in order to be ratified and confirmed by the legislative voice of the Government. Now, what we ask is that those questionable titles shall with all others embraced within this grant go to the courts of the United States, where each man and every man with whatever interest shall have the opportunity of a judicial determination of his rights.

Mr. LAPHAM. Mr. President, the position of the honorable Senator from Iowa is an apt illustration of the stress to which the advocates of this bill are reduced when they come to say one word in its advocacy. The remarks of mine which he read were made upon a bill declaring a forfeiture of a railroad grant—a grant where the condition upon which it was made had not been performed by the railroad company, and therefore the title was about to be resumed by the United States. I had occasion to say in the course of my remarks, anticipating that something of that kind might be introduced here, that this bill is not a bill that proposes to forfeit a grant by the Government. There is no such feature in the case. This bill does not assume to act in the exercise of the power of eminent domain on the part of Congress to resume a title to land conditionally disposed of where the condition has been broken. There is no such feature in the case; and what I said in that case with reference to the provision for protecting the interest of bondholders, of lien-holders upon the land, has no application whatever here.

Sir, there is in this bill twice over a declaration by which the honorable Senator insists that these lands are public lands. Why should we declare that——

Mr. WILSON. I can answer the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. LAPHAM. Certainly I will.

Mr. WILSON. It is a declaration of a proposition which we intend to send to the courts of the United States for determination.

Mr. LAPHAM. It will go there without any such declaration in the bill if the United States has any right. Why do they insist upon declaring that the lands which were conveyed twenty-odd years ago to purchasers for value, and which Congress has said shall be confirmed to them, are yet public lands of the United States?

Mr. WILSON. If the Senator will allow me, I might reply by asking why does the Senator ask this proposition to be enacted as a law which is embodied in his amendment if the titles he speaks of were perfect twenty years ago?

Mr. LAPHAM. If there is any objection whatever to those words I will strike them out of the amendment. I do not regard them of any importance, and I will modify the amendment by striking out the last words, that the "titles are hereby declared to be perfect in the grantees." Strike that clause out. All I want is to except these lands from the operation of this bill, which declares them to be public lands, and declares them to be so in the face of the fact that Congress in 1861 expressly divested itself of the title in these lands. That is all I am after. I do not want the declaration contained in this bill, which is applicable probably to a portion of the two hundred and ninety-odd thousand acres that went under the Harvey settlement, the declaration that they are public lands, to apply to the lands that were conveyed to those I represent under the river grant. That is all the object of my amendment. I adopted the language that they are hereby confirmed to the purchasers by following the language contained in the amendment proposed by Senator McDonald, "such titles are hereby ratified and confirmed." I will strike that out; I do not care anything about it.

As I said yesterday, and as I repeat now, there is no declaration which Congress can make which is as serviceable to the purchasers whom I represent here as the ten judgments of the Supreme Court of the United States. It is a judicial question and the judicial tribunals of the country have decided it. It is not a legislative question and the legislative tribunals of the country have no business to deal with it in any form whatever. The moment they undertake to do so, as the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] said yesterday, they trench upon that provision of the Constitution of the United States which declares that private property shall not be taken without due process of law.

"Due process of law" means the judgment of a judicial tribunal and process in pursuance of it. The legislation of this body and of the other House is not due process of law. It will be pronounced, if this bill should ever become a law, a shameful process of law instead of due process of law, and I repeat that the honorable Senator from Iowa would never have been driven to quoting what I said on a railroad forfeiture bill if he had had any ground upon which he could place his feet and stand in security to answer the proposition that was submitted to the Senate in favor of this amendment. He yields the entire point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the Presiding Officer will lay before the Senate the unfinished business of yesterday.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 305) for the relief of Thomas T. Stratton, assignee of W. B. Waldron;

A bill (S. 1251) to authorize the purchase of a wharf for the use of the Government in Wilmington, N. C.;

A bill (S. 1347) for the relief of sufferers by loss of the Government steamer J. Don Cameron;

A bill (S. 1412) authorizing the Secretary of War to adjust and settle the account for arms between the State of South Carolina and the Government of the United States; and

A bill (S. 1839) for the erection of a public building at Chattanooga, Tenn.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 577) to donate a cemetery site on the public lands to the city of Kirwin, in the State of Kansas;

A bill (H. R. 7305) for the relief of Christopher Schaefnocker; and

A bill (H. R. 8179) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes.

FOREIGN-LABOR CONTRACTS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2550) to prohibit the importation and migration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. President——

Mr. BUTLER. I ask the Senator to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. McPHERSON. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. I desire to offer an additional section to the amendment which I had the honor to present yesterday evening, and ask that it be read in connection with the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina offers an additional section to the amendment submitted by him yesterday. The amendment was not offered yesterday, the Chair is informed by the Secretary. The Senator from South Carolina now offers an amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. To the amendment I presented yesterday evening.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the amendment was not formally presented, and therefore it is still practically in the hands of the Senator from South Carolina, and can be treated as an amendment of to-day.

Mr. BUTLER. Very well. Then I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment proposes to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert in lieu of the matter stricken out:

That from and after the passage of this act it shall be unlawful for an alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, coming to this country under a contract or agreement to labor, to land upon the shores of the United States; and any alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, so landing after the passage of this act shall be deemed to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof in any district court of the United States, shall be punished by fine or imprisonment, or both, at the discretion of the court, not to exceed $1,000 fine or twelve months' imprisonment.

SEC. 2. That any person or persons who shall contract with any alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, beyond the limits or jurisdiction of the United States, to labor within said limits or jurisdiction, previous to said alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, becoming citizens or residents of the United States, and shall bring or cause to be brought such laborers within the limits of the United States in pursuance of said contract to labor, shall de deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof in a court of competent jurisdiction, shall be punished by fine or imprisonment, or both, at the discretion of the court, not to exceed $2,000 fine and two years' imprisonment.

SEC. 3. That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to prevent any citizen of any foreign country temporarily residing in the United States, either in private or official capacity, from engaging, under contract or otherwise, persons not residents or citizens of the United States to act as private secretaries, servants, or domestics for such foreigner temporarily residing in the United States as aforesaid; nor shall this act be so construed as to prevent any person or persons, partnership, or corporation from engaging, under contract or agreement, skilled workmen in foreign countries to perform labor in the United States in or upon any new industry not at present established in the United States: Provided, That skilled labor for that purpose can not be otherwise obtained; nor shall the provisions of this act apply to professional actors, lecturers, or singers: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed as prohibiting any individual from assisting any member of his family or any relative to migrate from any foreign country to the United States.

SEC. 4. That all laws or parts of laws conflicting herewith be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. BUTLER. The addition which I have made to my amendment as printed and placed on the desks of Senators this morning is simply the fifth section of the bill, which is made the third section of the substitute I have offered.

Mr. LAPHAM. I desire to give notice that for the purpose of taking the sense of the Senate when we come to vote on this bill I will ask to take out of the third section that portion of it which gives a moiety of the recoveries to the informer. I will put it in shape before we reach the period of closing the bill, and I shall ask the consideration of the Senate upon that proposition.

I also give notice that I will move to strike out the word "singers," in the fifteenth line of section 5, in the proviso which reads:

Provided, That skilled labor for that purpose can not be otherwise obtained; nor shall the provisions of this act apply to professional actors, lecturers, or singers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first amendment proposed by the Senator from New York will necessarily have to be delayed until the bill is in the Senate, the third section having already been adopted by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LAPHAM. Very well; I will prepare it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a substitute.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Mr. President, I do not intend to occupy more than a very few minutes of the time of the Senate in discussing this bill. I shall vote for the bill because of the good it promises, notwithstanding the evil which it contains. I think I am within the limits of fair criticism when I say that the bill as reported to the Senate reflects no credit upon the committee that reported it or upon the Senate, which evidently intends to pass it. I speak of it in its present form. In proof of this I will call the attention of Senators to the third section of the bill. In lines 12 and 13 we find these words:

Including any such alien or foreigner who may be a party to any such contract or agreement, who may choose to bring such suit.

The line immediately preceding confers upon any person the right to recover by suit; and here by express words you make one of the parties to the contract a witness against the other, both being guilty parties under the law. I do not know that there is any legislation standing upon the statute-book of the United States in which the same terms are employed. It is a universal principle, everywhere recognized, that a man who claims equity must do equity; he must come into court with clean hands asking redress for grievances there; but this section proposes to make one of the guilty parties a witness against the other. In effect it offers a premium for blackmail, and it gives one of the guilty parties a standing in court that he would not otherwise have except for this express provision. I do not think such a provision is necessary, because in the former act it is implied at least; even more, it is expressed that any man may appeal to the courts.

I do not believe that there is an intelligent labor organization in this country, or an intelligent laboring man in the country who will not think and see that the result of these words will be to offer a premium for blackmail; and I do not believe that any of them desire such a thing. It is unnecessary; it is uncalled for; and it is not a usual mode and method of legislation.

I am also opposed to the fourth section of the bill for many reasons. The one reason I will give here is this: I believe it is unwisdom to place that section in the bill. Nearly all the advances made to these irresponsible people is made in the way of prepayment or payment of passage-money. In no other way can the advance be properly and safely made. Now, instead of making the steamship company, as you would by eliminating this section of the bill, an ally with those who desire its enforcement you make it an enemy. The section makes the steamship company one of the guilty parties; therefore you can receive no evidence from any of them.

There are other and higher reasons that I could give why this section should be eliminated from the bill, but as the Senate has already made it a part and portion of the bill I shall say nothing about the other reasons.

The bill is intended to prevent the importation of foreign labor by contract, which means cheap labor, pauper labor, and I might add vicious labor, which when brought to this country enters into competition with our laborers here; and our own laborer in the course of time from the result of that competition becomes a tramp, seeking bread from door to door.

There are only two classes in this country who indulge in this kind of practice, the railroad corporations and the manufacturing corporations. That the bill will very greatly interfere with the agricultural interest, as a fear has been expressed by both Senators from Texas, I do not think; but as to the two classes I have named it has been the practice of both the railroad companies and the manufacturing companies to import cheap labor because they deem it profitable to do so.

For many years it has been the practice of the Government by high tariffs to protect the product of labor while at the same time it has maintained free trade in labor itself. This is the Republican party policy. In this way manufacturing enterprises have grown up to gigantic proportions; the smaller and the weaker factories have been driven to the wall, and it is not uncommon to see thousands of laborers in the employ of a single corporation or firm. Combination being more profitable than competition, the manufacturers combine together to fix the price of their product and at the same time to fix the rate of wages. In this way the manufacturer becomes the master of those he employs. A man who gives me employment which I must have or suffer, that man is my master, let me call him what I may; and while we object to the term "master," what is the use of objecting to the term when we have the thing itself? This has grown up into a system under which to-day the laboring man in this country employed by these manufacturing establishments is not given even the untrammeled right to vote. That is the condition of things which the laborers have reason to complain of more than of the importation of the foreign laborer.

A manufacturing establishment runs six months on full time, paying fair wages. At the end of that time, and without cause, in nine cases out of ten, they begin to cry "overproduction; no sales; no market for goods;" and the laboring man is given the poor privilege of working the other six months on half pay or half time or both, or he is told the factory will close up. That is the condition of things. Now will some Senator tell me how much above the pauper wages of Europe is the pay of the laborers in many of our manufacturing establishments—I mean the average that is paid during the entire year? Capital will not take the risk of new products in dull times, but labor is compelled to take it, and so it goes on from year to year, the laborer always the sufferer. If any demonstration of this evil could be found that was more forcible than another, it can be found in the case that happened in this country after the passage of the tariff bill of 1882.

We gave an increase of duty on glassware, I think of more than 10 per cent., and it was given on the plea that the labor employed in that industry was not sufficiently protected. The Congress of the United States increased the duty, and immediately after the bill was passed a demand was made by the manufacturers of glassware for a reduction of 10 per cent. in wages. This continued, and they were shut out for a long time. Not content with this, the manufacturers of glassware, when they had exhausted their own surplus product, imported glassware from abroad and paid the duty, in order that they might continue to lock out their workmen.

These are the things that the laborer should complain of. A tariff is imposed for revenue and that the American laborer may have a fair reward for his labor. I have voted for it with that idea, and I shall continue to vote for a tariff sufficient to protect the wages of American labor, and God forbid that American labor shall ever be deprived of protection; but I do say that when manufacturers combine together for the purpose of oppressing labor and labor trying to pass laws against the importation of foreign labor, it becomes us to see to it that the laborer employed in manufacturing enterprises protected by high tariffs shall receive a part of the protection accorded to the factory.

I have already spoken more than I expected; I do not wish to consume the time of the Senate, as the bill is soon to come to a vote, and the Senator from South Carolina wishes to speak to his amendment. I will not stand in his way.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to ask the Senator from New Jersey a question before he takes his seat.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. McPHERSON. I do.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand the Senator to say that after the passage of the tariff act of 1882 increasing the duty on glassware the manufacturers of glassware reduced the wages of their laborers, and turned them out of the shops, and imported foreign manufactured goods to sell to their customers in the place of our own ware.

Mr. McPHERSON. Yes; and they did worse. First, they imported Belgians to take the place of those shut out. When that did not work, then they imported foreign goods in order to drive their former employés to the hard terms. This bill will at least keep out the Belgians, but will not reach the greater wrong.

Mr. DAWES. I will not consume the time of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr BUTLER. I have no idea of making a speech.

Mr. DAWES. I do not take the floor to submit any views further than I submitted yesterday; but this morning I have received a petition from the gold-beaters of Massachusetts employed in that business with a request that I lay it before the Senate, which I desire to do and have it read. In connection with it they inclose to me a contract made by a Philadelphia firm in London that a man should come here and serve them for some time at a given price fixed by them in London. This seems to have been a printed blank filled in; it is so printed here that the italics indicate what is filled in to fit the case of these men. I ask that it may be read and then let the petition be read.

Mr. BUTLER. I submit we have hardly time to have those papers read.

Mr. DAWES. It will not take long to read the part printed in italics. That is all I ask for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the paper sent up by the Senator from Massachusetts will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

LONDON, June 13, 1881.

Messrs. Hastings & Co., of Philadelphia, and Mr. James Tame do hereby bind themselves to the following agreement:

Messrs. Hastings & Co. on their part agree to employ the said James Tame at gold beating for one year and to pay him the sum of not less than ten dollars ($10) for each week's work of sixty hours during that time.

The said James Tame on his part agrees to work for the said Hastings & Co. for the sum and time named, and he further agrees that he will not associate himself with or in any manner assist any society or combination of men to regulate the rate of wages or manner of conducting the said trade of gold-beating.

Hastings & Co. agree to pay the passage to Philadelphia, and James Tame agrees to repay it at not less than one dollar per week.

HASTINGS & CO.
JAMES TAME.

Mr. BUTLER. Now, may I ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he really and conscientiously thinks there is anything in this bill to prevent the enforcement of that contract?

Mr. DAWES. I had the impression that there was. If it does not reach such contracts as that it does not reach the only ground upon which I support it, as I stated yesterday, and that is the view taken by the gold-beaters themselves in the petition which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What disposition does the Senator desire of the petition he has sent to the desk?

Mr. DAWES. I ask that the petition be received and read without the names.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

We, the undersigned gold-beaters of Massachusetts, suffering from the effects of cheap imported and child labor, introduced into New York and Philadelphia manufactories, to the detriment of skilled American workmen, do hereby petition your honorable body to take action, whereby said foreign and child labor will be excluded from a trade that requires a large amount of intelligence and good judgment. And unless such action is taken, the total exclusion of the intelligent American workman from our workshops is inevitable.

And we pray for an immediate passage of the foreign contract labor bill now before the Senate.

FRANK H. ADAMS and others.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to have the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire for a moment, in order to get an explanation of some of the provisions of this bill which I confess I do not understand. I am in the same position as my friend from Alabama. It is claimed by those who favor this measure that the object is to exclude the pauper labor of foreign countries from the United States coming here under contracts made abroad. That I understand to be the object of the bill.

Mr. BLAIR. Not necessarily pauper labor.

Mr. BUTLER. Well, all contract labor. Then I should like to ask the honorable Senator why it is that section 3 provides for a forfeiture of $1,000, "which may be sued for and recovered by any person, who shall first bring his action therefor, including any such alien or foreigner who may be a party to any such contract or agreement, as debts of like amount are now recovered in the circuit courts of the United States; the one-half or moiety of said sum to be paid to the person bringing suit to recover the same."

That is a civil action, a qui tam action as I understand, for the recovery of $1,000 from the party who violates the previous provisions of this bill. In section 4 provision is made—

That the master of any vessel who shall knowingly bring within the United States on any such vessel, and land, or permit to be landed, from any foreign port or place, any alien laborer, mechanic, or artisan who, previous to embarkation on such vessel, had entered into contract or agreement, parol or special, express or implied, to perform labor or service in the United States, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500 for each and every such alien laborer, mechanic, or artisan so brought as aforesaid, and may also be imprisoned for a term not exceeding six months.

If the honorable Senator will explain to me why he discriminates against the master of a vessel in fixing the penalties of this bill, I shall be greatly obliged to him.

Mr. BLAIR. If the Senator wants an answer, I will make one. In the first place I think it quite immaterial whether there is such a discrimination or not; but there is such a discrimination in the bill as it is brought here. I do not consider it any serious objection; perhaps it is even an excellence in the bill. I can perceive a reason why it should be. The first section criticised, the third section of the bill, provides for a suit for a penalty. It is not precisely a criminal statute, as the Senator understands. The fourth section describes an offense and makes it a misdemeanor which is punishable not alone by fine as in a qui tam action, but also by imprisonment. The thing done in the fourth section is very different from that which is prohibited previously and is punished by the third section. It is an effort to punish a man who might not be responsible and who by reason of his irresponsibility might escape all punishment otherwise, by subjecting him to a fine; the master of a vessel by subjecting him to imprisonment as well as to a fine. The master of a vessel is not so likely to be a man of capital able to respond to a suit for damages or the collection of a fine as the employer or hirer of labor might be, and it was designed to reach him at all events.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask the Senator another question in that connection in pursuance of a suggestion made by the Senator from Alabama? Suppose a railroad corporation or a mining corporation or a manufacturing establishment or any other body of combined capital should employ an irresponsible man, call him John Smith if you please, to go to Germany or France or England or Russia or Sweden or Norway, and John Smith brings to Castle Garden 5,000 laborers, and as soon as they land the superintendent of the railroad corporation proceeds to Castle Garden and makes a contract there with those 5,000 laborers within the jurisdiction and limits of the United States. The only redress as I understand that this bill gives is that John Smith shall forfeit $1,000, but you can not touch the railroad corporation. You bring your action against John Smith and he snaps his fingers in your face and says, "I am not worth two dollars and a half for you to collect."

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator will see that his own amendment seems planned on purpose to let the corporation escape.

Mr. BUTLER. No, sir.

Mr. BLAIR. The bill itself makes the offense the same when it is committed by any person, partnership, company, or corporation who violates the same by assisting, encouraging, or soliciting the prohibited migration, or, as in another section, in any manner whatsoever prepaying the transportation or assisting in or encouraging the importation of the prohibited parties. Now, the case which the Senator puts is that of the principal himself hiding under an irresponsible party. The railroad corporation or the mining corporation sending an agent abroad is itself really the principal, and so is reached under this statute with equal penalties, at least as an accessory, an aider, an abettor, an assister; it is punished the same and punished to the extent of a thousand dollars for each individual thus brought here and thus hired.

Mr. BUTLER. Can there be an accessory to an action, such as is provided for in the third section of this bill?

Mr. BLAIR. It may not be precisely an accessory in the strict technical definition in criminal law, because I believe there are none such in misdemeanors, for there all are principals. I speak of an aider, an assister, an abettor, an incitor, an inducer as descriptive of the thing.

Mr. BUTLER. How are we to reach them?

Mr. BLAIR. By suing the corporation if it is responsible and recovering a thousand dollars a head for each person brought here.

Mr. BUTLER. The corporation has made no contract in violation of the terms of the bill.

Mr. BLAIR. But the corporation has sent the agent abroad to make it; it is the aider, the inducer, the abettor, in fact the prime mover, and so is reached by the bill.

One more difficulty with this bill, permit me to say here, is that those who criticise its phraseology know very little of it. This is a good bill, with a few exceptions that might have been stricken out by any ordinary schoolmaster, it being not exactly grammatical all the way through, but it is a bill that reaches this evil, and it reaches it so closely, ferrets it out so well, punishes it so certainly, and extirpates it so surely, if it becomes a law, that many men are, I think, fighting it by indirection. Now, take the Senator's own amendment which he has offered. It is an amendment open to the objection which he makes to this bill.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like the Senator to point it out.

Mr. BLAIR. I will endeavor to do so when I am done answering questions that may be propounded by the Senator himself.

Mr. BUTLER. I should be very glad indeed to have it pointed out.

Mr. BLAIR. I shall be glad to point it out.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish to know wherein it is liable to the criticism the Senator makes.

Mr. BLAIR. I will take my time to do it.

Mr. BUTLER. Taking the assertion of the advocates of this bill that they are really anxious to prevent what is said to be an evil, it has occurred to me that this bill offered a premium upon its very face for its own violation. The amendment which I have drawn makes it a misdemeanor for the alien or foreigner himself to come. Not only that, but the second section provides that if any person—not a corporation, corporations are represented by persons—if any person representing a corporation makes a contract with any alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, beyond the limits or jurisdiction of the United States, and brings those aliens and foreigners within the limits of the United States in pursuance of that agreement, he is liable on the criminal side of the court, and he is reached in that way; but this bill as it stands reaches nobody. It is and will be found to be whenever the attempt is made to enforce it absolutely inoperative, I predict, and in its operations a sham and a pretense, for the reason I have stated; it has no penalty whatever which can reach anybody and which may not be evaded at any moment. It will be evaded, because a premium is offered in the bill itself for doing so.

It seems to me that this body of legislators before it places a bill upon the statute-book, after a solemn, deliberate discussion such as this has had, should so frame it that it shall at least be clear to some of us who are, I admit, more obtuse than the honorable Senator from New Hampshire and very far inferior to him in legal ability; but inasmuch as we have to vote upon the bill, I submit that it is quite competent that I should make the inquiry, he having charge of the measure, in order that he might explain some defects which as it appears to me exist in it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to offer an amendment, if it is in order, to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina. Probably he will accept it if it is in order, as I presume it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is in order.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I move to amend by adding as an additional section:

SEC. —. That it shall be unlawful for any person, corporation, company, firm, or association of persons to employ, pay for, or accept the services in any business or occupation of any alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, who may emigrate to or come into the United States to perform service or labor without a fixed purpose of acquiring a permanent residence in and becoming citizens of the United States. Every person offending against the provisions of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction in any court of competent jurisdiction shall forfeit and pay a fine of $500.

I understand the professed object of this bill to be to protect American labor. There is no provision in the bill as drawn which in my opinion will operate to the protection of American labor. I understand there are a large number of the operatives in New England, and also in the pine forests of Michigan and Wisconsin, and also a large number of persons engaged in the manufacture of cigars in the Southern States, especially in Florida, and some perhaps engaged in fruit-growing in that section of the country, who come here to labor, not for the purpose of becoming permanent citizens, but simply to operate here as laborers, thus depriving American laborers of the occupations that they otherwise would be entitled to.

It is to meet that condition of affairs that I have offered this amendment. The mill-owners of New England, as I understand, employ Canadians, who come there not for the purpose of residing in New England, not for the purpose of remaining there permanently, and by giving them employment oust the laborers of New England from the factories because they can secure the Canadian laborer cheaper. I think if we are going to protect American labor we ought to adopt some measure that will have that effect. I have offered this amendment making it an offense against the law to give employment or to accept the service of any alien or foreigner who may come to this country, not for the purpose of forming a permanent residence, but simply for the purpose of operating as a laborer, who thus deprives our American laborers of the employment they otherwise would have. I have offered the amendment for that purpose. If the object and purpose of this bill really be to protect American labor, I think the amendment is more efficient for that purpose than any provision in the bill.

Mr. BUTLER. I suggest that the amendment of the Senator from Delaware would properly come in as the third section of my amendment, so as to make the third section offered by me the fourth. If the Senator will permit me I will make that suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware accept the suggestion?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUTLER. As I understand, the amendment of the Senator from Delaware names penalties different from those in my amendment. The first section of the amendment I have offered provides—

That from and after the passage of this act it shall be unlawful for any alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, coming to this country under a contract or agreement to labor, to land upon the shores of the United States; and any alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, so landing after the passage of this act shall be deemed to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof in any district court of the United States, shall be punished by fine or imprisonment, or both, at the discretion of the court, not to exceed $1,000 fine or twelve months' imprisonment.

I ask the Senator from New Hampshire if there is any doubt, if there is any obscurity, about that provision of my amendment? In other words, I should like the Senator from New Hampshire to tell me if there would be any difficulty in a prosecuting officer, a marshal or deputy marshal, being able to enforce that provision of law. It is perfectly clear, perfectly distinct. It is claimed by those who advocate this bill that the sole object of it is to exclude what is called servile foreign labor, labor brought here under contract. If that is the object, then the officer of the law would have no difficulty whatever in laying his hand on any man who violated this provision. There is no ambiguity about it. It is distinct. It has its penalties. Its penalties can be enforced. It seems to me there can be no doubt about that.

The second section provides for one class of persons who would violate law, to wit, the aliens and foreigners. That section reads:

That any person or persons who shall contract with any alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, beyond the limits or jurisdiction of the United States, to labor within said limits or jurisdiction, previous to said alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, becoming citizens or residents of the United States, and shall bring or cause to be brought such laborers within the limits of the United States in pursuance of said contract to labor, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof in a court of competent jurisdiction, shall be punished by fine or imprisonment, or both, at the discretion of the court, not to exceed $2,000 fine and two years' imprisonment.

I should like the Senator from New Hampshire to tell me whether there is any ambiguity about that language. The honorable Senator says it appears to be framed with a view of not fixing responsibility upon corporations and upon manufacturing establishments. Unless I am very much misinformed these corporations and establishments act through agents upon whom the officer of the law would have not the slightest difficulty in laying his hand if they violate it.

So with the amendment of the honorable Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] which I have accepted. It provides a penalty and a punishment for a violation of this proposed law, that is to say, if the object of the bill is to prevent and exclude contract labor. As it is, in my judgment, it is absolutely inoperative and useless for any such purpose.

We have heard so much froth (and I do not say that in any disrespectful sense) about the protection of American labor that it is absolutely getting to be nauseating to me. Protect American labor out of whose pocket we annually wring $85,000,000 in violation of morals! When American labor clamors for recognition by Congress we provide a bureau of labor, as we did last year. I should like to know how many pounds of bread and meat, how much clothing, how much fuel, and how much protection from the weather that Labor Bureau is going to furnish to the American laborer. How much has it furnished? How much will it furnish? The laborers literally ask for bread and we have given them a stone, and we propose to give them another in this bill if it passes.

Mr. SAULSBURY. There is a scorpion in it.

Mr. BUTLER. My friend from Delaware suggests that there is a scorpion in the bill; I think it very likely. My objection to the bill in the shape in which it is as it came from the committee is that it pretends to do something and really and practically does nothing except to throw a sop to Cerberus, to pat the American laborer on the head by giving him a bill which amounts to nothing. Because some Knight of Labor has telegraphed or has petitioned some Senator or Member of Congress, we throw him this taffy to satisfy the clamor of the American laborer, giving him a sham when he wants something real, giving him a bill which has nothing in it, instead of putting back into his pocket the eighty-five millions annually which we take from his pocket, and in that way furnish him employment.

Eighty-five million dollars in ten years would accumulate an enormous sum of money, and yet we are told that we protect the American laborer by taking $85,000,000 annually out of his pocket, and robbing his wife and his children of the necessaries of life in so doing; and when the demand is made upon Congress for relief we come in and with a sham and pretense like this say that that satisfies the demand of the American laborer and protects him against being underbid by imported pauper labor and servile labor, as it has been termed.

If we are going to do that, let us do it. I will go as far as the Senator from New Hampshire or any other Senator in an honest effort to protect American labor from the invasion of pauper or servile labor from China, Hungary, or anywhere else, but I do not intend if I know myself to vote for a measure which will be as inoperative as a blank piece of paper. I will submit to the candid judgment of any lawyer the premium that it offers in its own provisions for a violation of the law. I submit that we have no right as legislators to do that.

Hence it is that in good faith I have presented to the Senator from New Hampshire and those who think with him a measure about which there is no ambiguity or doubt. If there is, and he will point it out, I can assure that Senator I will accept any suggestion of amendment to make the provisions more clear; but I submit that under any fair criticism by any candid lawyer, or by any candid officer of the Government, he would not have the slightest difficulty in enforcing the provision of the amendment which I have offered as a substitute for the bill. I am frank to say, I think it has been improved by the amendment of the honorable Senator from Delaware, about which there is as little ambiguity and doubt; and if the honorable Senator from New Hampshire will go with me in the direction which he has indicated, according to the intention of the committee and those who support the bill, I will take two steps to every one that he takes toward protecting American labor against what is said to be an intrusion by the pauper labor of Europe.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator from South Carolina will pardon me if in listening to his somewhat unaccustomed rôle of the special friend of American labor I feel reminded of the proverb that it is well to beware of the Greeks when they come bearing gifts. I have examined his amendment with a suspicion that he might not be from the very bottom of his soul the most anxious to conserve the purpose of this bill. I am very glad, for I know him to be a sincere gentleman, that he is in earnest; but it would have taken the positive assurances which he has made upon the floor of the Senate to convince me of it. As it is now, I am satisfied that he is sincere, but that he is mistaken in the character of the effort which he has made, and it is not calculated to carry out his real purpose, which is the success of this movement to prevent the introduction of contract labor into this country.

I think that this has been a somewhat unfortunate bill. In the first place it came to us from the House of Representatives, as I know and as the Senate knows, almost unanimously indorsed, without regard to party, from that end of the Capitol——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not in order to refer to the action of the other House.

Mr. BLAIR. I refer to it to compliment it. Is it improper to speak language complimentary of the action of the House?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That would lead to the right of other Senators to speak exactly the reverse of the action of the House of Representatives, and neither is in order.

Mr. BLAIR. That I would object to. But the bill is here. The Senator from South Carolina seems to understand that it originated with the Committee on Education and Labor of the Senate. He must understand that it comes from that committee precisely as it went to it.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator will certainly pardon me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield?

Mr. BLAIR. I hope the Senator will not interrupt me. I have but two minutes more.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire declines to yield and must not be interrupted without his consent.

Mr. BUTLER. I am not asking to interrupt him without his content, if the Chair pleases. I was simply in the act of taking my seat.

Mr. BLAIR. I will yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina is not in order in interrupting the Senator from New Hampshire without his consent.

Mr. BLAIR. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire now yields to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BUTLER. I am very much obliged to the Senator and much obliged to the Chair. I simply wanted to say to the Senator from New Hampshire that I did not state that the bill originated with the Committee on Education and Labor, and I did not state where it originated because I had no right under the rules of the Senate to refer to the place where it originated.

Mr. BLAIR. The RECORD will settle all this. It is unimportant anyway. I was about to say further that the bill having been subjected in the first instance to a variety of verbal criticisms which it survived, it has latterly been subjected to an indefinite number of speeches made against it by those who profess to be and are its friends, and who say to us that they will vote for it. Therefore it becomes unnecessary for me to reply to the elaborate speech of the honorable Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. I am satisfied if he gives his vote for the bill, although he has contrived to speak against it.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield?

Mr. BLAIR. I decline to yield unless I can have unanimous consent to make up the time.

Mr. RANSOM and others. Unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire declines to yield.

Mr. DAWES. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will have unanimous consent.

Mr. BLAIR. Very well, then, I shall have no objection to hearing the Senator from New Jersey.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. For what does the Senator from New Hampshire ask unanimous consent?

Mr. BLAIR. That I may have by unanimous consent all the time of which I am deprived by these interruptions.

Mr. MCPHERSON. The Senator can not have my consent unless he will refrain from misstating facts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey can not interrupt the Senator from New Hampshire without his consent. He declines to be interrupted.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not propose to misstate facts, and the RECORD will show whether I have done so.

The first section of the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina provides for the punishment of this poor, miserable, ignorant, creature, who, not knowing our laws, not knowing the laws of his own country, unacquainted with our language, comes here under contract. How is he to know that he is committing an offense? It is impossible that he should know that he is committing a crime, and it would be a crime against the laws of a foreign country even if he knew the nature of the act which he was committing. Is he then to be taken on his arrival in this country and subjected to a fine not exceeding $1,000, or twelve months' imprisonment? It is not imprisonment less than twelve months, but twelve months at least. An absolute provision is proposed to imprison to the extent of twelve months this poor, ignorant man who is the victim of the shysters and the capitalists who perpetrate this wrong upon him.

Then how are we to enforce our own bill? Where are we to get our power? When the man comes here and is informed of the nature of the transaction to which he has been subjected, of the slavery to which he has been committed, he becomes a witness. We even give him the privilege of suing to recover damages for the wrong which has been perpetrated upon him. If our law proposes to shut him up in prison as soon as he gets here, how are we to obtain our evidence? That provision of itself would render the measure utterly inoperative.

Take the second section of the Senator's amendment. The second section reaches a portion of what is comprised in the second and third sections of the bill itself, but it is more narrow. It does not reach the case where an American contracts with another American who makes his contract with a party abroad—the irresponsible American, the Senator spoke to me about in his supposed case a little while ago. It leaves the way open to contract with an irresponsible American and send him abroad to perpetrate this evil. There are a great many other things I could mention. It does not make the contract itself void. It does not reach the man who knowingly brings the laborer here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair begs leave to inform the Senator from New Hampshire, only as a matter of information, for there is no rule which terminates debate, that the hour of 2 o'clock has arrived.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from New Hampshire may have five minutes, or ten minutes if he desires.

Mr. BLAIR. Five minutes will be sufficient.

Mr. MORGAN. I object unless the privilege is extended all around the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. The Senator from New Hampshire is entitled to the floor. The Chair does not enforce the understandings of the Senate.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not propose to keep the floor in violation of the understanding. I had nothing further to say, except as to the suggestions of the Senator from Delaware and a few more words in reference to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] as modified by him on the suggestion of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

Mr. MORGAN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask that the amendment may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read as modified.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert:

That from and after the passage of this act it shall be unlawful for any alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, coming to this country under a contract or agreement to labor, to land upon the shores of the United States; and any alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, so landing after the passage of this act shall be deemed to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof in any district court of the United States, shall be punished by fine or imprisonment or both, at the discretion of the court, not to exceed $1,000 fine or twelve months' imprisonment.

SEC. 2. That any person or persons who shall contract with any alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, beyond the limits or jurisdiction of the United States, to labor within said limits or jurisdiction, previous to said alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, becoming citizens or residents of the United States, and shall bring or cause to be brought such laborers within the limits of the United States in pursuance of said contract to labor, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof in a court of competent jurisdiction, shall be punished by fine or imprisonment, or both, at the discretion of the court, not to exceed $2,000 fine and two years' imprisonment.

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any person, corporation, company, firm, or association of persons to employ, pay for, or accept the services in any business or occupation of any alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, who may emigrate to or come into the United States to perform service or labor without a fixed purpose of acquiring a permanent residence in and becoming citizens of the United States. Every person offending against the provision of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction in any court of competent jurisdiction shall forfeit and pay a fine of $500.

SEC. 4. That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to prevent any citizen of any foreign country temporarily residing in the United States, either in private or official capacity, from engaging, under contract or otherwise, persons not residents or citizens of the United States to act as private secretaries, servants, or domestics for such foreigner temporarily residing in the United States as aforesaid; nor shall this act be so construed as to prevent any person or persons, partnership, or corporation from engaging, under contract or agreement, skilled workmen in foreign countries to perform labor in the United States in or upon any new industry not at present established in the United States: Provided, That skilled labor for that purpose can not be otherwise obtained; nor shall the provisions of this act apply to professional actors, lecturers, or singers; Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed as prohibiting any individual from assisting any member of his family or any relative to migrate from any foreign country to the United States.

SEC. 5. That all laws or parts of laws conflicting herewith be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLISON (when his name was called). On these questions generally I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD]. I do not know how he would vote on the amendment, and therefore I refrain from voting.

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] on this and all other questions relative to the bill. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. DAWES (when Mr. HOAR'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. HOAR] is paired upon this question with the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE]. My colleague, if here, would vote against the pending amendment.

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I am paired on all questions with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN]. I should vote "yea" if I were not paired.

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. JONES]. Not knowing how he would vote, I refrain from voting on this question.

Mr. RANSOM (when his name was called). I am generally paired with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN]. I do not see his colleague [Mr. CULLOM] on the floor. I do not know how the senior Senator from Illinois, with whom I am paired, would vote on this question, so I shall not vote.

Mr. MCMILLAN (when Mr. SABIN'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. SABIN] is paired on this subject with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA].

Mr. WALKER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER]; otherwise I should vote "yea."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 14, nays 36; as follows:

YEAS—14.

Butler,	Gibson,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Hampton,	Saulsbury,	Williams.
Fair,	Harris,	Slater,
Garland,	Maxey,	Vance,

NAYS—36.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Jonas,	Pike,
Blair,	George,	Lapham,	Platt,
Bowen,	Gorman,	McMillan,	Pugh,
Brown,	Groome,	McPherson,	Sawyer,
Cameron of Wis.,	Harrison,	Mahone,	Sewell,
Conger,	Hawley,	Miller of N. Y.,	Sherman,
Cullom,	Hill,	Mitchell,	Van Wyck,
Dawes,	Ingalls,	Morrill,	Vest,
Edmunds,	Jackson,	Palmer,	Wilson.

ABSENT—26.

Allison,	Coke,	Jones of Nevada,	Plumb,
Bayard,	Colquitt,	Kenna,	Ransom,
Beck,	Dolph,	Lamar,	Riddleberger,
Call,	Farley,	Logan,	Sabin,
Camden,	Hale,	Manderson,	Walker.
Cameron of Pa.,	Hoar,	Miller of Cal.,
Chace,	Jones of Florida,	Pendleton,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to have a verbal amendment made that has escaped my attention until now. In section 2, line 4, I move to strike out the words "doing business within the United States." Those words should be stricken out in order that the bill may include corporations and partnerships abroad as well as in this country.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAPHAM. I gave notice of an amendment to strike out the words "or singers," in section 5, line 15. I think the worst form of tyranny is found in the case of the Italian children who are brought over here and who go about our streets singing, and who are whipped every night when they go home if they do not bring in a certain sum of money. I do not want to have the bill so framed that its prohibition will not apply to that class of cases.

Mr. BLAIR. The clause refers to professional singers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New York will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 5, line 15, it is proposed to strike out the words "or singers;" so as to read:

Nor shall the provisions of this act apply to professional actors or lecturers, nor persons employed strictly as personal or domestic servants.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. LAPHAM. I gave notice of a motion to amend the third section so as to exclude from it the moiety provision, with a view of taking the sense of the Senate upon it. I understood the occupant of the chair at that time to say that I should have to wait until the bill came into the Senate, the Senate having refused to strike out the entire section as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate as in Committee of the Whole having refused to strike out section 3, it will not be in order to strike out any part of it until the bill is reported to the Senate.

Mr. LAPHAM. I shall reserve that amendment until the bill is reported to the Senate.

Mr. PLUMB. In section 5, line 14, after the word "actors," I move to insert the word "artists;" so as to read:

Nor shall the provisions of this act apply to professional actors, artists, lecturers, or singers.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. In section 5, line 14, before the word "professional," I move to insert "artisans;" so as to read:

Nor shall the provisions of this act apply to artisans, professional actors, artists, ecturers, &c.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GROOME. In section 5, line 2, after the word "citizen," I move to insert the words "or subject;" so as to read:

That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to prevent any citizen or subject of any foreign country temporarily residing in the United States, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. LAPHAM. I now offer the amendment to section 3 which I sent to the Secretary's desk. I offer the amendment simply for the purpose of taking the sense of the Senate as to whether the provision relating to moieties shall be retained in the bill. We have in the main abolished all our laws in regard to moieties because we regard them as temptations to perjury.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BLAIR. Just a moment. Of course that is contrary to our understanding that there was to be no further debate. I hope, unless the Senator feels that it is necessary to do that which ought to be permitted to bring out a reply, he will not discuss the amendment. He discussed it when he first suggested the amendment.

Mr. LAPHAM. I do not wish to speak out of order, of course.

Mr. BLAIR. It is not out of order.

Mr. LAPHAM. I have said in substance all I wanted to say. I should like to have the amendment adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New York will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 3, line 12, after the word "recovered," it is proposed to insert the words "by the United States or;" so as to read:

Shall forfeit and pay for every such offense the sum of $1,000, which may be sued for and recovered by the United States or by any person who shall first bring his action therefor, &c.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York. [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like the amendment to be again stated and the section read as it will be if the amendment is put in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again reported. The section will be first read as it now stands, then the amendment, then the section as it would stand if amended.

The Chief Clerk read section 3 of the bill, as follows:

That for every violation of any of the provisions of section 1 of this act the person, partnership, company, or corporation violating the same, by assisting, encouraging, or soliciting the migration or importation of any alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, into the United States, its Territories, or the District of Columbia, to perform labor or service of any kind under contract or agreement, express or implied, parol or special, with such alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, previous to becoming residents or citizens of the United States, shall forfeit and pay for every such offense the sum of $1,000, which may be sued for and recovered by any person who shall first bring his action therefor, including any such alien or foreigner who may be a party to any such contract or agreement, as debts of like amount are now recovered in the circuit courts of the United States; the one-half or moiety of said sum to be paid to the person bringing suit to recover the same, and the remaining half or moiety into the Treasury of the United States; and separate suits may be brought for each alien or foreigner being a party to such contract or agreement aforesaid.

Mr. PLATT. I rise to an inquiry as to the amendment. I understood the Senator from New York to say that he proposed an amendment which related to the moiety clause of the bill. The amendment which has been read does not seem to be such an amendment. I do not understand it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair heard the Senator from New York as the Senator from Connecticut did, but the Chair understood at the desk that the Senator from New York gave notice of two amendments, the first of which is the amendment now reported, which is to be followed by the amendment which the Chair understood him to indicate in regard to moieties.

Mr. LAPHAM. There are two amendments. The first is necessary in order to make the second of any advantage.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator says this is necessary in order to make the next amendment of any advantage. I do not want the section rendered entirely inoperative, and hope the amendment will be rejected.

Mr. ALLISON. Let us hear the amendment read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 3, line 12, after the word "recovered," it is proposed to insert the words "by the United States or;" so as to read:

Which may be sued for and recovered by the United States, or by any person who shall first bring his action therefor.

So that the section when amended will read:

SEC. 3. That for every violation of any of the provisions of section 1 of this act, the person, partnership, company, or corporation violating the same, by assisting, encouraging, or soliciting the migration or importation of any alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, into the United States, its Territories, or the District of Columbia, to perform labor or service of any kind under contract or agreement, express or implied, parol or special, with such alien or aliens, foreigner or foreigners, previous to becoming residents or citizens of the United States, shall forfeit and pay for every such offense the sum of $1,000, which may be sued for and recovered by the United States or by any person who shall first bring his action therefor, including any such alien or foreigner who may be a party to any such contract or agreement, as debts of like amount are now recovered in the circuit courts of the United States; the one-half or moiety of said sum to be paid to the person bringing suit to recover the same, and the remaining half or moiety into the Treasury of the United States; and separate suits may be brought for each alien or foreigner being a party to such contract or agreement aforesaid.

Mr. LAPHAM. Now, if the Secretary will read the second amendment I offered, the Senate will see precisely how the section will read if the amendments are adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the Secretary will report the amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from New York following the one now pending.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 3, line 16, after the word "States," strike out all down to and including the word "moiety," in line 18, as follows:

The one-half or moiety of said sum to be paid to the person bringing suit to recover the same, and the remaining half or moiety—

And insert:

The proceeds to be paid.

So as to read:

Who shall first bring his action therefor, including any such alien or foreigner who may be a party to any such contract or agreement, as debts of like amount are now recovered in the circuit court of the United States, the proceeds to be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The last amendment has been read for information. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York which was first read.

Mr. CALL. Let the amendment be read again.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 3, line 12, after the word "recovered," insert "by the United States or;" so as to read:

Which may be sued for and recovered by the United States or by any person who shall first bring his action therefor.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator from New York says it is part of the next amendment.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 25, noes 14.

Mr. BLAIR. I think this is a vital matter, and I ask for the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PLUMB. I am rather inclined to vote for the amendment unless some statement can be made here showing that it would in any way impair the efficiency of the bill. It seems to me on the first blush that it makes the bill better, that it multiplies the opportunities for prosecutions for a violation of the terms of the bill.

Mr. MORGAN. I insist on the rule, or else that there shall be free debate.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to have the Senator from New Hampshire who has charge of the bill state his objection to the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. Is debate in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is in order. The Chair has no power to enforce the understandings of the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. We have an understanding, however.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is an understanding, but the Chair has no power under the rules to enforce an understanding.

Mr. BLAIR. It seems a little hard that the understanding can be enforced against the bill, and is violated whenever the bill is attacked. I am going to live up to the understanding, but I would as lief the bill should be beaten now as that this sort of thing should be continued in this way, as I know about the bill and I know where it will reach.

Mr. ALLISON. That is debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. Not knowing how he would vote, I shall not vote.

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. JONES].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. DAWES. I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. HOAR] is paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] upon the bill and amendments. I do not know how my colleague would vote on this amendment. Has the Senator from Texas any knowledge on that point?

Mr. COKE. I have already announced the pair, I will state to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. CALL. I am requested by my colleague [Mr. JONES, of Florida] to announce his pair with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] and to state that he is detained from the Senate by illness.

The result was announced—yeas 39, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—39.

Bayard,	Edmunds,	Hawley,	Morrill,
Brown,	Fair,	Hill,	Palmer,
Butler,	Frye,	Ingalls,	Plumb,
Call,	Garland,	Jonas,	Pugh,
Camden,	Gibson,	Kenna,	Saulsbury,
Chace,	Groome,	Lapham,	Slater,
Cockrell,	Hale,	McMillan,	Vest,
Conger,	Hampton,	Maxey,	Voorhees,
Cullom,	Harris,	Mitchell,	Williams.
Dolph,	Harrison,	Morgan,

NAYS—16.

Allison,	George,	Miller of N. Y.,	Sawyer,
Blair,	Jackson,	Pike,	Sewell,
Cameron of Wis.,	Lamar,	Platt,	Vance.
Dawes,	McPherson,	Sabin,	Van Wyck.

ABSENT—21.

Aldrich,	Farley,	Mahone,	Sherman,
Beck,	Gorman,	Manderson,	Walker,
Bowen,	Hoar,	Miller of Cal.,	Wilson.
Cameron of Pa.,	Jones of Florida,	Pendleton,
Coke,	Jones of Nevada,	Ransom,
Colquitt,	Logan,	Riddleberger,

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAPHAM. I now ask consideration of the other amendment which I have sent to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 3, line 16, after the word "States," it is proposed to strike out the words—

The one-half or moiety of said sum to be paid to the person bringing suit to recover the same, and the remaining half or moiety.

And to insert—

The proceeds to be paid.

So as to read:

Shall forfeit and pay for every such offense the sum of $1,000, which may be sued for and recovered by the United States or by any person who shall first bring his action therefor, including any such alien or foreigner who may be a party to any such contract or agreement, as debts of like amount are now recovered in the circuit courts of the United States, the proceeds to be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COKE (when Mr. HOAR'S name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] who is temporarily absent. Not knowing how he would vote upon this amendment, I shall refrain from voting.

Mr. WALKER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 39, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—39.

Allison,	Cullom,	Hawley,	Palmer,
Bayard,	Dolph,	Ingalls,	Pendleton,
Beck,	Frye,	Jonas,	Ransom,
Brown,	Garland,	Kenna,	Saulsbury,
Butler,	Gibson,	Lapham,	Sawyer,
Call,	Groome,	McMillan,	Slater,
Camden,	Hale,	Maxey,	Vest,
Chace,	Hampton,	Mitchell,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Morgan,	Williams.
Conger,	Harrison,	Morrill,

NAYS—15.

Blair,	Jackson,	Platt,	Sewell,
Cameron of Wis.,	Lamar,	Plumb,	Vance,
Edmunds,	McPherson,	Pugh,	Van Wyck.
George,	Miller of N. Y.,	Sabin,

ABSENT—22.

Aldrich,	Fair,	Jones of Nevada,	Riddleberger,
Bowen,	Farley,	Logan,	Sherman,
Cameron of Pa.,	Gorman,	Mahone,	Walker,
Coke,	Hill,	Manderson,	Wilson.
Colquitt,	Hoar,	Miller of Cal.,
Dawes,	Jones of Florida,	Pike,

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. I move to amend section 3 as it now stands, limiting all rights of action to the United States, but imposing no duty upon the United States to prosecute the action——

Mr. MCMILLAN. No; it does not limit it to the United States.

Mr. BLAIR. Well, practically. I move to add to section 3:

And it shall be the duty of the district attorney of the proper district to prosecute every such suit at the expense of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. MORGAN. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired on this question with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. RANSOM (when his name was called). I think from the vote of my friend from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] I should probably vote against his colleague [Mr. LOGAN], if he were here. I shall not vote. I should vote "nay," if the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] were present.

The result was announced—yeas 43, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—43.

Aldrich,	Edmunds,	Kenna,	Platt,
Allison,	Frye,	Lamar,	Plumb,
Blair,	George,	Lapham,	Pugh,
Butler,	Gibson,	McMillan,	Sabin,
Call,	Hale,	McPherson,	Sawyer,
Camden,	Harrison,	Miller of Cal.,	Sewell,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hawley,	Miller of N. Y.,	Sherman,
Chace,	Hill,	Mitchell,	Van Wyck,
Conger,	Ingalls,	Morrill,	Vest,
Cullom,	Jackson,	Palmer,	Wilson.
Dolph,	Jonas,	Pike,

NAYS—15.

Bayard,	Garland,	Maxey,	Vance,
Beck,	Groome,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Brown,	Hampton,	Pendleton,	Williams.
Fair,	Harris,	Saulsbury,

ABSENT—18.

Bowen,	Dawes,	Jones of Nevada,	Riddleberger,
Cameron of Pa.,	Farley,	Logan,	Slater,
Cockrell,	Gorman,	Mahone,	Walker.
Coke,	Hoar,	Manderson,
Colquitt,	Jones of Florida,	Ransom,

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GROOME. In section 2, line 7, the words "of any kind," after the word "person," seem to have no place. I therefore move to strike them out; so as to read:

Or having reference to the performance of service or labor by any person in the United States, its Territories, or the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to have a verbal transposition made of the words "service or labor" in the sixth line of the second section, so as to read "labor or service." That would be altogether more poetic, while the other phrase savors rather of blank verse.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire, in section 2, line 6, to strike out the words "service or labor" and to insert the words "labor or service;" so as to read:

Or having reference to the performance of labor or service by any person in the United States, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. In section 3, line 3, after the word "by," I move to strike out the words "assisting, encouraging, or soliciting the migration or" and to insert the word "the;" so as to read:

For every violation of any of the provisions of section 1 of this act, the person, partnership, company, or corporation violating the same by the importation of any alien or aliens, &c.

The words I move to strike out do not describe any offense so definitely as to justify the punishment of a person by a fine of a thousand dollars. The fact as to what will constitute encouraging or soliciting migration is too indefinite for an act that imposes a penalty of a thousand dollars.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HAWLEY. Remarks are not in order, so I simply make a motion to refer the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary with instructions to report not later than the 20th instant a bill that shall more effectually reach the ends aimed at.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut moves that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary with instructions to report not later than the 20th instant a bill effectuating the purposes provided for in the bill as amended. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The question being put, a division was called for, and the ayes were 17.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HAWLEY. My exact language was "that shall more effectually reach the ends aimed at."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will send to the Chair his language. The motion of the Senator from Connecticut will be read when it is reduced to writing.

The motion having been reduced to writing, the Chief Clerk read as follows:

That the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary with instructions to report not later than the 20th instant a bill that shall more effectually reach the ends really aimed at.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. RANSOM (when his name was called). If the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN], with whom I am paired, were here, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MANDERSON. But for my pair with the Senator from Florida [Mr. JONES] I should vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 41; as follows:

YEAS—15.

Bayard,	Groome,	Hawley,	Saulsbury,
Butler,	Hale,	Maxey,	Vance,
Garland,	Hampton,	Morgan,	Williams.
Gibson,	Harris,	Pendleton,

NAYS—41.

Aldrich,	Edmunds,	Lapham,	Sabin,
Blair,	Frye,	McMillan,	Sawyer,
Bowen,	George,	McPherson,	Sewell,
Brown,	Gorman,	Miller of Cal.,	Sherman,
Call,	Harrison,	Miller of N. Y.,	Van Wyck,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hill,	Mitchell,	Vest,
Chace,	Ingalls,	Morrill,	Voorhees,
Conger,	Jackson,	Palmer,	Wilson.
Cullom,	Jonas,	Platt,
Dawes,	Jones of Nevada,	Plumb,
Dolph,	Kenna,	Pugh,

ABSENT—20.

Allison,	Coke,	Jones of Florida,	Pike,
Beck,	Colquitt,	Lamar,	Ransom,
Camden,	Fair,	Logan,	Riddleberger,
Cameron of Pa.,	Farley,	Mahone,	Slater,
Cockrell,	Hoar,	Manderson,	Walker.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is, Shall the amendments be engrossed and the bill be read a third time?

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill having been read three times the question is, Shall it pass?

Mr. BLAIR. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired on this bill with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. DAWES (when Mr. HOAR'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. HOAR] is paired upon this bill with the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE]. If my colleague were here, he would vote "yea."

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. JONES]. If he were here, I should vote for the bill.

Mr. WALKER (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER]. Believing that he would vote in the affirmative, as I would, I therefore vote. I vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. RANSOM. I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN], but I am informed by his colleague that he would vote "yea." I vote "yea."

Mr. MITCHELL. My colleague [Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania] has been absent some days on account of illness. He is paired with the Senator from California [Mr. FARLEY]. If he were present, I have no doubt my colleague would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 50, nays 9; as follows:

YEAS—50.

Aldrich,	Fair,	Lamar,	Pugh,
Allison,	Frye,	Lapham,	Ransom,
Blair,	George,	McMillan,	Sabin,

SELMA, ROME AND DALTON LAND GRANT.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I rise to submit a privileged report from the Committee on Public Lands, and I desire to explain that I do not send a copy of any bill to be read, as is usual in such cases, for the reason that the matter to which this report relates is embodied in some half-dozen bills, and there are also other matters embraced in the bills. It is an adverse report relating to the Selma, Rome and Dalton land grant, and it covers the bills H. R. 179, 182, 292, 7686, and 188, so far as they relate to said grant.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What does the gentleman desire done?

Mr. OATES. I desire that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the matter reported upon as embraced in those bills, that the bills be laid on the table, and that the report be ordered printed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is so ordered.

RUPERT G. HILL.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I stated yesterday evening that the Committee on Military Affairs, upon erroneous information, had made a favorable report in the case of Rupert G. Hill, and asked that it should be withdrawn. It should also have been stated that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that together with the report it should be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs. It should be shown that the bill and report were recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.
